ECKENER URGES JOINT U. S. AND GERMAN DRIVE BY DIRIGIBLE FOR THE NORTH POLE IN THE SPRING

BERLIN, July 15.—America today was asked to join Germany in a dirigible expedition to the North Pole, each country to fly its own giant airship, but with the two keeping constant touch and assisting and supplementing each other.

The invitatino was extended by Dr. Hugo Eckener, pilot in its trans-Atlantic delivery of the naval dirigible Los Angeles.

In answer to a question as to the size of the Polar dirigible, Dr. Eckener said:

"If, as I believe, America will fill the gas bag with helium, it should be between 120,000 and 130,000 cubic meters capacity, while the German vessel, filled with hydrogen should be between 100,000 and 110,000 cubic meters in size."

He would leave the details of construction and co-operation to those in charge of the trip.

Both airships must be equipped to land in water and ice, which he thinks, could be done with complete safety. He believes exploring groups could be left on the ice and later picked up by the airships.

STOCKHOLM, Sweden, July 15.—Parties of Swedish workers have been formed to travel in the Soviet Union and study its structure. The Esthonian government has refused a group of 300 workers permission to travel thru Reval enroute to Moscow.

New Red Trail Is Blazed for Workers' Rule from Moscow to Peking, China

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

TODAY, Soviet aviators rest their scarlet-bannered planes in Peking, seat of the government of North China. They have brought them successfully thousands of miles over mountains, fertile fields and arid deserts, over broad lakes and rivers from Soviet Moscow.

It took them a month to make the trip. They were in no hurry. They stopped off occasionally to receive the welcome of the countryside thu which they passed. Their main business was to survey an air route thru Siberia and across the Gobi desert to China. The ministries of war and marine of the Chinese government sent delegates to welcome them as they neared their oriental goal.

This will no doubt prove new cause for hysterical utterances in the House of Commons at London, and in the chambers of deputies at Paris and Rome. It might also in the congress at Washington, if it were in session. But where congress fails, Secretary of State Kellogg makes up in his scurryings from Washington to the summer white house at Swampscott, Mass. For the Union of Soviet Republics is cementing new and inseparable ties with restless China.

The four airplanes that sailed the skies from Moscow to Peking are but harbingers of the great fleets to come, that will bring closer labor in Europe and Asia.

• • • •

Take the flight from Peking to Dayton, Tenn., and in the city of the anti-evolution trial you will find "Scrutator," the writer of the Chicago Tribune, turning out copy to the effect that, "the fight between science and obscurantism has been a matter of establishing better communications between men, provinces and nations."

This writer argues that all is well with the world, in spite of Bryan and ultra-fanatics in religion, because Indian trails and arduous roads along river courses are being superseded by macadam highways for fast automobiles. It is urged that everything favors "highspeed civilization" as against "oxcart culture."

• • • •

But the Chicago Tribune specialist treads on dangerous reasoning. It has not helped the mountaineers of Tennessee much to come up off the Indian trail onto an auto speedway. One of the members of the Scopes jury can neither read nor write. The coal fields of Tennessee, like those of Kentucky to the north and Alabama to the south, are unorganized, furnishing non-union coal to scab on the union coal in the northern states, thus beating down the standard of living, in spite of all capitalism's "highspeed civilization."

All the intricate machinery contrived by modern inventive genius has been, or is being introduced into China, to be used in exploiting the Chinese workers. The industrial slavery thus imposed has been so degrading that the Chinese have joined in militant protest against all their oppressors.

• • • •

It is not enough that new things should come into the world, the radio instead of the old family almanac, the smooth-surfaced highway instead of the Indian trail, the huge industrial machine in place of the small hand tools. Something else must happen before the masses can benefit. The masses must be the masters. They must dominate their own destiny. They must own the industrial machine instead of being owned by it.

That is the message that the scarlet-bannered airplanes coming down out of the sky upon Peking brought to the Chinese working masses from Red Moscow. It was the message of human liberation that is dangerous to those who believe in, defend and fight for human degradation under the wages system.

The night airmail that flies between Chicago and New York, carrying the stocks and bonds, the correspondence of robber business, everything in aid of bigger profits, means little to the American workers and poor farmers, except that it oils the machinery of plunder that is taking the wealth they produce.

But the airlane along which the Soviet planes fly from Moscow to Peking is one of the roads that leads from the proletarian victory today of the Russian masses to the world proletarian victory of the morrow; one of the roads that progresses toward the new civilization—toward Communism.

British Coal Miners Reject Wage Cut and the Longer Workday

Traitors Cannot Stop Miners

Strong influence of yellow socialists and union reactionaries were brought to bear upon the miners to get them to accept the government's proposed court of inquiry or to meet the terms of the owners, but these influences were unavailing.

In officially announcing its decision the federation said it would inform the government it could not accept another court of inquiry "having for its object the ascertainment of whether miners' wages shall be reduced or their hours extended." The announcement added that the federation would meet the ownesr in open conference as soon as the owners should withdraw their proposals for lower wages or longer hours.

General Council Supports

The gravest of crises may soon grip the British isles, as the great body of organized labor in England is supporting the coal miners. The general council of the Trade Union Congress has pledged its full support—which means more than the empty words of similar officials in the American Federation of Labor.

Also, Friday will see a conference of the "Big Five" unions involving the greatest forces in the British movement, including the railwaymen, transport workers, engineers, miners and general workers. Last month a fighting alliance proposed by the miners was defeated by the yellow socialists, and the employers of all the world crowed over the "rejection of the reds" by British labor. Whether their joy is to be short lived or not may soon be determined.

In any event a coal miners strike, seriously threatening British capitalism with dire consequences, may come at the end of July when the differences may turn into strike.

SCOTT MUST HANG ON SON'S BIRTHDAY IS RULING OF STATE

Russell Scott must hang on Friday, as the result of a ruling handed down at Springfield by the division of paroles and pardons, denying the plea of Scott's attorney, Leslie Whelan, and Catherine Scott, the doomed man's wife, for executive clemency.

Scott, who is now in the county jail here, will be hanged on the birthday of his nine-year old son, Robert. His lawyers asked that the sentence be commuted to life imprisonment on the ground that the evidence against Scott was not convincing. Scott was convicted of killing a drug store clerk in a loop robbery.

FOELL GETS JOB AS INJUNCTION JUDGE IN STRIKE

Hearing in Struggle of Amalgamated Today

when it comes to injunctions against unions.

When the I. L. G. W. was on strike, Sullivan had the petitions of the boses for injunction. But he became so notoriously an injunction making machine for the bosses, that he turned the I. L. G. W. over to Judge Foell, who promptly issued any and all injunctions asked for.

Mass Violation in the Offing.

Sullivan and Foell are as close as Siamese twins on anti-union injunctions. So the strikers can tighten up their belts and hitch up their trousers—the men, of course—for a mass violation of the inevitable order against "certain kinds" of picketing.

If the present spirit is sustained—and it ought to be—the strikers will win against all these things. An instance of the fighting blood of the pickets occurred when yesterday morning Mrs. Frank Cicala was arrested because she and some other women decided that the date between a slugger and a scab on the corner was an unlawful assembly so far as the union was concerned and endeavored to convince them of it.

Nothing Beats the A. C. W. Strikers.

At the strike meeting, the enthusiasm of the strikers was unabated, even by Manager Levin's speech, which started out reasonably well, but which wandered around and finally found itself in some talk about "My country 'tis of thee." But not even bum speeches, the hot weather, the sluggers, the cops or the United Garment scabs can squelch the strikers and defeat their strike.

The strikers feel assured that not only the whole Amalgamated and particularly their New York brothers and sisters who are fighting the same battle a thousand miles away against the same boss for the same union, support them, but that the members of organized labor in general, and its most active militants of the Trade Union Educational League, are stirring the labor movement to an understanding that the fight of the A. C. W. against the open shop here is a fight in which all must be interested, and concerned.

There can be no talk hereafter about the interests of the New York members being of no concern to the members in Chicago, nor any attempt on the part of bosses or anyone else to divide the workers by shops and tell each shop's workers they should ignore the interests and conditions of those in other shops.

Working Class Unity Leading Issue.

The strikers against the open shop I. T. C. and J. L. Taylor companies are getting a first class lesson in class struggle, learning that the interests of workers and employers are always opposed, that the interests of workers everywhere and at all times are their interests and that they should concern themselves with the well-being and the trials of the whole working class.

Victory Comes Only By Struggle.

And they are learning that great fact, sometimes forgotten or neglected by even some union members and officials, that only by organized mass struggle against the employing class can the workers gain better conditions, or even keep what they have had.

DAUGHERTY BOASTS OF HIS ATTACK ON LABOR WHILE IN THE CABINET

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 15—In a leter to the Ohio Bar Association former Attorney General Harry Daugherty boasts of "two oustanding acts" of the department of justice during his stay in office.

"First the securing of the injunction in the shopcrafts railroad strike for which my impeachment was demanded by radicals and reds. Second, my refusal to turn over to an unauthorized, Red-controlled, so-called investigation committee of the United States senate the confidential files of the government."

BANKERS FORM COSSACK FORCE AGAINST WORKER

Minnesota "Rangers" Armed With Shot-Guns

(Special to The Daily Worker.)

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., July 15—During the past 12 years, the master class of Minnesota has persistently sought to have the Minnesota state legislature pass a state cossack law. It failed every time in its efforts.

The farmers as well as the workers, always offered the stiffest opposition to the passage of the cossack bill.

Broke Up Farmers' Meetings.

At the time when the non-partisan league was a militant organization, the farmers of this state obtained a good taste of the brutal methods of the home guards.

Their meetings were broken up, and active members were brutalized in the most inhuman fashion. Intimidation was rampart. Czarism paled into a tame thing compared to these infamous home guards. Consequently, the farmers of Minnesota, who are among the most progressive in America, are bitterly opposed to the cossack idea.

Their representatives in the legislature dare not support that iron heel measure.

Bankers Organize Cossack Army.

The bankers have, therefore, decided to organize a state cossack army. At the annual convention of the Minnesota State Bankers Ass'n., held at Duluth organization units of the "Minnesota County Rangers" were authorized. It is planned to organize three thousand members, F. P. Fellows, secretary of the association, declared.

"Robber" Camouflage.

The ostensible aim of this cossack band, is to chase bank robbers and hold-up men. This is the customary camouflage that goes with the outfit, a product of the hypocrisy of the babbitry. Of course, it would not do to be honest and straight forward in the matter.

But every farmer and worker, who is conscious of the struggle against the domination of capitalism, knows full well that the first and major task of these so-called "County Rangers," will be the suppression of the rise of the farmers and workers, toward the sunlight of economic freedom.

Every farmer and worker of the state, who has taken an active part in the class war upon the master class, knows that the organization of "rangers" by the bankers, is the definite outcome of their fight for a state cossack law, in the last 12 years.

What the legislature would not do for them, they have undertaken to do for themselves.

Armed with Shot Guns.

Under the plan, all "rangers" will be sworn in as deputy sheriffs and will be armed with sawed-off shot guns and revolvers. Thus, if the bankers want to play at rabbits with the farmers, they can use the shot gun; otherwise, the revolvers may be resorted to. Its a mighty polite civilization, this thing called capitalism.

The farmers and workers of Minnesota are now face to face with a state cossack army. The problem of effective assistance to this fascist gang will very soon be the order o the day for the progressive movements of Minnesota.

UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT BACKS SLAVERY IN AFRICA—REPUDIATES PROFESSOR'S EXPOSURE TO LEAGUE

WASHINGTON, July 15.—The state department has advised the league of nations that it cannot vouch for the competency of Prof. Edward Ross of the University of Wisconsin, who charged that slavery existed in the colonies of Portugal in Africa. Ross' complaint was made direct to the league. The state department today informed the league that Ross did not represent the United States government.

Bryan Helps Hide Capitalist Crimes

complacent faith in a mythical paradise. As a result of these jolts and jars their minds will begin to see the light of day and the real world they live in.

Religion O. K.'s Slavery.

From their sluggishness and smuggishness will arise a revolting attitude towards the ignorant and primitive lives they are now forced to live because of the mythical chains of christianity that enslave them.

And it is due time that they do revolt against the crimes committed by the christian church, for it is the historical truth that christianity has always O. K.'ed the slavery and wars brought about by the rulers and masters of the enslaved masses. No wonder is it that Bryan is repeatedly praising the ignorant for woe to him if the masses saw thru his trickery and hypocrisy!

The old fairy tale about the poor inheriting the heavens and the rich going to hell is still being preached by Bryan, yet Mr. Bryan is still going wild in his chase for the dollar. By his preaching of bunk to the masses he has amassed not a small fortune.

Christianity Aids Capitalism

A hungry worker can have faith in the bible, but he cannot study science. Therefore so long as modern christianity holds sway over the masses, so long as the Bryans can hypnotize the masses to look towards heaven for their salvation, so long will they remain the victims of the idle plutocrats. But when the masses will revolt and unchain themselves from the ravings of religious fanatics and thus look for their betterment here and now the days of wage-slavery will be numbered.

It is therefore quiet obvious that the capitalists are drunk with joy when they can get the legislatures to pass laws barring the teaching of evolution, and at the same time make bible reading in the public schools compulsory. For no matter how rotten the conditions under which the workers toil, and regardless of the starvation wages they receive, the worker who is dominated by the Bryans will always look to heaven for better conditions and for a better day.

Such religiously dominated wage-slaves will always be too blind to demand a higher wage, a shorter working day and better working conditions. Such workers never compose the militant working class who fight for the end of wage slavery.

Would Spread Bigotry

Because of these cold facts the ruling class is anxious for more ignorant and bigoted legislatures to pass such anti-evolution laws as the one under fire in Tennessee. At present several more states are considering enacting similar slave laws, and compel the children of the working class to become imbued with religious bigotry.

With the passing of such legislation we have further indubitable proof that the teachers and professors are not free and dignified and independent (as some budding school worms seem to think) but are simply the mouth-pieces fo the present capitalist and religious domineering classes who rule America today.

Teacher A Wage Slave

The teacher is a wage slave and belongs in the same class with the worker in the mill, factory, and mine. And the sooner he realize it the sooner will he fight for an organization that will fight his battles for higher wages, lower hours and more freedom in the class room, as the trade unions fight for the industrial workers.

Schools Run For Big Business

Upton Sinclair has produced conclusive evidence in his "Goose-Step" and "Goslings" to convince anyone that the schools and colleges are run for the interests of big business. As Dr. Tilasey, district superintendent of the public schools of New York City says: "I do not know any school system in the United States which is run for the benefit of the children. They are all run for the benefit of the gang." And the "gang" is none other than the predatory interests that rule supreme both government and industry.

Children Turned Out By Yard

The schools of this country are run like factories; the children are the raw material and are turned out like biscuits and bolts, completely standardized. The rulers of imperial America hire the teachers for this job of molding your children so that they will make good docile wage slaves. The more reactionary the teacher the better can he repress and suppress the individualism and freedom inherent in your child. The teacher tainted with the least liberalism or radicalism is hounded and spied upon like a thief or traitor.

"We must please the business man, otherwise they will not vote the bonds to keep our schools going," says the Los Angeles superintended of schools. Thus is it true thruout the country. The schools are here to inculcate the children's minds with propaganda of the vilest brand. "My country right or wrong" is the leading motto that is upheld in our public schools.

Perpetual Profit System

As Nicholas Murray Butler, chief-master of Columbia University says: The schools must teach that "the duty of one generation is to pass on to the next, unimpaired, the institutions it has inherited from its forbears." In other words what has been and is now is perfect.

Teachers Must Organize

It thus becomes apparent that the teacher must organize into powerful unions if he is desirious of bettering his present measely "salary" and ridding his profession of the cowardice and timidity that is so typical of his profession. He must revolt and demand that his dignity and conscience and liberty and independence be upheld and reckoned with. He must also revolt against the routine and tedious and nerve-wrecking work he is now forced to perform after school hours.

Only in organization can these things become real. For at present the teacher is the docile tool of the orthodox social, religious and economic views that are in sway today. The Scopes trial proves this fact beyond doubt.

NEGROES FIGHT DISCRIMINATION AGAINST HOMES

Demand Right to Live Where They Please

WASHINGTON, July 15.—(FP)—Negro families are attempting to find better homes in every section of the country. Their efforts to find suitable places to live make a stirring story, according to Arthur E. Hungerford of the Federal Council of churches. In some cities where they have moved into neighborhoods tenanted by white residents their new homes have been set on fire and in others they have been bombed.

"One of the most surprising incidents in the record, "says the report by the commission of race relations," is of a white congregation singing "Onward Christian Soldiers" marching to the home of a highly educated Negro who was engaged in important educational work. The leader of the band handed the home-owner a written demand to leave the neighborhood and waited for his reply. The owner said he would remain where he was. The crowd left, but special police protection was needed for some time before the family felt safe in their home.

The Negroes have suffered more from the housing shortage than white persons and are seeking to improve their health and living conditions by leaving alleys and undesirable districs to which they have generally been forced to confine themselves. Negroes have not been permitted to remain unmolested in their own homes. Hoodlums have been permitted to break windows and destroy shrubbery.

Frame-up Artists of California Capitalism Spurned by New Ones

(Worker Correspondent)

LOS ANGELES, July 15.—Oaks, former chief of police of Los Angeles, is pleading for help and protesting against neglect. Still a member of the police force, he wishes to be pensioned off, but his desires are ignored. His complaints are directed against Heath, present chief of police, who was opposed to Oaks' peculiar methods while in power.

Obedient to the mandarins, Oaks, as chief of police, made a record for frame-up work. Men, suspected of being I. W. W.'s, etc., were brought to him by policemen, warned by him to leave town within 24 hours or be framed (he minced no words) and, in cases of failure to leave, were in short time tried on trumped-up charges, convicted on perjured evidence and sentenced to 1 to 14 years (meaning 14 years) in state prison.

The victims, still imprisoned, are haunted with memories of the spectre of ruthlessness and fraud. But few others remember him.

As soon as he was forced out of police command he was stricken with an incurable ailmen. That is why he strives to be retired and pensioned. Oaks may resign but may not be pensioned. That is to be seen.

Curiously enough, Fickert, former district attorney of San Francisco, who supervised the frame-up of Mooney and Billings, became paralyzed shortly after he was forced out of office. His affliction is similar to the case of Oaks. As his victims vanished behind prison walls, Fickert passed into oblivion as far as the public was concerned.

"LEST WE FORGET" THE VICTIMS OF CAPITALISM AND KLUXERISM OF THE BOURGEOIS DICTATORSHIP

By FRAPIESA.

LOS ANGELES, July 15.—One full year has passed since the San Pedro outrage was committed. The Los Angeles authorities have nothing to show that any punishment has been meted out to the guilty.

Here are the facts: Some working class folks, supposed to have leanings toward socialism, were holding an entertainment in a small hall at San Pedro. There were men, women and children present. Coffee and sandwiches were served. It was a private affair.

American Labor Atrocities.

Suddenly the doors were broken open. Many men, including some in United States navy uniforms, rushed in. They attacked the members of the sociable party and drove men and women into the streets. Having possession of the hall, they demolished furniture.

Upon three children, a boy seven years old and two girls, nine and ten, they upset a boiler of hot coffee, crippling one and disfiguring all three for life.

They carried furniture and stationery into the street, made a pile and fired it. Everything portable in the hall was destroyed.

At that time H. E. Haldeman was recruiting sailors of the United States war vessels off San Pedro as members of the ku klux klan. This man is head of the Los Angeles K. K. K. and is son of H. M. Haldeman, president of the Better America Federation.

August Vollmer, chief of police of Los Angeles, publicly announced that if the perpetrators of the outrage were not caught and punished, law and order would be jeopardized. A few weeks later he resigned.

Nothing Has Been Done.

Nothing has since been done to bring the offenders to justice. Apparently, in the view of Los Angeles leaders, the crime was not a blot on the record of the city, but rather a feat to be preserved in history.

All indications are that the "men in U. S. naval uniforms" were sailors from the war vessels and under K. K. K. orders and that the outrage was committed by votaries of the klan and federation. It could hardly be expected that they would be bothered by the authorities.

EXECUTIVE OF GERMAN COMMUNISTS REPORTS ON DAWES PLAN FIGHT

BERLIN, Germany, July 15.—The central executive committee of the German Communist Party reported to the party's national congress that masses of workers had been mobilized during the past year to fight against the Dawes plan which aims to oppress the German workers.

Another campaign which received great response was the rallying of the masses to fight the exploitation of the German imperialists who are attempting to regain their pre-war power by forming an alliance with the British capitalistic government.

Military Training Exposed by Y.W.L.; Mass Meeting July 21

Twenty-five thousand leaflets exposing the Citizens Military Training Camps for what they are, are being distributed by the members of the Young Workers League at the largest shops in Chicago, particularly those shops which are directly supporting the C. M. T. C. camps and which are sending their "selected few" workers to the camps with full pay.

Resolutions are being brought up in the unions protesting against these Citizen's Military Training Camps and a big protest mass meeting is being called for Tuesday, July the 21st, at 8 p. m. at the Northwest Hall, corner North Ave. and Western Ave.

All workers who realize the purpose and see the danger of these Citizen's Military Training Camps for the workers of this country are urged to assist to their fullest extent this activity of the Young Workers League.

TOKIO, July 15.—Heavy floods in central and south Korea have submerged 16,000 homes, and a number were killed, it is reported.

HANDS OFF CHINA MEETING HELD IN SPITE OF POLICE

Philadelphia Audience Show They're Awake

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., July 15.—Over 300 workers gathered at Randolph and Girard Ave. at the open air Hands Off China demonstration held in this city under the auspices of the Workers Party and the Young Workers League. Comrade Baker, secretary of the Workers Party, was the chairman and Comrades Oliver Carlson and Harry Wicks were the speakers.

During Comrade Wicks' speech the police came around and demanded that the meeting be stopped. He gave illness in a nearby house as the reason. The entire meeting crossed the street in a body. But as soon as the meeting got under way the police interfered again, this time on the flimsy pretext that the permit did not hold good for that corner. The committee in charge insisted on the right to hold the meeting. The police became rough, pulled Wicks off the platform and told him he was under arrest.

Audience Demanded Speaker

The audience as one man surged into the police and demanded that the speaker be immediately released, threatening to exercise their rights as citizens against the police who were disrupting a peaceful meeting.

The militant attitude of the workers transformed the police into a couple of lambs and they mumbled something about orders and said the meeting would be permitted a few corners away.

By this time a tremendous gathering of workers (this is a working class district) collected around the meeting and the committee seeing an opportunity to turn the meeting into a parade decided to move the meeting a few blocks away. Wicks announced that the meeting would move and requested the audience to form in line and parade in a body to the new location. This was received with wild outbursts of cheers. The entire audience now consisting of over [illegible] workers proceeded to parade up Girard Ave. cheering and singing.

Meeting Undisturbed

The third phase of the great demonstration was opened amid much cheering. Comrade Wicks proceeded with his speech which was received with much appreciation and enthusiasm by the tremendous gathering. The chairman then adjourned the finest open air meeting ever held in Philadelphia with repeated cheers for the Workers Party, the Young Workers League and for the Communist International from the audience.

Coolidge Commission Rules in Favor of the Tobacco Trust

WASHINGTON, July 15.—(FP)—The result of President Coolidge's ukase against any further investigation of "Big Business" was again seen in the announcement from the federal trade commission that it has dismissed ten complaints in connection with price fixing of tobacco. The companies against whom the complaints were lodged were, American Tobacco Co., Milwaukee Tobacco jobbers, Chattanooga Tobacco jobbers; Kansas City, Pittsburg and Erie Pa. jobbers and others in Wilkes Barre, Columbus, West Virginia, New England and Pacific Coast states.

French Bankers Plot New War with Aid of Socialists

arrested because of their opposition to the capitalistic Moroccan war, after Comrade Zinoviev's speech.

The speech follows:

By GREGORY ZINOVIEV.

Comrades: In certain parts of the world events are now developing which constitute, altho for the time being on a relatively small scale, the precursors of those great upheavals which will undoubtedly take place on a huge scale in the future. One of these is the war in Morocco. In Morocco there is proceeding a typical colonial war which affects only two of the great powers. But in this struggle there are to be seen, as the sun in a drop of water, the outlines of great events which await humanity in the next few years.

In one of his writings just before his death, Comrade Lenin stated that, in about the years 1925 or 1928 a new great world war was to be expected which would cost humanity five to ten times more victims than the war of 1914 tho 1918.

Socialists Again for Robber War.

The events which we are now observing show that this prediction is undoubtedly proving correct. In fact the French Republic, in which the mensheviki who defeated Poincare are in power, a government which calls itself a democratic and a left government, the government of the left bloc, is now carrying on a typical colonial war of plunder and robbery against a little people. One would have expected, after the lessons which the workers of the whole world received in the war of 1914-1918, that even the party of the mensheviki would have shown in this whole affair at least some vestige of shame. Meantime, the whole tragedy of the situation consists in the fact that in the year 1925 the French party of the mensheviki, who constitute a considerable power in France, have the brazenness to repeat word for word that which international menshevism declared at the beginning of the war in the year 1914. The same deception, the same speeches regarding "defending the fatherland," the same false phrases and in reality the same help for the bourgeoisie of their own country.

Imperialism vs. Riffians.

If in the war of 1914 the state of affairs, at least at the commencement, was somewhat confused, if at that time it was not at once quite clear who was the aggressor and what was the question at stake, if at that time there was a tangle of complicated relations, in the present affair in Morocco everything is perfectly clear. Here there can be no two different opinions regarding the causes and the character of the war. On the one side there is a small people, on the other side a great imperialist power, which is attacking a weaker country and is twisting a fresh knot of international conflicts thru which it will be exceedingly difficult to cut. And if in the war of 1914 one still spoke of defending civilization and democracy from the attacks of Russian czarism and such like, we have before us now a perfectly naked example of open robbery. Here no mention whatever is made of defending "culture," of rescuing Europe from czarism and the Cossacks. Here the only fact is that French imperialism is lusting for conquests; it is endeavoring to wrest from a small people, the Riff Kabyles, fresh stretches of territory.

"Democracy" Attacks Colonial Workers.

And therefore, in the summer of 1925, after the victory of the left bloc over Poincare, after the victory of so-called democracy, which has introduced a new era of pacifism, etc., the French bourgeoisie sends its troops to Morocco and begins a new war.

Within the last few days the most prominent representatives of the French parties have, in the press and in parliament, expressed their opinion regarding the events in Morocco. Renaudel states: "With what means does the government hope to end the military operations and to restore peace in Morocco? Right from the first commencement of the occupation of Morocco the socialist party pointed out the danger.

"Who is responsible for the present conflict? We have been attacked (just fancy, France has been atacked!) but who has provoked this attack? My criticism does not give you the right to believe that we are defeatists. The socialist party does not by any means demand the avacuation of Morocco (!) but it will not agree to a war for the sake of fame, a war in which the flower of the manhood of France would perish."

Socialists Support Employers.

Renaudel asks, what is the number of the French troops in Morocco and what losses has France suffered there. He states that the hospitals of Casablanca are overcrowded with wounded and that there will soon be no place for further wounded. Renaudel further states that he is pleased to hear the declaration of Painleve, that as soon as the French have won back their former positions they will cease military operations. Finally, he has found the most important argument against the war: "It is a question of the interests of France. Now, when in France there is a shortage of workers, we shall not agree to fresh victims in Morocco."

Jouhaux Fights Internationalism.

If there were no lack of workers, then the evil would only be half so great, then the hospitals could be filled with fresh wounded. But as (just think) there exists no unemployment in France, but on the contrary a lack of workers, the representatives of the French mensheviki will not agree to permit fresh victims. That is the attitude of the representative of the French "socialist" party. Is this fellow not a traitor, a social chauvinist?

No less interesting is the attitude of Jouhaux. Jouhaux is the president of the French menshevist trade unions, even tho he calls himself a syndicalist. The syndicalists at one time constituted a left wing element, but since the beginning of the war of 1914 they have, just as the mensheviki, gone right over to the side of the bourgeoisie. Before all Jouhaux is overflowing with criticism. Against whom, do you think? The imperialists? Oh no. The Communists! "The so-called internationalism of the leaders of Third International is, in fact, only an appeal to the narrowest nationalism. The workers do not support it, in the same way as they are not minded to follow those who wish to extend an adventure and those who dream of fresh conquests. The workers of our country pronounce themselves against any extension of military operations which would have as their aim, to penetrate to the Spanish zone." (Le Peuple of May 23, 1925.)

As you know, a struggle is proceeding in Morocco between the Riff people on the one side, the Spanish bourgeoisie on the other side and the French bourgeoisie on the third side. When the war between the Riff Kabyles and the Spaniards had come to complete standstill, the representative of the left bloc, Malvy, a member of parliament, who had been sent to Spain, endeavored to kindle the war afresh.

Now, when a bold word requires to be spoken against the capitalist plunderers who have attacked a small people and who are prepared to kindle a new European war for the sake of their predatory interests, the so-called representatives of the proletariat, the French mensheviki, attack the Third International and issue the slogan: "We don't want any extension of military operations which would have as their aim to penetrate to the Spanish Zone."

Ten years have passed since the outbreak of the first world war. In this war the imperialists sacrificed ten million human lives. One of the greatest sufferers was France, where today there is hardly a village which has been able to maintain anything approaching an appropriate proportion between the number of the male and female population. As a result of the first imperialist war, the French village has been devastated and destroyed. And now, at the very first attempt of the capitalists to inaugurate fresh slaughter, these mensheviki literally repeat what they said in the year 1914. You have here a sample of what the Second International would do tomorrow if a new war were to break out. From this example it is quite clear that the bourgeoisie and the social democracy now represent one camp as regards main questions, and that one cannot vanquish the bourgeoisie without having to defeat the treacherous leaders of Second International.

New Liebknechts Arise.

But the Morocco war has served at the same time as a certain testing of those new forces which have grown up in the past few years. When the war of 1914 broke out, in France, in the first period, there was hardly a single man who ventured to oppose it. The first protests in France against the war were made in the year 1915. And then people came forward with a confused and vague program. In Germany at that time Liebknecht stood alone in his opposition to the war. The events in France have shown that should the bourgeoisie now attempt to resort to a fresh war, we would not see one but thousands and thousands of Liebknechts in all the prominent countries of Europe. (Applause.)

I am happy to be able to say that the Communist Party of France, a party which has grown strong in the last few years, has in this matter proved itself a party worthy of the Communist International.

There have been found people in this party who succeeded in the French parliament in flinging a protest, full of contempt and indignation, in the face of the bourgeoisie, as well as of their lackeys in the menshevist camp. Especially worthy of note is the fact that, in the name of the Communist Party, a young comrade came forward, who only recently emerged from the ranks of the Young Communist League, a typical representative of the new generation of revolutionary leaders, Comrade Doriot, (applause) who delivered a splendid speech in parliament. After the speech of Comrade Doriot, the Central organ of the Communist Party of Germany quite rightly published an article under the title: "Liebknecht lives;" yes, he lives in the new generation of workers!

Greetings to Red Prisoners.

The attitude of Comrade Doriot is, so to speak, a small example of how the new forces which are ripening among the working masses would speak and act if events should develop and the bourgeoisie decide to kindle a new imperialist war on a large scale. French democracy, supported by the mensheviki, has carried out hundreds of arrests thruout the whole country. Communist workers who post up bills and leflets against the war are being arrested, fresh proceedings are being brot against them. It would be a good thing if we were to send from this meeting brotherly greetings to all who have been arrested on account of the fight against war. (Applause.)

FRISCO UNIONS VOTE SUPPORT TO CHINA LABOR

Demand No Troops Be Used Against Strike

By JAMES H. DOLSEN,
(Worker Correspondent)

SAN FRANCISCO, July 15.— That even the most conservative workers will rally to the aid of their oppressed brothers and sisters in other nations when the situation is explained to them seems evident in the response already received by the unionist guild of this city from the appeal sent by it to the trade unions of this state for a protest against the action of our government in its intervention in China. The appeal was reprinted in the July 1 issue of the Worker.

Even prior to the circulation of this appeal by the guild, which is a Chinese working class organization, a resolution demanding the withdrawal of American troops had been introduced into the local labor council by delegates from the Waiters' Union. The resolution was promptly referred to the council's law and legislative committee, the burial ground for most progressive measures.

A Surprise.

To everyone's surprise, the committee, however, reported out at the next week's session a substitute resolution, which, while toning down all direct criticism of the government (how the labor skates love their "dear" Uncle Sam!), nevertheless did call for a policy of non-interference in China.

It is rumored that an editorial on the situation in the Orient, appearing in the Labor Clarion, the organ of the local council, was directly filched by its editor from the New York Nation and published by him as his own. To prevent the exposure of his plagiarism on the floor of the central labor body, the editor, according to this account, agreed not to oppose a resolution on the subject.

Other Bodies Follow Council.

It has thus come about that the San Francisco Labor Council, reactionary as it is, has thus taken the lead on this particular issue. Almost equally surprising has been the fact that shortly afterwards the Building Trades Council of this city went on record in support of the resolution sent it by the unionist guild.

This resolution was couched in much stronger terms than that adopted by the Labor Council, for it distinctly based its demand fro the withdrawal of American troops from China on the ground that the workers of all nations have a common interest which binds them in international unity against their employers.

Local Unions Favor "Hands Off China."

This same resolution has been adopted also by the following local unions todate: Painters No. 19 and No. 1158; Tailors No. 80, Cooks No. 44, Amalgamated Clothing Workers No. 266, Lithographers No. 17, Barbers No. 148, Capmakers No. 9, Machinists No. 48, Cigarmakers No. 228, Shipyard Laborers No. 520, Carpenters No. 483, Dredgemakers No. 898, Molders No. 164, Millmens No. 42, and Retail Clerks No. 47.

A few days ago the Contra Costa County Labor Council passed the resolution unanimously. The rest of the unions of the state are being circularized and it is expected an overwhelming majority will place themselves definitely on record.

The hole agitation affords a most excellent means of awakening the international consciousness of the American working class and arousing its militant spirit. It should, however, be impressed on all members in the unions that they should seek not merely to place their union on record against our interference in China but should take the opportunity of explaining the class basis of the struggle there, using all such ossasions to intensify the class consciuoness of the members.

Unorganized Labor of San Pedro Hurt

LOS ANGELES, July 15—Tuna canning operations are increasing at San Pedro and Long Beach and trouble between the packers and fishermen is brewing. Year after year there is strife which ends by the toilers of the sea getting the worst of the bargain. Cannery operatives have similar experience.

Canneries and fisheries employ 8,000 persons. When tuna is not in season sardines are handled. Employment eight months of the year, approximately, is assured. With a Marine Transport Workers Union established at San Pedro organization of cannery operatives and fishermen should follow. The big stick of the ku klux klan is the main adverse factor. It is mostly bluff.—Frapless.

ADVERTISEMENT OF SCAB MINES PROVES NON-UNION CONDITIONS NO HEAVEN, SAY PROGRESSIVES

By ALEX REID
(Secretary of the Progressive Miners' Committee)

The wail of the officers of the Union Mine Workers of America who are continually bellowing about the difficulties encountered in attempting to organise the Kentucky miners, as an excuse to cover up their treachery and inefficiency, are answered by a desperate appeal for scabs by the Kentucky Coal operators in far off Texas.

The appeal itself is proof of the Progressive Miners' committee's statement that the miners in Kentucky and West Virginia not only desire organization but shows also that it is becoming impracticable to operate the mines with the present set of inexperienced men, and further proves that all that is required is a proper organizational drive.

A Weapon Against Non-Union Talk

The exposition of the prices and conditions in the appeal for scabs carry a tale that gives to every miner in the country a weapon to crush non-union sentiment.

The quotation of figures of prices and working conditions are misleading to the uninitiated, but even if true, it shows a deplorable condition in the Kentucky field.

Heading their advertisement is the following: "No gas. Open carbide lamps used. Coal 4½ feet thick with 45 cents per ton for pick mining. In the center of this coal is a slate 18 to 20 inches thick."

Note that the coal is but 3 feet thick when the slate is taken out.

The miners will notice the difference in wages in Kentucky and the union field. Pick mining in Illinois, for instance, is a seam 8 to 10 feet high is paid at the rate of $1.04 per ton. "In the Kentucky field," the advertisement states, "The miners lay their own track." In the union mines, the track is laid by tracklayers who are paid at the rate of $7.50 per eight hours day.

Proof of Progressive Committee's Statements

Thruout the advertisement carried at the Texas labor agencies, a complete proof of all the Progressive Miners' committee has said is evident. The shacks are rented for $10.00 per month, so the ads states, with board for single men at $40.00 per month.

The ad also claims the mines are non-union, never have any trouble, and have never been known to strike. Miners furnish their own powder, and are given broom to brush up slate before shooting down the coal, which is all true, and carries a tale of woe to experienced miners.

"No Trouble" At All.

The miners are certainly non-union when such starvation prices and rotton working conditions are permitted. "No trouble." "Never known to strike"—that is true. Any individual who refuses to meekly submit is instantly discharged, and escorted from the camp in the loving care of company gunmen and drunken thugs.

The miners pay for their own powder. If they have anything left they go to the coal company moving picture show. The coal company owns the town, in fact it owns the very life of the undreground slaves.

Tribute is paid to the coal companies in the form of rent, "pluck me" and "grab all" stores. Also belonging to the coal companies the doctors, lawyers and preachers, likewise in the pay of the black diamond operators are sheriffs and thugs and the poor miners are the victims.

Wise Ones Stay Away

Is it any wonder the barons of Kentucky have to go away to Texas to advertise for miners? Not at all, because the men surrounding that unhappy field know of the awful conditions existing there and refuse as far as possible to stay outside it.

Kentucky miners arriving in Texas explained to Texas miners the awful conditions, unfolding a tale of hardships and persecution that will work well against Kentucky operators' propaganda.

They further state the U. M. W. of A. officials would have no trouble to organize those men should they go in there with a militant campaign and determination to win.

The Progressive Miners have continuously pointed out that the miners in Kentucky and West Virginia demand organization, and the same can be accomplished, if desired, by the officials of the U. M. W. of A.

Let them lead a campaign in that field, go right into it with an army of organizers and fight for the union instead of leading a bunch of lawyers in court rooms, and success will crown the effort.

Miners are not organized in Kentucky law courts.

OAKLAND SHOWS UNITED FRONT TO AID CHINA

Unites Workers of All Races

OAKLAND, Cal., July 15.—The first meeting ever held in this city at which Chinese, Japanese, and American speakers spoke from the same platform, was held here Sunday and drew a crowded house. A pleasantly surprising feature was the large number of Chinese workers who attended and their close attention to the Communist exploitation of Chinese events.

Clarence Tobey, of the English branch acted as chairman. Miss Alice Sum, president of the Unionist Guild and Cham Sut Yeu, secretary of the guild and editor of Kung Sing, a Chinese labor paper, presented the situation from the Chinese standpoint. Their interpretation of the part which the movement in that country plays in relation to the world-wide labor struggle showed their study of Marxian economics.

The solidarity of Japanese labor with their struggling brothers of China was eloquently told by a young Japanese student, Kenotsu, and interpreted by Shiji Matsui, of Berkeley.

Comrade Dolsen very clearly presented in English the Communist position toward the Chinese situation and brought out how closely related were the interests of workers of all countries.

A resolution calling for the removal of American troops and war ships from China was introduced and passed unanimously. Copies were sent to the president of the U. S. A. and to the California congressmen. The resolution is the same that was passed recently by a number of labor unions in the Bay district.

A collection of $37.81 was taken, which, after expenses are deducted, ese relief. Nearly ten dollars' worth will leave a substantial sum for Chin of literature was sold and a new member obtained for the party.

Oakland Communists are quite pleased with the successful meeting and are following it up with street meetings every Tuesday night, 7:30 p. m., at 10th and Broadway.

WORKERS' CONQUEST OF THE FILM!

A Pamphlet by Willi Muenzenberg, International Secretary, International Workers' Aid.

Summarized by WILLIAM F. KRUSE.

An excellent pamphlet of 28 pages of text and 16 pages of pictures gives the most detailed study yet attempted of the experiences of the Communist movement in the field of film propaganda, and opens new vistas for its extension to even the far corners of the earth. The writer, Willi Muenzenberg, has had a broader experience in this new field of activity than any other man in the international movement, and his deep basis in other branches of Communist work—youth, politics, relief, etc.—guarantees against any narrow conception of the work.

THE film is a new power which in some countries has already achieved greater significance than the press itself. The medium of the visual image influences its patrons far more strongly and persuasively than does the printed word its readers, and even numerically those reached by the cinema bid fair to outstrip those who read the daily papers.

As was the case with many other weapons of struggle, the workers were the last to take up the film and seek to put the new medium to their own use. It is not so long ago that social-democratic leaders, in common with other bourgeois ideologists, opposed the films on the ground of their competition with the stage, their flattering of "public taste" and destruction of literary standards. Only after the war were timid and ineffectual attempts made ot put the film to labor's use. In 1922 the A. D. G. B. (all German Federation of Trade Unions) tried without much success to produce and show socialistic working class pictures. In the main the labor organizations, and even the Communist parties and organizations have left this most effective means of propaganda and agitation unopposedly in the hands of their enemy, which fully exploited them with nationalist and monarchist propaganda.

THE German film industry reflects clearly the general political trend. During the mounting wave of the monarchist movement which culminted openly in the election of Hindenburg there was a deluge of monarchist and nationalist films.

It would be interesting to determine, statistically, in how many theaters, during the few weeks prior to the presidential bye-election, such propaganda films were shown. The film is extensively used by our enemy to create prejudice against Soviet Russia, as for example the picture "Todesreigen," which shamelessly concots a wholely fanciful and invented tale of atrocities of the Soviet government against the Russian workers. This was shown for months and spread its poison everywhere. In some industrial centers, notably in Leipsig, the class-conscious workers became so enraged that they smashed the projectors and burned up the films.

Such protest, while entirely understandable, is ineffective. It recalls the infancy of capitalism when the artisans, feeling their livelihood threatened by the new machines, destroyed them. Not machine breaking, but machine conquest and turning to the service of the labor movement, is needed. One of the most important tasks confronting Communist parties on the field of agitation and propoganda is the conquest of this supremely effective propaganda weapon, until now the monopoly of the ruling class, we must wrest it from them and turn it against them.

Picture and Film in the Revolutionary Movement

The printed and spoken word are well known in our propaganda arsenal. But not so long ago the use of the picture was utterly unknown in daily, youth paper, woman's paper, book, phamphlet or anywhere. Fortunately this has been improved during the past two years, altho still in limited extent.

In Germany alone our enemy controls hundreds of illustrated papers, in Berlin we see daily numerous papers with special pictorial supplements. The picture is most tellingly effective in reaching the mind of the child, the youth, the great mass of primitively thinking, unorganized, indifferent workers and peasants—the very element we must win. Right in the factory the illustrated paper is far easier to sell to the indifferent worker. By means of post cards, photo-collections, and similar means also the picture should be used to popularize the leading figures in the labor world as against the hero worship of the bourgeois military idols. Lantern slides also make possible the presentation of our message in most plastic and convincing form.

While a start, altho a humble one, has been made on all the forgoing fields, practically nothing has been done to put the film into our arsenal of agitation and propaganda weapons. Very correctly the enlarged executive of the Communist International, in March, 1925, called attention to this shortcoming, and instructed all affiliated to concern themselves much more than formerly in turning this weapon to their service. It is well known that Lenin held that "...of all the arts the motion picture is for us the most important." And that Zinoviev said: "The motion picture in the hands of the bourgeoisie is their strongest means for fooling and misleading the masses. In our hands it can and must become a mighty weapon of Communist propaganda and mass enlightenment."

Of the great masses that day in and day out fill the picture theaters, eighty to ninety per cent are workers. To make available the film as a means of winning their support for us is one of the most pressing tasks of our movement. We can expose the social-democratic traitors, we can gibbet the militarists. And, speaking positively, we can present the aims and struggles of the Communist movement and the revolutionary workers' organizations. A film showing the life of a young worker, beaten and mistreated in school, coming into contact with the Communist Youth movement, finding in it a champion and joining its ranks and its activity—such a film would exert great suggestive power on thousands of juveniles and bring them closer to our movement. Similarly the experience of an adult worker, going from country to country and finding everywhere the same exploitation of capitalism in a thousand forms, showing the international scope of the class struggle and the need of the fighting organization of the workers, the Communist International.

Of course we realize that colossal censorship and economic difficulties stand in the way. But much ground would be gained if every Communist Party were now equipped to show the workers of its country a monthly news film of the latest occurrences in Soviet Russia. There must no longer be any country in which the Communists do not make extensive propagandist use of the motion picture.

SOVIET GRAIN CROP BETTER THAN EXPECTED

Demand for Modern Farm Machinery

MOSCOW—(By Mail)—On the 25th of June the Narkomsem (department of agriculture) of the Ukrainian Socialist Soviet Republic had the following information from the Central Bureau of Statistics:

The crop in Ukraina is estimated at 925,000,000 poods (pood 36.1 American pounds.) The amount of crop intended for export has increased from 240 to 275 million poods. Ukraina will export 40 per cent of the total grain exports of the U. S. S. R.

The seeded area of this year will be 5.5 per cent greater than in 1924 and will be equal to 87 per cent of that of 1916. The conditions of the harvest is as follows. Winter rye—3.2; winter wheat—2.8; spring wheat—3.1; oats—3.3.

According to the new budget of the Narkomsem the salary of agricultural inspectors, agriculturalists, and other workers in the field will be increased by 78 per cent. This season the department is expecting a profit of 81,000,000 rubles. In 1924 the profit amounted to 70,000,000 rubles. Most of the increased profit has been due to the increase in forest products.

In connection with the good results of the harvest a big demand for agricultural machineries is expected, especially for tractors. In many provinces the demand is already larger than the co-operative and state organizations can supply.

Increase of Non-Grain Products. The following increases of non-grain products of this season of 1924 are given out by Narkomsem: Corn, 826,900 desiatins—increase 22.4 per cent. Peas and lentils, 846,100 desiatins—decrease 0, per cent. Potatoes, 2,001,000 desiatins—increase 6.2 per cent. Flax, 1,096,000 desiatins—increase 17.7 per cent. Hemp, 574,800 desiatins—increase 13.2 per cent. Sun-flower, 1,536,900 desiatins—increase 12.8 per cent. Grass, 1,206,900 desiatins—increase 31.8 per cent. Others, 765,100 desiatins—increase 2 per cent.

Improvement in Transporation. The handling of the season crops this year will be greatly facilitated. It will be possible to load 20,000 cars per day, which is 25 per cent more than was possible in 1924. This is the equivalent of 80 per cent of the pre-war loading rate.

Sugar Beet Crop. During the present season approximately 440,000 desiatins (desiatin 2.7 acres) of sugar beets were planted. It is estimated that each desiatin will produce about 750 poods of beet. Thus the new crop should yield 49,000,000 poods of sugar.

According to Narkomsem the peasants of the European port of the R. S. F. S. R. were given the use of 12,200,000 desiatins of forest lands By the end of the present year this area will have been extended to 13,000,000 desiatins.

Depots for Agricultural Machinery. In pre-war days Russia had 1,800 depots from which agricultural machinery was distributed to the peasantry. The present number of depots under the Soviet government amounts to 440. During the present year this number will be augmented to 1,200, and it is expected that during the next year 600 more will be opened, thus bringing the number of depots to the pre-war figures.

STATE CLAMPS DOWN ON BUSES, FOR EXPRESS CO.

Didn't Secure Permit Commission Rules

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., July 15.— The Illinois commerce commission today referred to the attorney general for further action on the complaint of the American Railway Express company, that the National transit company of Chicago, has operated motor trucks for transportation of freight between Chicago and 83 communities within a radius of 114 miles without a certificate of convenience and necessity.

The commission upon a hearing held that the National Transit company has been operating without the required certificate as provided by the Illinois Public Utilities law.

Altho the attorney general has not announced his plans with regard to this case the usual procedure is to file a petition for an injunction probably in the circuit court of Cook county to restrain the truck company from continuing in business. The trucks are still running.

Los Angeles Fakers Feel Ground Swells

LOS ANGELES, July 15—The American Federation of Labor of Los Angeles is experiencing disturbances resembling recent California earthquakes. L. M. Lipsett, who was president of the Building Trades Council, has been shaken out. J. M. Byrne, for many years editor of Citizen, has resigned and gone to Sacramento. As Lipsett led the secession of the building council from the general council and Byrne opposed the secession bitterly, honors are even as to the two factions.

But more seismic upheavals are coming. The cause of the workers of Los Angeles has been betrayed and sold so flagrantly that sweeping readjustments must be made. Complete changes of personnel are called for.

SURPRESSION OF SCIENCE GOES HAND IN HAND WITH OPPRESSION OF WORKERS IN BACKWARD SOUTH

DAYTON, Tenn., July 15—The natives of this Southern town are bible-crazed. All over the town are seen large posters "Read Your Bible"—especially to the ladies do the preachers give their attention in trying to rescue their souls. The town is literally flooded with preachers, evangelists, and other blinders of the masses.

"Don't throw away your bibles before you learn what is in them," yells the evangelist, Mr. Nelson, who hails from Chicago. This town is overcrowded with its home-made Jesus mongers, and Bryan & Co. have imported others.

Negro Is Oppressed.

The 100 per centers of Genesis are filed with fear that perchance this Scopes evolution trial will produce a little intelligence and civilization that is sorely lacking here. Hence their hearts flutter at thot of the scientists coming here to assist the defense. They fear the scientists as they fear the devil.

Talk about progressive America! These parts of the South are nearly as ignorant, illiterate, and backward as in the days of Negro slavery. The fact is that the Negro down here is still looked upon as an inferior being. In the street cars and busses the Negro must take his seat in the back of these public conveyances. In the North he is a wage-slave; here he is both a wage-slave and a social slave.

That little modern knowledge is to be found in this dark, dismal, backward, provincial town was brot out when the jury was being selected. All the jurors selected are steady church attendants and stauch readers and believers of every fairy tale and superstition that fills the pages of the bible. Most of them never read anything else and some are entirely illiterate and ignorant of the world they live in.

Afraid of Scientists.

Yes, Bill Bryan and his gang of morons are over-filled with fear and anxiety over the fact that the defense attorneys led by Darrow and Malone will bring in a host of scientists to prove that evolution is a proven science, not a dream. Not only is it feared that the scientists will destroy some of the myth laden minds of this town, but the elders of the church who are consciously or unconsciously, directly or indirectly aligned with the rulers of our imperialistic government and capitalist owned industries wil find that with a knowledge of modern science goes a revolt at modern economic society.

Thomas H. Huxley, the acute, yet cautious scientist and follower and expounder of the Darwinian theory of evolution showed in his day that science is in harmony and leads the people towards industrial freedom and against industrial slavery and capitalist dominance.

He showed an example of this when he, himself, turned his energy for the ending of the present economic system of society. Thus did he make his views clear: "Under capitalism there is a a condition in which food, warmth, and clothing which are necessary for the mere maintenance of the functions of the body in their normal state, cannot be obtained; in which men, women, and children are forced to crowd into dens where decency is abolished, and the most ordinary conditions of healthful existence are impossible of attainment; in which the pains accumulate at compound interest in the shape of starvation, disease, stunted development, and moral degradation; in which the prospect of even steady and honest industry is a life of unsuccessful battling with hunger, rounded out by a pauper's grave . . . (Bold face mine.) When the organization of society, instead of mitigating this tendency, tends to continue and intensify it, when a given social order plainly makes for evil and not for good, men naturally enuf begin to think it high time to try a fresh experiment . . ."

Thus spoke the Scientist Huxley and thus spoke Alfred R. Wallace co-worker with Darwin in the discovery of the evolutionary theory. Here we learn that Huxley, the exponent of evolution, looks upon capitalism as a cause of poverty and degredation, and hence calls upon the workers and thinking people to put an end to this disgrace and hell that capitalism and its religious-crased henchmen have brot upon the producers of wealth and their wives and children.

The cold and bitter experiences of the thinking wage-slaves of the United States has proven to them that capitalism is a crime and a destroyer of all that is good and noble in man, and that it is high time to abolish this crime and instead bring forward a system of society that will make for the economic and social betterment of the working and producing class, and destroy the capitalist parasites, and the religious parasites.

Idiotic Judge.

Judge Raulston, who presides at the trial and who with fan in hand fans himself while he stands with a broad puritanical and idiotic smile on his face—and chews (gum) and trys to talk at the same time, seems to stand in awe of Mr. Darrow, the defense attorney, as the latter speaks. More than once the judge has shown his fear when side-stepping the local rules of trials in deference to Darrow. However, this does not mean that he is not prejudiced against scientific truth. The opening of the trial with a prayer by a 100 per cent fundamentalist displayed all the prejudice that is needed to prove that a real hearing for science will be sorely lacking at this trial. But even if the judge will try to be as fair as possible, he can still rely upon the 99 per cent fundamentalist jury, and hence the judge can afford to be somewhat fair in his dealings with the defense. For it is as difficult to obtain an unprejudiced jury in this town as it would be to obtain a judge or jury in Pittsburgh, Pa, who would hand out justice to a bunch of "Reds."

POLISH BOSSES CALL FOR MORE WORKERS' BLOOD

WARSAW, Poland—(By Mail)—The regime of Polish attack on the workers seems to be too weak to the Polish bourgeoisie. Rjetch Pospolita writes on this subject: "Nowhere are the Communists treated so humanly (?) as in Poland." The arrested, passing tru workers quarters, sing the International and shriek out Communist slogans. The police keeps silence, everybody knows that a shot bring the prisoners to silence by force. See Bulgaria, continues the paper, "There when the Communists are led on the street, there is a death like silence, everybody knows that a shot or a blow of a sword would follow immediately every expression of simpathy to the prisoners." (MOPR).

Bloody Repression

In the town of Sourashima, near Lodz, the unemployed crowded before the magistracy, awaiting the distribution of doles. The magistrat to keep the crowd quiet, promised them to begin the distribution and went to the police, from where he came with of detachment of policemen. Then he ordered the crowd, without explaination to depart.

When the workers asked for explanations, the policemen rushed upon the crowd, swords in hands.

Several persons were wounded, among them four women (one of them a 75 years old woman.) All the wounded have been sent to hospital.

BUILDERS AT WORK

New Methods Developed on the Coast

San Francisco Has New Wrinkle

San Francisco and the Bay District are part of District Thirteen where the organizer, Comrade Tom Lewis, with the united action of the best comrades and the leadership of DAILY WORKER Agent P. B. Cowdery, succeeded in turning in the best performance in the country (of the large cities) in the recent campaign for the DAILY WORKER.

Usually after this kind of a job, the tendency is to rest up for a while. Not so in Frisco. With the job accomplished these comrades are today turning in efforts for "Our Daily" that makes them Communist Builders of the highest type.

Today's mail, with a letter from Comrade Lewis, brings an additional "new wrinkle" in stimulating DAILY WORKER activity among the units of our party. In addition to the monthly letter sent out by the district office to every Communist unit, a small note about the DAILY WORKER is attached TO EVERY COMMUNICATION.

The sheet received in the mail today was a financial report for the month of June. And there at the bottom was a little note asking for further action for the DAILY WORKER on the part of every branch and every individual.

Such appreciation of the importance of the DAILY WORKER to the Communist movement is noteworthy. In your district or city organization—whenever a bulletin, report, or any communication is mailed, just attach a small "P. S."—remind them that a Communist Party can be built better and quicker BY MEANS OF THE DAILY WORKER

RESUME WORKERS MOVIES IN MINN.

So far as northern Minnesota is concerned the summer season has no terrors for workers who are pushing the motion pictures of their class. At the Cromwell, Minn., Opera House, on July 29 and at Lawler, Minn., on July 30, there will be showings of "The Beauty and the Bolshevik," and of "Russia in Overalls."

See Them for First Time.

Hundreds of cities in this country have not yet had the benefit of these and similar labor films. The message of Soviet Russia, as expressed in living pictures of actual events in the first workers' republic, has been denied to the working men and women living in these towns. Only 200 cities out of a possible 2,000 have run these workers' films.

Some cities, small as well as large, on the other hand, have taken full advantage of the six educational and three story films made available by the Movie Department of the International Workers Aid. Films have been shown in large theaters and small, in Labor Temples and schoolhouses. They have been shown by themselves, or to complete a meeting program, or occasionally at picnics to draw and hold the crowd beyond the usual home hour. Now plans are being rapidly perfected to carry the movie show, by means of portable equipment, right into the halls and homes of even the smallest working class organizations. In this way the high theater rentals will be overcome and the showings, while smaller, will be less expensive and of more intense and intimate effect upon the audience. Any organization interested in booking a movie showing should communicate with the Movie Dept., 19 S. Lincoln St., Chicago, Ill.

John Watts Speaks at Dowell to the Miners on Farrington's Rule

By G. ALLARD.

DOWELL, Ill., July 15.— John J. Watts was cordially welcomed by the local miners here. His address was well received and tremendously applauded at its conclusion.

The documentary evidence that Watt, furnished verified his statements. Many of Farrington's unhealthy sympathizers were disappointed at his exploston.

The recent discussions at Johnston City rendered by Farrington was thoroly explained and its relation to the U. M. W. of A. was revealed.

New Films for Fall and Winter in from Russia

Effort are being made to bring the latest film successes of Soviet Russia to this country for next Fall and Winter's program. It is expected to get the best of all, "Lenin's Warning." It is an exciting story of love and struggle, showing the life of a young girl as she goes thru the stormiest period of revolution, and it brings in the tremendous influence exerted by Lenin upon events and mass sentiment in Russia, both during his life and after his death. A comedy showing an American Babbitt's adventures in Moscow, and a news film showing the work of the "Mopr" or International Red Aid, are also expected. It is not known just when these films, which are now enjoying great popularity abroad, will be made available for the use of the Western workers.

In the meantime, however, some excellent news films of Russian life and industry have been received, and these will be combined with the very best and most effective scenes from all the pictures thus far put out in this country in the form of "A Trip to Soviet Russia." Many millions who have never seen any of these pictures and many who have looked at them once will welcome a chance to see them again in a new treatment and significance. This "Trip to Soviet Russia" will be accompanied by a travelogue by William F. Kruse, who, as the cameraman for the International Workers' Aid, photographed most of the film and edited the rest from Russian newsreels. Similar talks and movies were given by Comrade Kruse at the University of Chicago and at the Lewis Institute of technology. Organizations and schools interested in booking this very "different" travelogue should get in touch with the movie department, 19 S. Lincoln St., Chicago, Ill.

San Francisco Party Opens Campaign of Street Meetings

SAN FRANCISCO, July 15.— The Workers Party has opened a campaign of street meetings in this city, aimed to acquaint to workers with the facts about American intervention in China. The first meeting, held last Tuesday night, drew a crowd of several hundred who listened most attentively to an address on the subject by Comrade Dolsen. Comrade Pilgrim, and other local members will also conduct meetings. The DAILY WORKER will be pushed at these rallies, a good number having been sold at the meeting already held.

A New Chinese Saviour

George Kirkpatrick, one of the socialist party's press agents, agrees with the capitalists that ignorance is the chief cause of China's troubles. But while the capitalists offer as a solution for what ails China long hours, short pay and poison gas, Kirkpatrick flies to Margaret Sanger and holds up a certain article made from rubber as cure for the evils that pester the Chinese masses. In simple terms, Kirkpatrick says that the trouble with China is too many Chinese.

This is typical of the socialist way of looking at things. Instead of blaming the imperialist robbers for the dreadfull poverty of the Chinese masses, they grope around for some scintilla of evidence to prove that the Chinese themselves are to blame. So the tendency of the Chinese to beget children is the reason why American, British, Japanese and British capitalists are now shooting them down on their own streets!

Kirkpatrick evidently read in the DAILY WORKER that the Wall Street government went to the expense of sending battleships to settle the Chinese question. He therefore admonishes our rulers for their extravagance and makes the following suggestion: "The cost of one big battleship would be sufficient to provide every woman in China with one piece priceless information—information used by the wives of all bankers, bishops, senators, judges, governors and cabinet secretaries in the United States—information on voluntary parenthood; that is a harmless, painless method for preventing conception. Why hesitate—to save China?"

The old Malthusian fallacy has been exploded time and time again. The earth is not overpopulated. The cause of poverty is not too many people, but the unequal distribution of wealth. This condition will only be eliminated when capitalism is eliminated. There is enough wealth in China to take care of its teeming population many times over. But the Chinese have not access to this wealth. They are not entitled to it according to the laws of capitalism.

What the Chinese must do, and what all the exploited people of the world must do, is to abolish the robber system of capitalism. Then they can begin the task of disseminating knowledge that will enable them to regulate their lives in accordance with their own interests and those of society as a whole. What the Chinese need nowadays more than knowledge about contraceptives is knowledge of how to use rifles and a plentiful supply of them.

There are not too many Chinese in China; but there are too many imperialists there.

The Real General Feng

The outstanding military figure in the Chinese movement for the liberation is General Feng-Yu-Hsiang, also called the "christian general." Feng was once a supporter of Britain and when Wu-Pei-Fu started out on the campaign that ended in his eclipse, Feng was one of his leading generals.

In those days, the "christian general" was pictured to the readers of the American and British capitalist papers in glowing colors. He was a nice man, humane and democratic. But Feng ceased to be the tool of British imperialism. He quit Wu-Pei-Fu, seized Peking and that was the political end of Fu. Suddenly Feng lost all virtue in the eyes of British and American capitalist editors. His christianity shloughed off him like a rubber coat and the public has been given the impression that the once humane and democratic Chinese general had changed to a man-eating tiger, who went around hunting nice fat bodies on which to perform carving tricks with his sword.

About the only coherent speech Feng could make according to his capitalist traducers, was one clamoring for gore and plenty of it. He was represented to be as bloodthirsty as the god of William Jennings Bryan. He had no program except an insatiable desire for unlimited and unceasing slaughter. In view of this campaign of calumny, the DAILY WORKER is pleased to feature on another page an artcile cabled by General Feng to the Workers Weekly of Great Britain, the official organ of the Communist Party of that country.

The article, which our readers are urged to study, is a calm, reasoned document, setting forth the facts that led up to the recent crisis in China, the bloody deeds of British imperialism and the determination of the Chinese people to free themselves from the blighting and brutal yoke of all foreign imperialism. This article gives us a clear picture of the real General Feng and not the caricature that the paid liars of capitalism drew to fool the masses.

Less Hours and Less Pay

The Standard Oil company of New Jersey has decided to establish the eight-hour day in its oil fields. Hitherto its slaves worked twelve hour shifts. With a reduction in hours there also comes a reduction in the pay envelopes of the Standard employes.

So strong is the hold of the Standard on the press thru its advertising hush fund, that very little public clamor was made about the inhuman hours put in by the workers who turned out millions for the Rockefeller interests. And now the santimonious John D. Rockefeller, Jr., decides to make a gesture of generosity, we find that it is the kind that pays good dividends to the oil octopus.

Coincident with the establishment fo the eight-hour day in its properties the Standard Oil company raised the price of gasoline one cent. This raise will pour many millions into the coffers of the company. And the Standard's slave drivers will learn to make their employes produce as much oil in eight hours as they formerly did in twelve. They initiated the eight-hour day, not for the benefit of the workers, but because they know it will pay better than risk a revolt of their slaves and the substitution of a real union for the bastard company organization that now pretends to represent the employes in their differences with the oil trust.

Ponzi was given another stretch in prison for taking several mlilions of dollars away from the innocent people of Boston in his fake international exchange scheme. Ponzi should have his swindle scheme incorporated in the state of Delaware.

Defense Cloaks Aggression -- By John Brown

AN orgy of militarism is enveloping our country ever more and more. Maneuvers by the navy, maneuvers by the air fleet, mobilization of the youth in the training camps, a tremendous budget for the war and navy departments, and finally bellicose speeches by a number of generals on Independence and Defense Day—this is but an incomplete list of the most oustanding facts which took place during the last three months, and which clearly prove that the United States is rapidly advancing on the path of militarism saturated with the blood of millions of workers and farmers.

IN the first years following the world war France, measured by the growth of militarism, took the place of pre-war Germany among th eimperialist powers. At present this role is passing more and more to our country. The U. S. is becoming a new Germany, a North American Germany, systematically and deliberately preparing for new imperialist, grasping wars.

READ carefully the speeches delivered on July 4 by Major-General John L. Hines (chief of the army general staff), Major-General Harry C. Hales (commanding the Sixth corps area) and Rear Admiral Bradley A. Fiske, and you will be convinced that they have in mind nothing else save preparation for an offensive war, for a war of plunder and annexation, and not for a defensive war.

They contemplate not the defense of the independence of our country, but ap atack on the independence of other countries.

THE speeches contain impressive figures.

The regular army, the first line of defense (meaning, the first line of offense)—180,000 men. The National Guard, the second line of defense (read: second line of offense)—200,000. The reserves, the third line of offense—95,000. The Women's corps for war work—250,000 (the proposal to organize such a woman's crops is now being considered by the war department as an integral part of its permanent "defense" plan). The thoro preparedness of our industry for war, and lastly, by way of dessert, the jesuitical attempt by Admiral Fiske to pass the blame for the suffering caused by war to the pacifists.

The reasoning of this old admiral deserves detailed consideration. The admiral declares: "I know that the so-called militarists (of course there are no militarists, there are only 'so-called militarists') are much more pacific in their attitude and language than the pacifists." Such is the old sea-wolf's aphorism number one.

HERE is aphorism number two:

> "The tendency of wealthy and commercial nations has always been toward effeminacy and away from wor, while the tendency of poor and aspiring nations has always been to make war against them as the shortest road to wealth and power."

The retired admiral does not take pains to mention instances proving this last aphorism. Let's do it for him. The poor, very poor England has waged war against the wealthy people of India. Pauperized France is now waging war against the Riffians who live in abundance and luxury. Lastly, poverty stricken United States is preparing to war against China which is suffocating in wealth.

APHORISM number three:

> "The greatest danger to the American flag is not Communism. The greatest danger is that miscalled pacifism which is softening the fibre of the nation."

You are mistaken, wise admiral in retirement. Precisely Communism is the greatest menace to the power of Wall Street. And do you know why? Because Communism is REAL pacifism, not the bourgeois and petty-bourgeois pacifism which, as you correctly declare, has not prevented a single war in the past and has no concrete plan how to prevent war in the future. The Communists are the only real pacifists, and they have a concrete plan, namely to establish a workers and farmers government the world over, and then war will become impossible. Precisely as pacifists really having no intention to oppress any nation, the Communists are the greatest menace to Wall Street.

DMIRAL Fiske is confusing theSg.w

ADMIRAL FISKE is confusing the question of militarism, pacifism and Communism in order to cover up the traces, to conceal from the workers and farmers that the bombast about defense, self-protection and independence is used to camouflage the actual practical and concrete plan of preparation for a war of encroachment and plunder.

But the admiral was carried away by his theme, and let the cat out of the bag. He concluded his speech with: "A continuance to protect at all times, and in all places, under all conceivable circumstances—the American flag."

To b esure, "in all places." That is, in China and in Japan, in Russia and in the Philippines, in South America and in Mexico.

THAT is the real meaning of the present militarist campaign, was best proven by Ex-Senator Hamilton Lewis, who in his speech, as reported by the Chicago Sunday Tribune, "warned against a war from out of the orient in whcih America will be without the aid of her late allies. "England, France and Italy never would aid us against China, Japan nad Russia."

Thus, China possessing no navy, Russia possessing only small remnants of the czarist fleet, and Japan which has been weakened by earthquakes for at least a score of years, are menacing the U. S. with a war of "offense." And the poor U. S., in possession of an immense and powerful navy, is compelled to make preparations for a war of defense.

HAVE mercy, honorable senator. There are bounds to credulity which even a senator may not cross. With your talk of Japan, China and Russia you are giving away your real intnetions—to enslave these countries to American imperialism. You let the secret out Mr. senator, you recklessly exposed the cards. The fairy tale about an alliance between socialist Russia, which has no plan of conquest and is helping China in her struggle for liberation, and Japan, which is right now taking a leading part, alongside of the American forces, in the suppression of the Chinese liberation movement,—this yarn is too much even for the most important, for the least class conscious worker. You're a mighty poor storyteller, Mr. Senator.

AND now, comrade reader, compare the bellicose speeches of the generals, who are contemplating the enslavement of Japan, China and Russia (and are therefore shouting about protecting the independence of the United States), with the speech of President Coolidge, which was also delivered on July 4. The president calls upon all nations of the old world to make permanent peace. (Admiral Fiske, is not this most typical pacifist preaching? Or do you favor pacifism for the old world, and militarism for the new world?)

President Coolidge adds to this, that the only hope of success lies in "peace with justice."

AN old Latin general declared: "If you want peace, prepare for war." In the United States this proverb has been changed to read:

"When you want war, shout for peace, if you contemplate the enslavement of other nations, talk of defending the independence of your nation."

British Ordered "Shot to Kill" in China

the police that were vainly trying to push them back.

The Sikh police with a certain inherent brutality (probably because of their own sufferings from British imperialism in their native land) brandished lead-filled batons at the heads of the defenseless students.

"Shoot to Kill" British Order.

By this time the crowd had reached the confines of the Louza police station and were going to pass by continuing their parade when six or seven police (all British) on orders from their chief couched in the words, "Shoot to Kill" fired into the crowd.

After the first volley the crowd naturally turned to get back when a second volley was fired, this time fired at the students when their backs were turned. And then a third volley was fired. By this time the students were in full retreat and on the street lay the dead and wounded. There were nine killed and over 25 wounded. The news of the slaughter spread like wildfire thruout the city.

More Wanton Butchery.

On Sunday, meetings were held at different places in and around the settlement. A general strike was declared and the Chinese of the city entered whole-heartedly in the protest against the Saturday butchery. On Monday in front of Wing On's several British and Sikh police killed six of a defenseless group of students and workers by additional wanton firing.

Immediately the declaration of a general strike in protest began to take effect. All the Chinese force of the electric company, the telephone company and the employes of the textile mills and the cotton mills walked out and at the present writing are still out.

English and former Russian white guard remnants of the armies of Kolchack, Denikin and others, who took British gold at one time to attempt to crush the first Workers and Peasants' Republic, U. S. S. R., are again receiving British shekels, this time to attempt to break and crush the movement for Chinese freedom, by scabbing.

Mass Movement Begins.

All the waiters (in Shanghaiese called "boys") of the leading hotels in the city also walked out. Then one of the most feared effects of the strike eventuated. The shipping, the most important factor of Shanghai commerce, was effected. The Chinese crews stepped ashore from most of the boats manned by Chinese labor just as soon as they touched the wharves and now there are 50 ships (by the time you get this letter the conservative estimate would be 75) ships tied up in the harbor with hardly a man to man them.

Student committees are stationed at all roads leading into the settlement to prevent the conveying of cattle and vegetables into the settlement for food for the foreigners. Fifteen hundred laundrymen have closed their shops and are at present on strike. Yesterday the majority of the dairymen walked out.

Imperialist Invasion.

It is needless to state that men-of-war both British and Japanese, have been summoned from nearby ports and sailors and marines have been landed from the ships already in the harbor to patrol the settlement and "protect foreign life and property" in Shanghai.

Not only were Saturday's and Monday's shots heard in Shanghai, but they echoed and re-echoed thruout the Yangtze valley and thruout China. No sooner was the news known than things began to happen in other cities. In Peking where student demonstrations were taking place before the Tsingtao and Shanghai murders, the news was only more fuel to the fire and as a result there is a general strike proclaimed which is spreading daily.

At Chinkiang, some miles from the city of Nanking, the students had a demonstration, with the result that all foreigners were ordered out of the city within 24 hours and those orders were obeyed P. D. Q., with the result that the Loong Wo steamed into Shanghai three days ago with a boatload of foreigners, i. e., missionaries and businessmen.

Two days ago Hankow was the scene of slaughter when foreign volunteers and marines turned machine guns on a mass of unarmed students and workers demonstrating against the Nanking Road massacre. Eight Chinese students were killed and many more wounded.

Kiukiang was the scene of more outright murder but actual figures and facts have not as yet been secured.

Numerous demonstrations of students in many other cities are reported and the general trend portends a non-peaceful culmination. China, already at the boiling point, is beginning to seep over; and once she gets started, "All hell can't stop her."

FLEXIBLE SHAFT COMPANY PRUNES WORKERS' WAGES

Employes Quit When Stop Watch Introduced

The Flexible Shaft company which manufactures considerable sheep-shearing machinery for Australian, New Zealland and Argentinian exoprt, also is quite efficient at the task of shearing the workers employed in its shops thru a highly developed system of speeding up accompanied by drastic wage cutting.

The Taylor stop-watch system was introduced in punch and drill press departments. As a result of this intolerable system, 20 workers quit. This system is also in preparation for the toolmakers, mailers, assemblers, polishers and plasterers.

The Flexible Shaft company, which is located at 5600 West Roosevelt Road, also makes "Sunbeam" electric irons. The wages were slashed in some departments from 85 cents to 55 cents an hour.

SCORES INJURED WHEN KLANSMEN CAUSE RIOT IN MASSACHUSETTS TOWNS; THROW EGGS, PULL GUNS

WORCESTER, Mass., July 15.—Scores of men were injured, two seriously, in rioting between ku klux klansmen and anti-klansmen in two sections of Worcester county early today.

The scenes of the disorders were in Medfield and Leicester.

The Leicester riot was the more serious with eggs, sticks, stones and bottles being thrown and revolvers flourished by the kluxers. Several automobiles were damaged.

NEARING FINDS DEMOCRACY OF BRITAIN GONE

Pacifist Also Stopped by Hand Across Sea

NEW YORK, July 15.— Visaes on American passports have been denied Scott Nearing and his wife Nellie Nearing without explanation. Less than two weeks previous a British visa was denied Brent Dow Allinson, conscientious objector during the war.

Allinson left with a group of young people for a peace conference in England and was forced to leave the party in France. The Nearing plan to go to Europe for travel and study. The British consulate wrote to London for further instructions on the case as the Nearings intend to fight the decision if visaes are again refused.

"It is remarkable to think that the British secret service should maintain in this country a file of the activities and politics of American citizens," Nearing states.

British officials attempted to prevent foreign Communists from entering England to attend the party congress this year. However, two delegates from France and Germany, not being sticklers for etiquette, slipped thru the swarm of detectives, delivered speeches and then vanished.

State Court Wipes Out Reduction in Utility Co's Rates

One hundred cases where the state utilities commission has ordered public utilities to reduce their rates from war levels were invalidated by the ruling of the state supreme court that all cases involving utilities or rates concerning one county must be heard in that county.

They must be heard only by the commissioners, assistant commissioners, or the secretary of the commission, the court ruled. Heretofore, practically all hearings have been at Springfield or Chicago, and experts connected with the commission have been allowed to preside.

It is impossible for seven commissioners to hear all cases, the members point out.

Dairy Company Sold Milk Twenty-five Per Cent Watered

The license of the Newton-Dowd-Quigley Dairy company, 4326 S. Wabash Ave., has been revoked by the city health commissioner, after evidence that their milk has been watered from 17 to 29 per cent.

It has also been shown that new caps were substituted for old caps on the milk bottled longer than one day. The company has been watering the milk for some time, having previously received three warnings from the health authorities.

AS religion today is under closer scrutiny than usual, because of the public interest aroused by the Dayton trial, the following excerpts from the evangelist's talk to the Rotarians may be enlightening to those who want to get a line of the mentality of William Jennings Bryan and his type. "Christ did it. I didn't. (This was in reference to the cleaning up of Herrin) God almighty working thru me, a former sinner, enabled me to go to that sin-infested city and tell them the story of Christ. I had to knock hell out of a few, but the citizens of Herrin are better now." The prosecution rests here. But we humbly submit that the guns of Sheriff Galligan and his friends were more potent in beating the klan than the lord's brimstone retailed by evangelist Williams.

ENGLAND once had the reputation for being a land of freedom. When other European countries had obnoxious passport systems anybody could come into England without much bother. Revolutionists pointed out that British capitalists would show its teeth when things began to look dark; that it would throw off the mask of democracy and talk abroad in all its bourgeois nakedness when its power began to wane and its wage slaves began to show a susceptibility to radical ideas and a tendency to act.

THAT time has arrived. The action of the British consular officials in New York in refusing to grant visas to Scott Nearing and Brent Dow Allison, who planned to visit Britain shows to what extent the prevailing capitalist terror of radicalism has hit Britain. With fascism growing in England and the police raiding the homes of British workers, the old traditional freedom of "Merrie England" is dying a natural death. But on its ruins will be built up a new and more lasting freedom, the freedom that will flourish when class rule is abolished and all men and women will be equal in fact as well as in theory. This equality can only prevail when exploitation of man by man ceases.

THOSE who are interested to know what is happening to some of the money that is made out of the toil of the American wage slaves should glance occasionally at the "society columns" of the capitalist press. Thousands of American millionaires and their female parasites are cutting loose in the capitols of Europe. London, which boasts of the most respectable and the most solvent royal family in Europe is a favorite resort of our bloated boodle-hounds. While American workers who produce the wealth that enables these parasites to revel in luxury, are lucky if they can take a moonlight excursion on some pond called a lake, the papers have the following to say of the doings of our "best people" in London.

"ONE American hostess who is respected and taken quite seriously is Mrs. Charles Marshall of New York, the mother of Mrs. Marshall Field III. She has taken a house at 6 Grosnevor Square (the residence of Lady Burton) and according to current reports, Princess Mary has accepted an invitation to a dinner and dance Mrs. Marshall will give this month. Incidentally Mrs. Marshall has for neighbors in Grosnevor Square, Lady Cunard, the Duke of Portland, the Duchess of Somerset, the Marquis of Bath and the Earl of Durham—a galaxy of blue-blooded peers that lead smart London society."

NO doubt the counter jumpers of the big Marshall Field department store will be happy to learn that the profits which flow into the Field coffers as a result of their toil, enable their employers to tickle the palates of British aristocracy with the choicest of foods and drinks, while the poor slaves can find consolation in knowing that our rulers are able to hold their own with the British aristocracy. Is it surprising that our capitalists should hate Soviet Russia, the only country in the world that has taken steps to put an end to parasitism?

Daily Worker New York Conference

DAILY WORKER Builders of New York will hold a most important conference at nine o'clock this Friday evening, July 17, at 108 East 14th street.

Every DAILY WORKER and literature agent of the New York Workers Party branches must be present. If any fail to come they will be reported to their branches. News stand collectors, worker correspondents and all other party members who want to help build the DAILY WORKER are also invited to attend this conference to discuss the DAILY WORKER mid-summer campaign in New York.

A similar meeting for the Y. W. L. DAILY WORKER and literature agents will take place at headquarters, 108 East 14th street, Monday evening, July 20.

New York: Keep Aug. 30 and Sept. 7 Open!

The DAILY WORKER is arranging an excursion for Sunday, August 30, and a joint picnic with the T. U. E. L. for Labor Day, September 7. All friendly organizations in New York are asked to refrain from arranging conflicting affairs on these dates.

More Volunteers Wanted.

Volunteer workers do a lot of work every week for the DAILY WORKER in New York. The hot weather does not stop a number of comrades from helping several hours each week with details in the DAILY WORKER New York office, and over twenty donate from one to four hours a week as news stand collectors. The results for the DAILY WORKER can be increased in proportion as additional comrades volunteer for these various lines of work.

Typists, addressers and a bookkeeper are needed in the office, more collectors are needed for news stand work, and there is immediate need for a number of speakers to visit branches and union meetings in behalf of the DAILY WORKER. If willing to help, please report in person to the manager of the New York DAILY WORKER agency at 108 East 14th St.

STATE [illegible]ES TO BAR SCIENCE, SC[illegible] DEFENSE AFRAID TO E[illegible]OSE BOSSES' BIBLE DOPE

DAYTON, Tenn., July 16.—The Scopes trial reached its great crisis today when the state's attorneys offered a motion to exclude all scientific testimony touching on "the relation of evolution to the divine origin of man."

Just before the session started, a mail carrier brought in a sack of mail for Clarence Darrow. He emptied the sack on the counsel table, most of the defense attorneys helping Darrow examine the letters.

Prayer a State Argument.

Rev. James A. Allen, pastor of a Dayton baptist church, made the opening prayer. He was a fundamentalist, praying "God's blessings upon the deliberations of the court to the end that Thy word may be vindicated and the truth revealed." For the first time, defense attorneys received the prayer in silence. Their objection, however, was automatically entered in the record.

Refuses To Attack Bible

Darrow first sought to have the scientists hear the court before making any decision. His purpose was to have the scientific testimony broadcast to the world, even tho it never reaches the ears of the twelve men who must sit in judgement on Scopes.

Darrow for the first time since the trial began, made the direct admission that the defense will endeavor to reconcile evolution and the bible. Darrow took the viewpoint of the "modernist" preachers who endeavor to interpret the bible "symbolically," and thus hold their jobs.

Accepts Fairy Tales "Symbolically"

"We want to put learned scientists and real students on the witness stand," Darrow said. "To prove the theory of evolution is not in conflict with the divine origin of man. While there is not a soul on earth who believes the whole bible literally, we will not attack it, but merely prove that the bible and science can be reconciled."

Stewart renewed his objection to the testimony and moved that all further scientific evidence be excluded from the trial. He charged the scientific witnesses knew nothing about the question of Scopes' teaching in the public schools of Dayton and that any other testimony was "irrevelant and incompetent."

"It is up to the jury to determine whether the lessons taught by Mr. Scopes were in conflict with the bible," Stewart added. "That is the only issue before the jury."

Young Bryan followed. He spoke in a low tone, barely heard at the press tables.

"The danger of putting on the scientific witnesses," said Bryan, nervously, "is that the jury may substitute the opinions of these scientists for their own."

Wants Ignorance To Decide

Bryan revealed the state's hand, for it wants the case decided by a jury all of whose members have admitted

AS WE SEE IT.

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY

GREAT BRITAIN may smash into the big headlines very shortly and have William Jennings Bryan skulking among the second hand furniture advertisements if the threatened mine strike in England comes to pass. The miners have turned down the government proposal for a court of inquiry having for its object the ascertainment whether the miners' wages could be reduced or their hours extended. The miners thot such an inquiry would be superfluous as they were determined there would be no reduction in wages or extension of hours. A strike appears to be inevitable.

THE British coal industry has seen its best days. The capitalists want to maintain the old rate of profit at the expense of the workers. The latter are determined that they will not retreat. The British miners are fortunate in having as their most prominent leader a fighting militant in the person of A. J. Cook, who was elected to his position as secretary of the miners federation on the left wing ticket. To his credit be it said, that he has remained true to his principles since his election.

WHEN asked if he believed that the sun once stood still at the request of Joshua, William Jennings Bryan, got nasty and insinuated that his questioner was a donkey. The fact is Bryan has made an ass of himself, premeditatedly and with profit aforethought. No doubt this champion mountebank is sincere in his beliefs, tho he manages to make his sincerity the handmaiden of his money making business. Bryan may be courageous in his ignorance but he will find more people to resent the idea that they are anything in a monkey's life than will tilt a lance at the heliocentric theory.

THE Dayton trial is interesting and instructive. Its effect on the church will be demoralizing. Millions of workers who have gone their way oblivious of the conflict waged between religion and science, are now pricking their ears and repairing to the book stores to read up on Darwin, Huxley and the other men of science who made the church twist and turn in an attempt to save its bacon from the advance of knowledge. The workers have everything to gain and nothing to lose by the dissipation of superstition.

IT is interesting to note that the catholic church, the most powerful spiritual air navy of big business is maintaining a discreet silence on the question of evolution, while the more hysterical religious outfits are defending their fortress of ignorance with wailing and gnashing of teeth. The catholic church knows that it must maintain a certain dignity and impress its flock with an outward appearance of poise. When the theory of evolution becomes universally accepted, the catholic church will prove to its own satisfaction, at least, that it always favored it. The can-rattling religions have neither common sense nor dignity.

THE capitalist anti-war organizations in the United States are reported to have united on a plan that promises to bring everlasting peace. The main plank in the plan is a clause

COOLIDGE READY TO BREAK HARD COAL STRIKE

Calls Davis to Help the Barons Smash Union

SWAMPSCOTT, Mass., July 16.—All of the power of the federal government is to be concentrated in an effort to prevent a strike in the anthracite coal fields.

President Coolidge took the first step in his campaign for the operators when he summoned Secretary of Labor Davis to his summer home here for conference over the week-end.

The mine union officials demand a wage increase of only 10 per cent, whereas the rank and file coal miners declare the increase should be 20 per cent. They point out that the operators will still make huge profits.

Secretary Davis is expected to arrive at White Court tomorrow.

Coolidge has been following closely the operator-miner negotiations over a new wage scale at Atlantic City and he is said to be desirous of bringing all possible federal pressure to bear to force the miners to accept the operators' terms and prevent another hard coal strike.

Belgium Must Pay.

SWAMPSCOTT, Mass., July 16—The fact that Belgium was over-run by Germany during the war leaves President Coolidge cold, and the plea of that country's debt commission that her war plight be taken into account wil be refused. President Coolidge has let it be known that Belgium must pay her war debt in full.

FIRST FIGHT ON NEW INJUNCTION LAW IS WAGED BY AMALGAMATED CLOTHING UNION BEFORE FOELL

Again a rush of court business prevented Judge Charles E. Foell from hearing the J. L. Taylor & Co., and the International Tailoring Company's plea for injunction against the Amalgamated Clothing Workers' striking defendants.

"This is the first bill for an injunction filed since the anti-injunction law was passed," said William A. Cunnea, attorney for the strikers, "and we have a great many objections to the granting of this injunction which we will present to you."

Exasperated at the circumstances which caused the delay, the lawyers for the employers made wild charges of assaults and

FIVE WORKERS ARE THREATENED BY DEPORTATION

Pennsylvania and Texas War on Foreign-Born

Urgent appeals from five foreign born workers, one in Texas, the others in Pennsylvania and all threatened with immediate deportation have come to the office of International Labor Defense. A wire from Ambridge, Pa., tells of the arrest of three Greek workers by federal officials forbidding a meeting and distributing literature in their own language.

Tony Stafford, union coal miner of Italian birth, is now on Ellis Island awaiting a ship to Italy. He was taken from Moundsville prison, West Va., where he has been confined for five years on a frame-up charge growing out of a strike in the coal fields. He was lodged in the Pittsburgh, Pa. county jail by federal officers until Monday morning when he was shipped to Ellis Island.

Deportation Means Prison.

John Zagorski is confined in tank six, El Paso, Texas, county jail. He was intercepted coming from Mexico where he entered on a Polish passport. The authorities have told him he will be deported to Poland.

But Zagorski is not a citizen of Poland. He has relatives in New Jersey who are in possession of his birth certificate that shows he was born in the Ukraine, Russia. He is a Russian citizen. His deportation to Poland will mean prison and perhaps death.

I. L. D. Retains Counsel.

International Labor Defense has wired its New York office to immediately retain legal counsel to stay the deportation of Stafford.

It has also notified Attorney Edward D. Tittmann of El Paso, of the Zagorski case and he is preparing for a legal battle for Zagorski's freedom.

Wife Tells Story.

Mrs. Tony Stafford, wife of the deportee and mother of four children whom Stafford has not seen for more than six years, writes that the E. E. White Coal Co. of Glenn White, W. Va., are behind the persecution of Stafford.

She writes, "I want you to fully understand that it is because of a grudge against union officials that my husband, who was one, is being persecuted." Mrs. Stafford and her children are destitute and have appealed for aid in bringing their husband and father back to them.

Many More Involved.

It is pointed out by the International Labor Defense that these two new cases bear out its contention that a drive is in progress against all foreign born workers who are active in the labor movement.

The I. L. D. has already in hand the defense of six other foreign-born workers who are being proceeded against by the labor department for deportation. They are S. Zinich, editor of a South Slavic labor paper; John Lassen, editor of a Hungarian paper; John Schedel who has been ordered deported for the second time, Sanna Kannasto, Finnish working woman arrested a few months ago and A. Severino, naturalized citizen of Italian birth of the Cleveland Bricklayers' Union; E. Vajtauer, Czecho-Slovak editor.

I. L. D. Appeals for Help.

International Labor Defense is making every effort to break this wide-spread drive on active foreign-born workers. The secretary, James P. Cannon said today that altho the I. L. D. has been in existence for less than a month, having been organized at a national conference in Chicago on June 28, in that time the organization has been in receipt of a veritable flood of requests from all over the country asking for help in defending foreign-born and American workers alike who are victims of frame-ups and persecutions for their activity in the labor movement. The I. L. D. calls upon all workers and workers' organizations to give immediate financial aid to carry on the fight against deportation and imprisonment of workers. The address is, International Labor Defense, 23 So. Lincoln St., Chicago, Ill.

FRANCE, IGNORED BY OTHER ROBBER POWERS, KICKS AT CONFERENCE

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 16.—Coolidge is having difficulty in putting over his imperialist intrigue to stall off and crush the Chinese national liberation movement and check the influence of Soviet Russia in the Far East.

Suddenly discovering that the rumored secret agreement between England, Japan and America was leaving French interests out in the cold, France today notified Washington that, after all, France considered that the "time is not ripe yet" for a conference on extra-territoriality.

FAKER STOOLS ON CHINESE SEAMEN IN U. S.

Olander Asks Workers Be Deported

Charging the immigration officials stationed in Chicago with "laxity and neglect of duty," Victor A. Olander, secretary of the Illinois State Federation of Labor, in the official organ of the federation, declared yesterday that Orientals and praticularly Chinese, have been given easy access to the United States thru employment on a lake steamer.

Mr. Olander asserted that for the first time in the history of shipping on the great lakes the South American began her present season with Asiatics among her crew.

Olander is an official of the moribund International Seamen's Union, which has lost most of its members by dwelling overmuch on patriotism and ignoring wages and conditions. His well known standing as one of the leading labor fakers of Illinois, as well as his position in the I. S. U., is reported as probably having moved him to play the stool pigeon on Chinese workers for fear that these workers would want a real union that fights for working-class interests.

But informing capitalist governments against workers so that they may be persecuted is rather strong stuff, even for a labor faker, and Olander is not expected to gain great popularity for such stool pigeon work among the honest members of organized labor.

DISTRICT NO. 18 MINERS BESET ON ALL SIDES

Splitters, Fakers and Bosses all Enemies

By ALEX REID
(Secretary Progressive Miners' International Committee)

While John L. Lewis is sporting himself at the beach in Atlantic City—the playground of the world—his faker friends in Alberta Canada, officials of District 18, are betraying and selling out the coal miners of that reactionary ruled district.

Sherman, the district president, supported by thugs, gunmen and the police are herding scabs into the mining towns to take the place of the miners at the mines, thereby aiding the coal operators to destroy the remnant of the union that is left. In furthering their unholy scheme of defeating the miners, and reducing them to abject slavery murder is being committed by a bunch of uniformed thugs assisted by the labor fakers in the valley.

The fighting miners of Drumheller were sold out, and a reduction of wages negotiated by the officials of the union, without giving the miners of that district any say so whatever, they were not given a chance to dis-

ANTHRACITE PRICE NOT DUE TO WAGE COST BUT TO HIGH PROFIT, SHOWN BY UNION AT CONFERENCE

(Special to The Daily Worker)

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., July 16.—The present price of anthracite coal is not due to the cost of mining, but is "hitched on" after it leaves the mines.

This was the argument advanced today by miners' representatives at the morning session of the wage conference between anthracite operators and miners, replying to the operators' statemetn that the industry could not stand a wage increase.

The miners declared it cost as much to get coal from yards of dealers in Pittsburgh, Philadelphia and other cities to the consumer as it does to mine the coal. The place to economize, it was claimed, is "along the road."

GARMENT WORKERS REJECT FAKE 'AWARD', SCORE SIGMAN TREASON AND URGE UNITY AND STRUGGLE

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK CITY, July 16.—The Joint Committee of Action representing the suspended left wing Locals 2, 9 and 22 of the International Ladies' Garment Workers and embracing sixty per cent of the cloak and dressmakers of the New York market, yesterday issued a ringing defiance to the outrageous "award" of the governor's commission.

Charging that the corrupt officialdom of the International Union and the New York Joint Board had deliberately betrayed the New York garment workers into a morass of defeat and disruption, the Joint Committee of Action attacks with equal vigor the traitorous Sigman machine, the bosses and the trap into which the collaboration of these two have led the workers—the "recommendations" of the governor's commission as "impartial" arbitrators.

Text of Statement

Following is full text of statement of joint committee on governors commission recommendation and the situation in the industry:

Thru Struggle Only Will We Retain Our Rights

A call to all cloakmakers.

"The leaders of the machine in our union who want to continue their control over our organization by force have issued a call to the cloakmakers to vote in favor of the report of the governor's commission.

"They want you cloakmakers to continue to suffer in silence.

"You must not participate in their referendum.

"The whole referendum business is nothing but a fake, this fake you must meet with contempt.

"We the cloak and dressmakers must decide for ourselves what attitude to take toward the recommendations of the governor's commission. We must decide for ourselves what our attitude should be toward the present deplorable situation into which we have been forced by the present misleadership of the joint and the international.

"The self appointed leaders of the joint board and the international have dragged us into a swamp from which we alone can save ourselves.

"What is the significance of the governor's commission?

"The Sigman clique in our union interpret the decision to mean that the cloakmakers are to work another year under their old conditions.

"This interpretation is a fraud.

"The decision of the commission gives our employers even greater concessions than they enjoyed until now. This decision gives them still greater possibilities for intensifying their oppression in the shops.

"In their diplomatic maneuvers with the governor's commission, this irresponsible Sigman clique did one thing: Gambling at our expense, they of their own accord offered several new concessions to the employers thru the Hillquit memorandum.

"They thought that for these proposed concessions they will be handed a few crumbs for cloakmakers. The commission, however, accepted the concessions and denied even the crumbs. The commission accepted Sigman's concessions which obligate the union to become the agency for the bosses association.

"In order to save ourselves from this deplorable situation there is but one course:—Not thru miracles shall our problems be solved. Not thru decisions of bankers or influential politicians will we free ourselves from our present misery, but thru our own efforts, our own strength, and our own struggle."

"The cloakmakers presented the following demands to the employers:

"Limitation of contractors.

"A guarantee of forty weeks employment.

"A raise of wages.

"A forty hour week.

"The right to examine employers books.

"The right to impose penalties for

MONARCHISTS TO LET WILLIE IN POLITICAL GAME

BERLIN, July 16.—Former Crown Prince Wilhelm will be allowed to enter politics, by the Prussian government.

This official statement, overturning a belief that has been generally held, was made today by the Prussian minister of the interior.

Speaking of the protest against the appearance of Wilhelm at the agricultural meet at Breslau, the minister of the interior declared that Wilhelm, prior to his return from exile at Wieringen, neither gave a special pledge to keep out of politics, nor was asked for any such promise.

Since his return to Germany, the former crown prince has been living on his estate in Upper Silesia, near the Polish border.

GENERAL FENG FLAYS FOES OF CHINA FREEDOM

Cables Article to Communist Weekly

The Workers' Weekly, official organ of the Communist Party of Great Britain, published the following article by General Feng-Yu-Hsiang, the Chinese national leader. The British press has been slandering Feng ever since he cast in his lot with the movement that has for its aim the unification of China and its liberation from the yoke of foreign imperialism:

June 28.

SHANGHAI is Chinese territory, but governed under an administrative system in which the real ruler of the city is invariably the British consul general. This system was instituted under the unequal treaties.

In a Japanese cotton mill in Shanghai recently, a Japanese employer killed a Chinese worker, in circumstances which moved the Shanghai students to make a public protest on May 30.

They were entirely unarmed, and their purpose was to call the world's attention to the existence of industrial conditions which ought not to be permitted to continue. These unarmed students were shot by order of the British authorities in Shanghai. Some were killed on the spot and others seriously wounded.

Shoot to Kill.

At a public trial which followed, the British Police Inspector Everson stated that he did not try to disperse the students by shooting at their legs, because his orders were to shoot to kill, in the last resort.

Since then students and workers have been killed in Shanghai, Hankow, Canton, and elsewhere in China by British and other foreigners, and at Hankow and Canton they have been killed by machine guns manned by British naval forces. You have doubtless read in the press how these acts have aroused national feeling

'L' UNION HEAD TAKES VIEW OF BOSSES ON WAGE

Altho the elevated railroad employes have voted to reject the Chicago rapid transit company's proposal for a renewal of last year's agreement, and have demanded a five cent an hour increase in wages, their president, William D. Mahon, of the Amalgamated association of street and electric railway employes, was to take the part of the company.

Mahon declared that at a meeting last night he would urge the union men to accept the company's proposal and go to work under the terms of the expired agreement.

"Industrial conditions are not such that demands for wage increases should be pressed at this time," Mahon said, in siding with the employers, whose proposal he hinted was "justified."

MAC MILLAN NORTH POLE EXPEDITION CROSSES CIRCLE AT DISKO ISLE

WASHINGTON, July 16. — The flagship Bowdoin of the MacMillan Arctic expedition remained at Hopedale, Labrador, today while repairs were continued on the broken propeller, but the airplane carrier Peary has crossed the Arctic circle and is off the Greenland coast south of Disko island, according to radio dispatches to the National Geographic Society here.

IMPERIALISTS INCITE CIVIL WAR IN CHINA

Chang Leads to Break Chinese Unity

(Special to The Daily Worker.)

SHANGHAI, July 16.—Grave events are appearing again in the still rising movement for Chinese liberation.

Following the rumored secret agreement among the three imperialist powers—England, Japan and America for common action to defeat the Chinese by deceit and pretend a friendly interest in holding conferences in the near future, Chinese militarists who are known to be in the pay of these same imperialist powers, are starting civil war and moving troops against other provinces.

Military Agent Provocateur.

Chang-Tso-lin, flagrant agent of Japan, continues to move troops into the Shanghai area and threaten war upon the governor of Chekiang, Sun Chuan-fang. What is more sinister is that Chang Tso-lin is apparently acting with the consent of the Peking govrenment, whose minister of war, Wu Kwang-sin, is on the road to Shanghai to try to force Sun Chuan-fang out of the southern part of Kiangso province.

This menaces the unity of the Chinese with a digression which the imperialists will welcome as giving them the opportunity not only to check the Chinese upheaval, but also to give the excuse that the "lack of order" precludes any possibility of doing away with the unequal treaties and extra-territoriality privileges.

So clearly is this attempt to divide China to aid the foreign imperialists, that great numbers of Chinese organizations are pouring telegrams into Peking demanding that Chang Tso-lin withdraw his troops from the Shanghai area.

Peking Government Plays False.

However, there is considerable evidence to show that the Peking government is acting traitorously to the interests of the Chinese liberation movement, for besides many other things, not only is Chang Tso-lin beginning a civil war with the apparent approval of the Peking minister of war, but another government general, Yang Sen, is opening war upon rival generals near Chunghing in the province of Szechwan.

From Peking comes the news that the promised conference which is pledged to talk about the abolition of extra-territoriality, is reported by U. S. Minister MacMurray to open in December, six months from now.

Chinese interested in liberation of their nation declare that the effort to break up the movement by intriguing generals and civil war is obvious, the imperialists already stating that "China, herself, is preventing the holding of a conference by internal trouble."

Try to Bar Science in Scopes' Trial

knowing "almost nothing" about evolution.

"The court should not receive opinionated evidence when it touches the issue involved," Bryan continued. "The courts are agreed upon that."

William Jennings Bryan, the father-left his seat behind the state counsel table and moved up beside his son. The politician sat fanning himself, listening intently to his boy. The son however, showed none of the famous Bryan eloquence.

"To admit this testimony," Bryan closed, "would be to substitute a trial by experts for a trial by jury and to announce to the world that this jury is too stupid to determine the simple issue of this case."

State Withdraws Challenge

A short recess was taken. During which, Dudley Field Malone announced to the press tables that the younger Bryan's speech was a "withdrawal of the elder Bryan's challenge for a duel to death between evolutionists and christians."

"The father demands a duel," said Malone, "the son wants to take away our only weapon. We'll fight them any how."

When court resumed, Judge Raulston warned all spectators to make no demonstrations.

"We have counsel here, who may color their speeches with it," said the court. "If they do I don't want any applause for two reasons: First—it is improper and, second, this building is heavily burdened, and while I don't want to alarm any one, I don't want any vibrations caused which would shake the building and I'm afraid a heavy outburst of applause might cause trouble."

Arthur Garfield Hayes began the defense's argument. He told the court first there need be no alarm over any "applause greeting me which will shake down the courthouse."

"There isn't a single expert in this case who is paid," Hayes continued. "Every scientist who has come here, came because of his love for science."

Hayes said the state wanted both judge and jury to decide whether evolution was taught by Scopes without "even knowing what is evolution."

Hayes Explaines Evolution

"If Scopes had taught that man descended from a monkey," Hayes added, "he would not be guilty of violating this law. That is the fact strange as it seems to the prosecution. The fact is that man and monkey are of the same order of animals, the first order, under every classification of science. And the law says that to be guilty, Scopes must have taught that man descended from a lower order of animals. Science would prove that monkeys were not of a lower order."

Hayes read a short paper written by Prof. H. H. Newman, dean of science school at the University of Chicago, in which the scientist said that Darwinism meant one thing to the lay public and another to science.

"The jury should be told this," he added.

Theory of Natural Selection

"Darwinism is the term given to evolution generally by the lay public," Hayes quoted Newman. "It means an entirely different thing in science, for scientists look upon Darwinism as the term for the theory of natural selection, one of the principal theories supported by Darwin."

Hayes also demanded that the defense be permitted to show the "meaning of the bible."

Conflict Of Tenn. Laws

Hayes charged Scopes was jeopardized by two laws, one compelling him to teach Hunter's biology because it was the text book approved by the state text book commission and the other as the state contended, forbidding him to teach it. One law, Hayes said, ordered him to teach biology; the other forbade it.

This aroused the ire of William Jennings Bryan, who entered the debate for the first time. The commoner's remarks led defense counsel to demand whether Bryan had been entered on the record as an attorney for the prosecution.

Bryan, Sr., Enters Fray

"The Tennessee legislature passed this anti-evolution law without suspending the right of Scopes to teach this book," said Hayes.

Bryan interrupted; "it does not matter if the book was authorized, the teaching of the theory of evolution was forbidden, he had no right to teach it."

"That is a very good theory," Hayes admitted, "except the defense holds that if the new law intended to amend the old one, it would have said so."

Hayes spoke the name "Mr. Bryan," stopped and asked the court whether he could insert the commoner's name in his remarks. Yesterday, the court made defense attorneys ignore Bryan.

"Colonel Bryan is here as an associate counsel, I believe," the court ruled.

Malone arose and demanded to know whether the commoner's name was entered on the record. The court said Bryan had been duly recognized as one of the state's counsel.

Only An Associat

"Well, then, the leader of the prosecution—" Hayes began, when Bryan again interrupted him.

"It might be well," the commoner declared, "to recognize, that while the defense is seeking to make me chief in this case, that the fact is the attorney general (Stewart) is in charge of the case. I am only an associate counsel.

Everybody bowed, the commoner sat down but Stewart arose and announced that "in questions of law," he was referring to the superior judgement of Bryan. Hayes ended a moment later without again referring to Bryan.

Herbert E. Hicks, youthful local counsel, renewed the state's argument. He contended the only issue in the case was whether Scopes taught the prescribed biological lesson and whether that lesson conflicted with the bible. The jury alone could decide, he added.

"The defense wants to bring in secondary jury of scientists to decide the question in their favor," Hicks continued.

Against the "Foreigners"

"The state objects to letting them turn this courtroom into a college or school. If these foreign gentlemen—"

"Now, now," the court admonished. After "foreign gentlemen—"

"They have termed themselves that," Hicks explained.

"We have no objection," Malone interposed, "go right ahead."

"If they want to have a college or a school here," Hicks continued, "we will give them ground right here in town. These men want to tell us what the bible means—"

The defense attorneys whispered together. Neal was on his feet, demanding "Who do you mean?"

Hicks Is Startled

Hicks looked startled. He meant the scientists, he said.

"Well, you ought to hear them first," Hayes shouted, "before you comment on what they might testify."

Darrow was on his feet. The young attorney faced him bravely. "Do you want to put me on the stand" he asked.

"I want to tell you that the caption of this law forbids the teaching of evolution" Darrow said slowly, "the body of the act [illegible] forbids teaching any theory which conflicts with divine creation. The body of the act does not mention evolution, the caption nothing else. This means the state must prove that evolution means just that and nothing else. Bear that in mind."

Bryan To Speak

It was announced that William Jennings Bryan would speak to oppose the admission of scientific testimony.

EMPLOYERS RUN TO STATE COURT TO SAVE TAXES

In a petition for an injunction filed at Springfield the Illinois Manufacturers' Association has asked that the secretary of state be restrained from paying to the state treasurer moneys paid by Illinois Manufacturers under provisions of the Illinois state franchise tax act.

The franchise tax, the validity of which is now a question before the state supreme court, was recently dealt a severe blow by the United States supreme court which declared unconstitutional an act of the Ohio legislature almost identical with that of the franchise tax provisions of the Illinois general corporation law.

This tax amounts to 5 cents on each $100 of capitalization represented by business transacted in Illinois. As the money for the tax is now due, the Manufacturers' Association seeks to prevent its disbursement in hopes of having the law nullified.

SOVIET AGRICULTURAL EXPERIMENT STATIONS AID PEASANTS TO RAISE MORE CROPS; 1925 HARVEST GOOD

Moscow (By Mail)—Agricultural experimental work convention in the Russian Soviet Republic began on June 15. One hundred seventy-one delegates were present. The first report was read by Professor S. K. Chyanoff, who in 1924 visited the United States, where he studied the work of experimental stations.

According to this report, on October 1, 1924, the R. S. F. S. R. had 147 experimental stations, exactly the same as in pre-war days; but the amount of land attched to the stations is now three times greater. Also the amount of scientific workers has been increased. Much was accomplished by the stations in regions affected by draughts. The stations were able to raise 100 poods of rye and 40 poods of wheat on a desiatin, while the peasants' crop was not more than 10-15 poods.

Peasants Learn New Methods.

Much attention was paid to attract the cooperation of the peasantry. In 1924 over 6,500 peasant farms were utilized by the experimental stations to teach better methods of farming to pesants in general. Each experimental station had over 100 experienced peasants to help in this work.

Much attention was paid also to agricultural exhibitions. In 1924 various experimentl stations organized 26 of such exhibitions. Over 2,000,000 peasants in different ways were in touch with the experimental stations.

Much was done for the improvement of seeds. Twenty-eight of the agricultural stations are devoting special attention to this question. Up to June 16, the conditions of the harvest in the different regions of R. S. F. S. R. were as follows:

Harvest Conditions.

North Region: Winter and spring crops—average.

Northeast Region and Ural: Winter crops—average; spring crops—Average.

Northwest Region Winter wheat and rye—above average; spring wheat and rye—average.

Central Region: Winter rye—above average, except in a few provinces; but after the fall of rain the conditions in these provinces are better. Spring crop—average.

Blacksoil Region: In the west of this region, the winter crop is average; in the east, after rains the condition is about fair. The spring crop is average.

Upper Volga Region: The winter and spring crops are average.

Middle Volga Region: The Winter crop except in small parts of two provinces is above averge.

Low Volga Region: Winter crop except in one province is average. Spring—average.

North Caucasia: Winter crop is average. In many parts it is better. Spring crop is average.

The Amount of Crop Expected.

According to Narkomsem (Department of Agriculture) the amount of crop expected is estimated at 3,530,000,000 poods (including 160,000,000 poods of unused 1924 crops). Out of this amount 3,266,000,000 will be used by the population, and the remainder —264,000,000 poods—will be marketed abroad.

Rehabilitation of Mills.

In view of the exceptional crop in North Caucasia this year, attention has been given to effect improvements in the large flour mills of that region. They will handle 35,000,000 poods this season.

Soviets and Poles in Consular Pact.

Poland will have consulates in Moscow, Leningrad, Minsk, Tiflis, Kiev and some other cities, and there will be Soviet consulates in Warsaw, Lodz, Lemberg and Danzig.

Lithuania Spoiling the Anti-Soviet Block of the British Imperialists

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

TODAY, the outlook is not so rosy for Great Britain's Baltic bloc against the Union of Soviet Republics. The enmities aroused by the spoils divisions of the Versailles peace are too many to permit of easy sailing for the anti-Bolshevik league so dearly wished by the tory government in London, that sees its laboring masses at home getting redder every hour.

Lithuania is the latest stumbling block. Altho its population numbers but three millions, it occupies an important strategic position between the Poland-Roumanian front against the Workers' Republics and the Baltic states of Latvia and Esthonia, with Finland just across the gulf by the same name.

There have been scurryings to and fro, by British-inspired diplomats, among these states in an effort to ally the enemies of Soviet Rule. Finnish fascist government heads have reviewed the white guards of Esthonia. Meirovitz, the Latvian foreign minister, has made a tour of the capitals of Europe, to advance the cause of anti-Bolshevism. But all to no avail.

Lithuania still remains obdurate, spoiling the whole anti-Soviet plot, at least for the time being, because Poland still holds Vilna, seized along with one-third of Lithuania by the Polish general, Zeligowski, in the putsch of 1920, applauded and supported by the David Lloyd George government in England. There are not enough Vilnas at the disposal of British imperialist rule to satisfy both the Lithuanians and the Poles. The British have other schemes, however, including the return to Poland of the Memel corridor, which the Lithuanians took in 1923, if the Poles will only clear out of Vilna. Both Poland and Lithuania, however, raise the cry of "War!" immediately mention is made of any change in boundaries.

The Versailles peace established the League of Nations, which it was claimed would settle all of these disputes in behalf of capitalist interests. But "The League" has failed its masters here as everywhere else.

It was imperialist France that first tried to bolster the capitalist frontier against the Soviet Union, giving unsparingly in money and munitions to Poland, Roumania and other buffer countries. France went broke in this anti-Soviet endeavor, and now Britain is taking up the war, with equal prospects.

• • • •

How carefully London has planned its onslaught can be judged by the flood of propaganda that is being sent out, again trying to give the world the impression that uprisings, civil war and chaos are the order of the day in neighboring Soviet Ukraine, especially among the White Russians. The fact is that Poland still clings to White Russian territory, that should be under Soviet Rule, and all resistance is against further demination by the Polish oppressors, resulting in a bloody tyranny by the terror governments of Bulgaria and Roumania.

• • • •

Lithuanian capitalist rule has no love for the Soviet Union, but it knows that the development of Lithuania depends upon an economic alliance with Workers' Rule. But even this solution offers no escape from its dilemma. The workers and peasants of Lithuania, on the edge of the Soviet Republics, will in time decide to throw off their ruling class and follow the Russian example. Imperialist tyranny is finding it increasingly difficult to use the Baltic states to pull its capitalist chestnuts out of the Soviet fire. Especially with energetic struggles being waged against it as in Morocco and China, with India and other subject nations restless and on the verge of revolt.

"A labor bureau.

"Adjustment of the scales of the finishers.

"The above demands cannot be won thru commissions, for these demands the cloakmakers will have to conduct an energetic struggle. Thru a general strike alone will the cloakmakers win better conditions for themselves.

"Sisters and Brothers!

"We must not for one moment forget the experiences of the past.

"Our self-appointed leaders have until now pursued a policy which lead to demoralization, instead of depending upon our strength and our own fighting spirit, they relied upon miracles and favors from outsiders. By pursuing this policy, our working conditions have continuously grown worse, and our union led into degradation.

"If we are to save ourselves from this situation we must follow another course. We must follow the course of fighters and not that of beggars. But we must remember one thing: in order to be able to conduct a successful struggle our forces must be mobilized, our union must be reconstructed and its leadership cannot remain in the hands of irresponsible people. We must eliminate all obstacles that hampered us in the past. We must solidify all our fighting forces in order to win our struggles.

"To attain these ends we must not for one moment recede from our struggle against the leaders of the machine who have disrupted our union and betrayed the membership.

"Sigman Co., must be driven from the international, the three suspended locals and all expelled active union workers must be reinstated.

"The joint board must be reorganized on the basis of proportional representation. A closer and more harmonious contact must be established between the rank and file and the leadership of the union.

"These are the outstanding needs of the moment. These are the basic needs that must be realized in order to present a strong front in our struggle with the employers for our demands.

"Sisters and Brothers!

"We are living thru one of the most critical moments in our union and in our industry.

"For a long time we permitted ourselves to be led by a clique of irresponsible leaders who dragged us into all difficulties.

"Let us cease to follow blindly.

"Let us put a stop to this destructive work in our union.

"Enough, defeat, enough suffering, let us be on our guard.

"Let us build our union.

"Let us carry on our fight.

"Let us remember our old slogan: 'In the struggle only will we attain our rights. We have nothing to lose and the world to gain.'"

COAL MINERS REFUSE TO ACCEPT AUTHORITY OF EMPLOYERS' 'COURT'

HURLS CHARGE FASCIST KILLED ITALIAN DEPUTY

Senate Is Aware of Mussolini's Crimes

ROME, Italy, July 16.—The newspaper Epoca, which has until now been mildly pro-fascist, has published a document drawn up by the Aventine opposition to Mussolini in the chamber of deputies, charging that Mussolini knew of the plot to murder the socialist deputy Matteotti. The murder, and attacks on other opposition deputies were carried out with the assent of the fascist government, the paper charges.

The senate, the paper says, is in possession of sufficient evidence to show that crimes were organized under the uspices of the premier, to punish those opposing the fascist regime.

Coast Power Steal.

Berkeley, Cal.

The Daily Worker: Mayor Rolph—the smoothest politician hereabouts, tried twice to sell the Spring Valley Water Company, at the company's valuation to the city and both times failed by the vote route.

He fears this method in a deal now contemplated so the frame-up calls for a change of venue and the "principal" or his pals will do the trick in Washington.

The labor fakers here are, so far, rather quiet on the matter. They sense the rank and file as favorable to Rolph. The reason the rank and file are so is because Rolph, a water front coal importer, whose economic interests, in the recent days of "law 'n order" campaign of the chamber of commerce, clashed, and always showed sympathy in their strikes, was able to fool the workers, who believe today "Jimmie" is the honest cream cheese.

The whole situation here is another beginning of a power steal on about the same slant as Muscle Shoals.

CATCH CZARIST WHO SOLD BALKANS FAKE 'COMMUNIST PLOTS'

VIENNA, July 16—Alexander Jacobovitch, a Russian czarist, has been arrested here after being caught selling forged documents to Balkan governments which he pretended were written by officials of the Communist International.

The Balkan governments used these documents, knowing they were forged, it is charged. Numerous "Communist plots" were concocted by this czarist.

Eastern Bootleggers Form Trust; Work on Two Shifts, Many Die

NEW YORK, July 16—With the wiping out of rum row, bootleggers of Long Island, the liquor funnel of the East, have entered the distillery business on an organized basis, a survey disclosed today.

Along the scalloped coast line of the south side of Long Island, there is now a [illegible] "still" to almost every mile, laboring on a 24-hour shift to relieve the thirst of New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and adjacent ponts.

The product of the "bubbling mash" is shipped in highspeed trucks along the Rockaway turnpike into New York. The "goods" are generally disguised in five-gallon gasoline cans, bearing the forged name of a popularly known oil company.

"Within five years the country will no longer be dependent on foreign importations for liquor but can count on the domestic output. Can we make as good 'stuff' in a still? Perhaps now the 'goods' are a little green but we have the best chemists we can hire working for us," an employe of a bootleg syndicate said.

State commisioner of health Matthias Nicoll reports deaths from alcoholic poisoning in New York are increasing steadily.

NEW YORK TAXI DRIVERS START UNIONIZATION

Chauffeurs Organize Yellow Cabmen

(By Worker Correspondent.)

NEW YORK, July 16.—The drive to organize the exploited taxicab drivers of this city has started. The campaign is gaining headway and todate over 1500 drivers have lined up, to fight for a living wage and the right to organize.

The fight is being conducted by The International Brotherhood of Teamsters and chauffeurs, and the question on the lips of all the drivers in this city is, is the union going to organize the independent taxi drivers or the Yellow taxi drivers or both?

The men in the employ of the "open shop" Yellow Taxi corporation, have for the past two years, been waiting for the officials of the teamsters union to come to the garage where they work and organize them and as yet nothing definite has been done to encourage organization amongst these drivers, who are known to be the most exploited and the lowest paid men in the taxicab industry in New York state.

The Yellow Taxi corporation employs three thousand drivers and if the officials of the teamsters are sincere, they should start at once to organize in the garages of the Yellows.

Organized In Bronx

The current Taxi Weekly states: "Advice has reached this office that the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, stablemen and helpers is organizing extensively in the Bronx. Jack Treuhaft of 860 Dawson St., Bronx is in charge of all enrollment for that district.

"There is quite a need" he said, "for such an organization among taxicab drivers as the International Brotherhood. We have as many as 1,500 members already, and expect to greatly increase this number within the next two or three months.

"The Taxi Limousine Chauffeurs Union Local 643, desires good men. My own opinion is, when all the hackmen understand the advantage of this union that we will get practically 100 per cent membership."

Farmers Continue to Flock to City Survey Reveals

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 16.—The farm population of the United States decreased approximately 182,000 during 1924, according to estimates based on a survey of 25,000 representative farms made recently by the United States department of agriculture. This is a drop of .6 per cent during that year, the estimated farm population on January 1, 1925, being 31,134,000, compared with 31,316,000 on January 1, 1924. This estimate includes not only the agricultural workers, but all men, women and children living on the farms on that date.

The movement from farms to cities, towns and villages in 1924 is estimated at 2,075,000; the movement to farms was 1,396,000 making a net movement from the farm population of 679,000 persons, or 2.2 per cent. Births among the farm population during 1924 are estimated at 763,000 and deaths at 266,000 leaving a natural increase of 497,000 which reduced the loss due to the cityward movement to 182,000 or .6 per cent.

Fire Fighters Hurt

DENVER, Colo., July 16.—One man was injured, several fire fighters sustained slight burns and 1,000 acres of timberland were destroyed today in a forest fire that swept Coal Creek, 25 miles northwest of Denver. Scores of volunteer fighters battled the flames thruout the night and it was believed the fire was under control.

"GIFTS" OF OWNING CLASS ONLY AN INVESTMENT IN CONTINUING DICTATORSHIP OF CAPITALISTS

By LELAND OLDS

(Federated Press Industrial Editor)

GIVE Till It Hurts means nothing to the money princes who govern industry, endow education and generally distribute royal gifts to the glory of God and the admiration of the populace. They simply can't give till it hurts. They have too much. And if they could it would mean stepping down from the throne of exploitation to become a common man.

This is shown in an analysis of the gift of 16,000 shares of Standard Oil of California stock by John D. Rockefeller jr. to the Metropolitan Art Museum of New York. This gift was estimated to have a market value of about $1,000,000. It gave John D. Jr., front page in all the big dailies—something Mrs. Jones would never get if she gave $10 out of her insufficient wages to charity. But this $1,000,000 gift represents less than 1 per cent of Rockefeller's holdings in Standard Oil of California and less than a quarter of 1 per cent of his holdings in all the various companies composing the Standard Oil group.

In 1922, according to Dow, Jones & Co., Rockefeller, jr. held 1,902,016 shares of Standard Oil of California with a market value of $104,120,960. He held altogether in the several Standard Oil companies 7,638,390 shares representing about one-sixth of all the shares of these companies. The market value of his Standard Oil stock was figured at $410,000,000 with annual dividends totaling about $12,000,000.

THE magnicent gifts don't even represent a diminution in the control these multimillionaires exercise over industry. They give to institutions whose financial policy they govern. Take the General Education Board endowed by the Rockefellers with at least $126,000,000. The income from this huge sum represents tremendous influence upon the country's educational system. But the stocks held also represent an important block in the control of the oil industry, a block which cannot be split up thru inheritance.

The General Education Board holds 386,513 shares of Anglo-American Oil valued at $7,500,000; 163,460 shares of Ohio Oil Co. at $9,454,000; 42,099 shares of Prairie Oil & Gas at $5,696,512; 52,569 shares of South Penn. Oil at $9,540,510; and 737,680 shares of Standard Oil of New Jersey valued at $22,500,000, to mention only the largest of its blocks of oil stocks. Altogether the ledger value of Standard Oil stocks held by the board totals $68,569,000 which is probably under the true market value.

This huge block of oil stocks is permanently under the control of men who will represent the dominant financial interests.

COLLEGE funds also mean a similar large block of ownership in industry which can be manipulated by the financiers from whom all blessings flow. A survey by the bureau of railway economics found that 65 of the foremost educational institutions had productive investments to a total of approximately $532,000,000. Of this amount $148,271,000 was in railway securities.

Colleges with big blocks of railway securities include Leland Stanford in California with $13,907,000; Harvard with $13,681,000; Yale with $12,536,000; John Hopkins with $10,156,904; Columbia with $8,967,000 and Mass. Institute of Technology with $5,759,000.

Needless to say the dependence of universities on these securities for their incomes influences their view of the economic problem. Pennsylvania which fired Scott Nearing owns over $5,000,000 of railway securities.

DICKS ATTACK THREE Y. W. L. YOUTHS IN A NEW YORK RESTAURANT

NEW YORK, N. Y., July 16.—Three members of the Young Workers' League were viciously attacked by three dicks in a Borden Milk Co. restaurant on East Broadway. The three youths were quietly eating their meal and discussing various phases of the political situation in the United States. From the opposite direction of the room a thick jawed dick leaped at one of the comrades and shouting, "Get out of this country," and "Go back to Russia." Then landing his fist on one of the comrades, he swiftly ran out of the store.

Later, this same comrade, just as he was about to enter his home, he was again attacked, this time by three dicks. He fought them back, but being three against one they got the better of him and left him in a bleeding condition on the sidewalk in front of his house.

This is one example of the "peaceful" methods of our democracy.

BLACKLIST UNION MEN ABROAD, NEW OPEN SHOP PLAN

Government to Admit Only the Ignorant

WASHINGTON, July 16.—(FP)—Immigration inspectors have been detailed by the secretary of labor to American consulates at London, Liverpool, Southampton, Glasgow, Belfast, Dublin and Kobh (Queenstown) to act in the capacity of technical advisers to the consuls on immigration matters. This action was taken at the request of the secretary of state.

The secretary of the treasury has already assigned surgeons of the Public Health Service to act as medical examiners at these consulates. Both the immigration and medical advisers will co-operate with the consuls in issuing papers to prospective immigrants to the United States.

"The arrangement is in the nature of an experiment," says the official announcement, "to determine whether it is practicable to make such an examination before the embarkation of the immigrant as may be safely substituted for the major part of the examination now made at American ports of entry.

"If the experiment proves successful this method will be applied to other countries that express a willingness to have the examinations made in their territory."

CHINESE IN CANADA HOLD PROTEST MEET

Denounce British for Bloody Oppression

VICTORIA, British Columbia, July 4.—(By Mail)—While July 1 in Canada is celebrated as "Dominion Day" with all due ceremony, flags and so on; with the Chinese it was "Humiliation Day" recording the anniversary of their nation's humiliation.

Over 600 Chinese packed the assembly room of the Chinese Consolidated Benevolent Association on Fisgard St. and listened to many speeches, some fiery, urging the severance of diplomatic relations with Britain, and others more temperate. The more fiery speakers expressed the belief that there was a stage beyond which no self-respecting people could go without losing their independence.

Boycott Advocated

One moderate speaker counselled a complete and continuous boycott of everything British, with the boycott to be maintained against any country which enforced discriminatory laws against Chinese nationals.

Another speaker advocated the formation of a comprehensive union among the Chinese working in Canada, divided into sections covering domestic servants, industrial workers, etc., for the purpose of bettering their conditions and educating themselves in the modern methods of production.

The Chinese Immigration Act, 1923, was recounted clause by clause, the humiliating clauses being emphasized and the Chinese people everywhere were asked by one speaker to remember the indignity to which their countrymen in Canada had been subjected.

Protest Measure

Finally a resolution was passed with every solemnity, that telegrams and letters be sent to the Chinese government, demanding that in any settlement that may be sought of the present troubles in China, the demand must be made for the cancellation of all the humiliating clause from the Chinese Immigration Act of 1923.

Another resolution was passed pledging the full support, financial and otherwise, of the Chinese in Canada to the demands made by the late Dr. Sun Yat Sen for the denunciation of all unequal treaties, at whatever cost, even at the cost of war.

As a silent but striking further protest the local Chinese took down on Dominion Day every flag in Chinatown, of whatever sort, their own flags included.

"Crushed Fruit" Has Juice Abstracted, Government Finds

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 16.—Fruit from which the juice has been abstracted in part should not be labeled "Crushed Fruit" or with other similar designations unless the name is immediately followed by an equally conspicuous declaration that juice has been abstracted, according to a recent ruling by the officials of the bureau of chemistry, United States department of agriculture, who are charged with the enforcement of the federal food and drugs act. The ruling states also that sugar and artificial color, when added, should be plainly declared on the label.

Information has come to the bureau of chemistry to the effect that the product designated "Crushed Fruit" which is shipped to soda fountains is deprived of a considerable proportion of its juice. The juice is used in making fountain syrup, jellies and the like.

HINDENBURG'S "AMNESTY" FREES ONLY MONARCHISTS, FASCISTS AND SPIES, WORKERS KEPT IN PRISON

BERLIN, (By Mail) IRA.—The amnesty which was promised when the new president in Germany was elected, has not yet been proclaimed. Under the pressure of mass protests, however, Hindenburg has finally stated his noble intentions with regard to an amnesty. But do not ask what kind of an amnesty!

Mockery, a disgusting cynism, are the answer to the demand of the German working class for a general amnesty. What kind of an amnesty will it actually be? The government press publishes the following on it:

Mockery of Amnesty

"The amnesty includes all the cases of high trason, formation of secret societies, offences against the paragraphs 7 and 8 of the law for the protection of the republic as well as the crimes against the paragraph 5 of the decree of July 26th, 1922.

"The amnesty comprises all fines as well as jail, fortress and prison sentences up to one year. Hard labor sentences are excluded from the amnesty. The amnesty refers only to those sentences passed by national courts. (Reichs court and supreme state court.)

"Proceedings for offenses which are still going on, are stopped if the deed has been committed before the 1st of October 1923.

"This would include mainly the not yet tried participants in the Kapp Putsch. Apart from this national amnesty the states will proclaim amnesties. As the states will act uniformly, negotiations of a state amnesty are going on."

Hard Labor Prisoners Remain

This, then, is the decree which is presented to the German workers under the glorious name of an amnesty. It is actually a mockery of the political prisoners and of the German working class it is an amnesty which is no amnesty, for all prisoners who have been sentenced before October 1st, 1923 and are still in prison, are hard labor prisoners. They will remain in the class of the notorious German prisons.

And for those who have been persecuted after October, in the greatest time of unlimited class justice, the prison doors will not be opened at all. The many political trials which are still in preparation, are not stopped. For months and years prisoners have been awaiting their trials. The members of parliament Pfeiffer and Fritz Heckert, the leader of the C. P. G. Maslow and many others, all well-known Communist officials, will also be placed before the court.

Under such circumstances what does the amnesty bill of the government mean? For this one must know the judicial situation at present in Germany.

Craf Arco, the murderer of Eisner, is free but 23 participants in the Bavarian Soviet Republic of 1919 are still in the hard labor prison in Straubing. They have to do sentences from seven to 15 years. Today, six years after the bloody overthrow of the Munich Soviet Republic, the Bavarian court passes sentences against participants in this revolution.

Jagon, the only participant of the Kapp Putsch sentenced, is now free, but in German hard labor prisons there are still many proletarians who by their struggle against the Kappists saved the republic. Today still, five years later, proletarians are persecuted by class justice and thrown into prison because they have led the struggle against Kapp in accordance with the appeal of the national government, the political parties and the General Trade Union Federation.

The students of Marburg, the murderers of many workers in Mechterstedt, are free—but in the hard labor prisons there are still hundreds of workers who participated in the revolt of March 1921.

Hamburg Workers Not Amnesteed

The very few Hitler bandits who were sentenced for the Munich Putch of 1923 are free—but thousands and thousands of honest workers who prepared themselves for the defence against the attack of the fascists in October 1923, are in the hard labor prisons. Many of them have not yet been before the court and have been in prison already for 20 months.

The Hamburg exceptional courts have passed death sentences against revolutionary workers. Today still, as before the supreme state court, there take place endless trials against workers for participation in the Hamburg upheaval in October 1923.

The members of the secret murderers organizations, the murderers of Erzberger, Rathenau and those who committed attempt against Gareis and Scheidemann were sentenced by the supreme state court to the "unheard of" punishment of four months jail each.

They did not serve their sentences and are at liberty—while the participants in the so-called "Cheka," the victims of agents provocateurs and police spies, were sentenced to death and to long terms of hard labor with the breach of all legal rules.

Who will actually be included in this Hindenburg amnesty and what proceedings will be stopped?

Fascists Freed

All fascists and nationalist criminals who have been members of secret organizations, etc., everyone has got for his crime on the average a sentence of four months—need not serve their terms. The leaders of the Putsch in Kuestrin, of that monarchist coup d'etat of the Black Reichswehr, will be liberated, in short, only those will be amnesteed who were and are the pioniers and supporters of the German Hindenburg Republic.

The spies and the class justice has not yet been able to catch the organizers of counter-revolutionary attempts, who, as it is proves, live in Germany. They will be legalized by the amnesty. The proceedings against them will be stopped.

This "amnesty" of the monarchist government of the German republic will arouse a storm of indignation among the German workers.

SHOP NUCLEUS FORCES BOSS TO GRANT VACATION

Factory Paper Scares Employer to Action

By BERT MILLER

NEW YORK, July 16.—Shop Nucleus No. 11 has been successful in securing vacations for a number of workers in the shop. This result was obtained in this interesting way.

A short time ago, the nucleus published its first number of a shop paper. The paper contained a complete expose of the conditions in this particular shop. It showed up the unsanitary toilet conditions. It made plain the tricks used by the boss to fool the workers. It showed up clearly who were the stool-pigeons in the shop. It listed a number of demands which the workers should make and called upon them to organise. In fact the keynote of the entire paper was—organization.

Put In Tool Boxes

After the paper was gotten up, it was distributed in the tool boxes before the workers came to work. The workers in the shop read the articles and comments with the greatest interest. They were surprised and delighted to find an organ which dealth with their own conditions in the shop. "Every word" said one worker, "is worth its weight in gold."

Paper Brings Results

But of course a copy of the shop paper fell into the hands of the boss. At first he blundered blindly about not knowing what to do. Then, fearing the knowledge which the paper was spreading, fearing the discontent which might result, the boss began to institute a system of paid vacations for a number of workers who had been on the job for a certain length of time.

But the workers of the shop know full well why this was done and are looking gratefully to the Bolsheviks who started the shop paper which immediately brought such good results.

CROUCH AND TRUMBULL FEEL THE MAILED FIST OF U. S. GOVERNMENT

By WALTER TRUMBULL

(Special to The Daily Worker)

FORT SHAFTER GUARD HOUSE, HONOLULU, Hawaii, (By Mail)—The autocratic mailed fist of the military system in Hawaii is being felt by Comrade Crouch and me. To watch the authorities in action causes one to entertain grave doubts as to their sanity.

For instance, no "literature" is allowed in the guard-house. Even poetry is not permitted. Books on science, languages, military tactics and religion are permitted.

We can have newspapers, but the Century Magazine for instance, is prohibited by our czars. Musical instruments of all kinds are named in the "prohibited articles" list.

I requested that I be permitted to bring a book, dealing with the rudiments of music in the guard-house. The answer was: "No. Music is an art and art is prohibited." As a matter of fact, the composition of music is an exact science and becomes art only when interpreted in audible sound. The narrow-minded officers can not be expected to know that though.

On the morning of June 26, 1925, we went to work as usual. We were given an order at about eleven o'clock to report to the post adjutant. We reported to him and he called the "Officer of the day."

Returned to Guard-House

The conversation was as follows: "You are the officer of the day?" "Yes Sir." "These two men, Crouch and Trumbull are to be returned to the guard-house and are not to leave on this boat. They are not to leave the guard-house by hook or crook without an order from the dept. commander. Do you understand?" "Yes Sir." "You will be held personally responsible for these men. See that they get to the guard-house and keep them there."

We were returned to the guard-house and a sentry was posted inside the cell room to prevent us from speaking to each other. After one day the sentry was removed. Yesterday we went to work again.

Soldiers Eager For Communism

Most of the men at Fort Shafter are favorable to our cause. The field for propaganda is much greater here than at Schofield. We are doing all in our power to spread the truth and are listened to by eager soldiers on all sides.

I believe that I can safely says that four fifth of the enlisted personnel of the post are ready and willing to learn all about Communism. They are extremely friendly to us.

- - The International Co-operative Day - -

APPEAL OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF THE COMMUNIST INTERNATIONAL.

THE London International Co-operative Alliance was held July 4th; the Third International Co-operative Propaganda Day. This should be on occasion for the millions of organized consumers to examine very carefully this organization and its attitude to the severe struggles of the working class. The co-operative day takes place at a time in which the attack of world capital upon the working class has again made great progress. The "stabilizing" of the capitalist regime means an enormous increase of the exploitation of the workers in town and country: high prices, unemployment, wage-cuts and lengthening of working hours are burdening the shoulders of the working class. By means of hunger and misery, the imperialist powers scourge their work slaves in order to render them defenseless against the preparations which are being made in feverish haste for a new world war.

IN all countries of the white terror the co-operative societies are destroyed or economically ruined. In Bulgaria innumerable co-operators have been killed or cast into prison, the property of the greatest revolutionary co-operative society, "Osvoboshdenye," has been confiscated and a torture chamber for prisoners has been set up in the premises of the co-operative society in Sofia. The social democrats have supported all these shameful acts. In Italy thousands of co-operative societies have been burnt down by the fascists, numerous co-operatives have been voluntarily handed over to the fascists by the social reformists. In Hungary the social democrats have sold the great workers' consumers' co-operative society to Horthy. In Roumania the government of boyars has dissolved the Bessarabian co-operative society on account of its sympathies for Soviet Russia.

In Germany the co-operative societies are financially ruined. After their own capital has been squandered during the war in war loans, the co-operative societies have been delivered over to finance capital.

In Austria the policy of the social democrats has handed over the Hammerbrotwerke (Bakery) and the "nationalized" undertakings to finance capital. In Switzerland the co-operatives, under the glorious leadership of the bourgeois and of the social reformists, supported the policy of the big bourgeoisie, the custom tariffs and the forcing up of prices. In France the co-operatives, in spite of "harmonious collaboration" and in spite of their "valuable services" rendered during the war, are suffering from exceedingly heavy taxation. And in England, the motherland of the movement, the co-operatives are using their considerable strenght not in promoting the class interests of the proletarian membership, but they are acting as the supports and tools of the capitalist regime.

In all countries the co-operatives are becoming the fields of exploitation for big capital, sources of petty bourgeois illusions and strongholds of social traitors' policy.

In this time of severe struggles for existence on the part of the working class, of the need and misery of the members of the co-operatives and their families, of the advance of reaction and the threatening danger of war, the co-operative alliance, in its manifesto for the 4th of July, is again doping the masses with pacifist phrases.

IT is a mere mockery of the untold sufferings of the working class. It describes itself as the "germ cell of the United States of the world," and talks of "building up a happier social order." Behind the hypocritical mask of "political neutrality," the reformist and petty bourgeois leaders of the co-operatives are betraying both the political and the economic interests of the workers.

The workers and employees in the co-operatives are exploited just the same as the workers in capitalist undertakings. This is shown by the ever-increasing number of strikes and lock-outs in the consumers' co-operatives. The trade union demands are rejected. The prohibition of night work in the bakeries finds strenous resistance before all on the part of the co-operative bureaucrats.

A gigantic campaign of incitement is being conducted against the communists, who are summoning the masses to the fight against this anti-labor policy of the co-operative leaders. The leaders do not even shrink from expulsions and attempts to split the movement.

Empty phrases, injurious spreading of illusions and open treachery, that is the theory and practice of the co-operative reformists.

The co-operatives can only become a sharp weapon in the hands of the proletarian cosumers when they abandon the policy of coalition and reconciliation with capital and the bourgeoisie, and carry on, in common with the revolutionary workers' organizations, the fight for the defense of the interests of the workers.

Only when the co-operatives actively participate in the fight of the working class against high prices and profiteers, against the danger of war and fascism, will they become real fighting organizations of the proletariat on its way to overthrow capitalist exploitation.

Look at Soviet Russia!

THERE the workers and peasants together have overthrown the capitalist rule and established their Soviet Republic. There alone of all countries today is the co-operative foundation of the proletarian economic construction. There alone in whole world has the way been cleared for the economic and cultural advance of the working class.

Convert Co-operative Day into a day for drawing the masses of co-operators into the revolutionary class front. Only by means of your mass pressure can the co-operatives be converted into organizations for defending the working class.

Demonstrate on Co-operative Day under the slogans:

Against the capitalist and fascist offensive! Against the new preparations for imperialist war! Against the lowering of the standard of living of the masses! Against the unceasing treachery of the trade union and co-operative leaders! For the light of the co-operatives in the defense of the vital interests of the proletariat! For the proletarian united front and the international fighting alliance of the co-operatives with the trade unions! For the closest relations with the Soviet Co-operatives!

Long live the revolutionary class and fighting co-operatives!

The Executive Committee of the Communist International.

OPEN END OF SECRET PACT IS APPEARING

But Three Power Plan May Be Upset

(Special to The Daily Worker)

TOKIO, July 16—Japan approves the attitude expressed by President Coolidge and Secretary Kellogg regarding the imperialist powers' policy in China. A spokesman for the foreign office said today that Japan's attitude was "identical with that of the United States," and reaffirmed the belief expressed by President Coolidge that the Washington agreement "provides the best machinery for adjusting China's troubles."

This is regarded in intelligent circles as the open end of the secret agreement arrived at between Japan, Britain and the United States, to make a united front—while it can last—against the possibility that their own bloody suppression of the Chinese liberation movement may throw China into the friendly arms of Soviet Russia.

Imperialists Unite—For a While.

As stated yesterday, the Japanese, but more especially the British, agree to let goats be made of some of the brutal underlings who were responsible for the Shanghai massacre, in exchange for stalling the Chinese along with conferences and investigations and promises, while America agrees to give up her advantageous but hypocritical championing of China's rights by which she was figuring to obtain Chinese trade previously held by Britain and Japan, and in exchange obtains a united front temporarily for the double purpose of pretending to do something for China while really maintaining imperialist domination, and using all these factors against the most important foe of world imperialism—Soviet Russia.

It is particularly necessary for the imperialist powers to make a pretense of doing something for the aspirations of the Chinese people for national liberation.

Conference to "Consider" Not to "Abolish."

In this connection it should be accepted and reiterated that the imperialists have not agreed, either at the Washington conference or any where else, really to abolish the unequal treaties with their extra-territorial privileges. Readers of the DAILY WORKER will note that all diplomats' references to a proposed conference of the nine powers who signed the Washington agreement, do not say that such a conference "will abolish" the extra-territoriality rights, but "will consider whether" these rights shall be abolished—and when.

Unquestionably, China is going to be deceived if possible. Whether or not it is possible depends upon the keenness of vision of the Kuomintang party, which is leading the struggle and in which as an affiliated body is the Communist Party of China.

Can Defeat Imperialists by Cancelling Treaties.

The Kuomintang party can tear the mask off the tricky imperialists, and so direct the struggle that the destiny of the Chinese people can be solved by their own revolutionary power and not by the intrigues of diplomats in the foreign offices of imperialist nations.

This can be done by the Kuomintang forcing the Peking government by mass pressure, to declare the whole lot of unequal treaties abrogated and nullified.

Red Aid for the Chinese Workers.

The executive committee of the I. R. A. has sent to the trade union council in Shanghai $15.000 for aid purposes. Some time before it had already sent $1,000. The money is destined for the support of the families of the revolutionary fighters in China who have been murdered or injured in the struggle.

that would outlaw a war of aggression and brand the nation responsible for such a war, a criminal in the eyes of the others. The question of self-defense against invasion is not involved or affected. This is the joker in the pack. No nation ever admits being the aggressor; therefore all wars are defensive wars. The whole business is a joke anyhow. Peace under capitalism is impossible.

LEON TROTSKY has written a book that will not give much aid or comfort to Great Britain. According to lengthy reviews of the book appearing in the press Trotsky emphasises the fundamental conflict of interests between Britain and the United States, despite the fact that both powers have entered into a sort of an alliance. But the United States is constanly encroaching on England, while the latter's colonies are growing decidedly cool towards the "mother country." Trotsky predicts that the colonies will break with Great Britain in the next war. The capitalists have no love for the Soviet leaders yet they publish their stuff because it makes good news. The book was characterised as "uninspiring and not well written." We have our "doots."

THE king of Italy invited Mussolini to his palace for a rest. This is the first time in Italy history that a premier as been the personal guest of the sovereign. There was a belief in some quarters that King Emmanuel was the secret foe of Mussolini and the fascist regime. But it appears that both have come to the conclusion that it is better for them to hang together than to hang separately.

BY a decree of the fascisti party the next Italian elections have been postponed until 1929. Some of the American papers that rave against the dictatorship of the proletariat in Russia, commented in a friendly fashion on the latest fascsit kick at the corpse of bourgeois democracy. Other important incidents in recent fascist history are the white washing of general De Bono from complicity in the murder of Matteotti and the resignation of the minister of finance. The fascisti are squeezing the clamps of their dictatorship tighter as the opposition of the masses becomes stronger.

THE next time you read of a Communist plot start a guessing contest to see if you may not hit upon the factory in which the conspiracy was manufactured. The London Daily Herald reports that a certain Serge Druzhelovsky, a czarist refugee had a plant in Berlin where he turned out "Communist letters" in large quantities. He was the author of the "Red letter" which was used by the bloody Zankov of Bulgaria as an excuse to murder the Communists and agrarians. His latest forgery in the course of preparation, was a "secret instruction from Moscow" which he offered to the American embassy for $150.

CITY OFFICIALS BRIBED TO PASS BUILDING LAW?

Charge Politicians Accepted Money

The charges that city politicians were influenced by bribes of the brick trust culminating in the recommendation of the aldermatic building committee that no changes be made in the building code, which prohibits the use of hollow tile in construction, have grown so numerous that the states attorney has been forced to investigate.

An affidavit has been signed that building commissioner Robert Knight, who spoke against amendments which would cut the business of the brick makers, has frequently conferred with William Schlake, head of the brick trust.

It has also been charged that alderman and others received bribes, and that the cement manufacturrs offered a $50,000 bribe provided the tile amendments were carried.

The investigation is taking place in the state's attorneys' office and witnesses have been called.

Police Chiefs Admit Politicians "Fix" Judges in America

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., July 16—The International Association of Police chiefs in session here today admitted "politics interfere with justice."

Pointing out that in Canada judges are appointed for life and therefore are free from politics, chief constables J. Dickson of Toronto, Canada first vice president of the association said:

"It is my observation the root of your trouble in the United States is politics interferring with the police force and judiciary. In Canada, if anyone tried to approach the judge or policeman to "fix" a case his friend would get double the usual penalty."

GENERAL FENG FLAYS FOES OF CHINA FREEDOM

and indignation thruout the length and breadth of China.

How is it possible for such deeds to take place in a so-called independent country? Suppose they had occurred in America, France or Italy, or Kemal Pasha's Turkey, a declaration of war would have been swiftly made against Britain, because these countries are sovereign and independent, not on paper but in reality. But just as subjugated India could not declare war against Britain for the Amritsar massacre, so China is unable to declare war against Britain for the recent British massacres at Shanghai and elsewhere.

Under Foreign Yoke.

Foreign imperialism, led by Britain, holds our country in real subjection. Foreign imperialism acts under the unequal treaties, the first of which was imposed on China by Britain in 1842. On the basis of these treaties, the imperialist powers have developed an international system of rule under which:

(a) British and other foreign nationals are not bound by our labor, factory, or fiscal legislation, nor by any other of our national laws and are wholly outside of the jurisdiction of all our courts of justice.

(b) British and other foreigners govern areas known as settlements (like Shanghai), concessions, and leased territories, which are really strategic fortresses where foreign capitalism controls and dominates our import and export trade and fixes and regulates (in the interests of foreign owned banks and international finance) the money exchange rate between China and the world's money market. These centres, serving as safe asylums for defeated militarists and corrupt officials, do in fact constitute a real factor of political disorganization and administrative inefficiency and corruption in China.

Big Dumping Ground.

(c) Owing to foreign control of our customs administration not only is China denied the right to fix her own customs tariff, but she is undoubtedly becoming an international dumping ground for the products of the sweated labor of the capitalist states of the world.

Nationalist China, in whose name I speak, demands liberation from the imperialist system, which is based on the unequal treaties, and therefore the abrogation of these treaties and the negotiation of new ones on the principle of China's equality with every other sovereign and independent state. As long as foreign imperialism holds my country in subjection, the repetition of British massacres like those at Shanghai is inevitable.

And while we are a patient and peaceful people, there is a limit to our capacity for suffering massacres at the hands of the British imperialists. —Feng-Yu-Hsiang.

RUMANIAN TERROR TRIES FIVE HUNDRED BESSARABIAN PEASANTS FOR ATTEMPT TO FORM SOVIETS

BUKHAREST, Rumania, (By Mail)—According to information of the press the trial of the 500 peasants of Kishinev was to take place on June 28. In connection with this it is rather interesting to recall an insurrection of the Bessarabian peasants, that took place in the year 1919.

The Rumanian occupants who obtained in the year 1918 the appreciate title-deed of "voluntary" annexation of Bessarabia to Rumania, felt rather on their high horse and began to rule with the aid of whip and bayonet. The registration and simultaneous requisition of grain-supplies was announced. After a few days a severe conflict sprang up with the representatives of the local authorities; single cases of murders, assassination of gendarmes and military representatives of the occupants took place.

Peasants Revolt Against Tyranny.

The rural gendarmes were given unlimited power and we have to do justice to them—they made good use of it. Every village, every hamlet turned into a separate kind of some vassal's princedom, where the sovereign was the gendarme, endowed with the right to "execute and pardon." The logical respond to such a system of government was the unanimous revolt of the North of Bessarabia before the anniversary of the "reunion" between the "Tsaria Mumy" (mother country) and its "daughter"—Bessarabia.

The revolt broke out in the county of Khotinsk and spread quickly over the Soroksk county that is mainly populated by Moldavians. The spontaneous cruelty with which the peasants got even with the occupants can illustrate best the tender "love" that the whole population of Bessarabia cherished towards Roumania. Almost the entire population took part in the insurrection. The avenging hand struck first the celebrated Rumanian hangman, Gen. Pasta, who was killed in the village of Ataka by the 17 year old son of a worker. In the village of Oknitsa a 50 years old peasant personally fired from machine-gun at the offensive Rumanian cavalry.

During two weeks the revolted district enjoyed full liberty. The occupants became perplexed not being in a position to master the high tide of the mass rebellion. The insurrection grew with irresistible rapidity. The Rumanian soldiers were captured by scores and as it seemed, it was only necessary to get in touch with the center of Bessarbia and success was secured.

Needed Workers' Aid.

But the rebels could not avoid the general fate of all the spontaneous peasants' movements that are not supported by the will-power of the industrial proletariat. Soon reinforcements arrived from the center of Rumania and with the aid of the army "order" was "reestablished." The cable announcing that the insurrection had been put down runs as follows: "After prolonged resistance the Bessarabian rebels were dislodged from Khotin by the gathered united force. The rioters retreated beyond Dniester."

According to to data given by the [illegible] department of Kamenetz-Pedolsk there are 50,000 peasants living in the one county of Kamenetz who "retreated beyond the Dniester."

How "order" was reestablished can be seen from the ruins on the road between Khotin and Novoselquts of former villages that have been leveled to the ground by artillery fire.

Second Uprising for Soviet.

The insurrection of the northern Bessarabian peasants in the year 1919 is quite a different one from the insurrection of the peasants in the South. The first one was a spontaneous unorganized movement of peasants who marched out against the occupants without any definite platform. The second was an insurrection of peasants who warched with arms in their hands against the Rumanian oligarchy; they carried with them a banner on which was written the slogan of the battle: "Long Live Soviet Bessarabia."

SOLDIER JAILED AFTER PROTEST ON CROUCH CASE

Paper Gives Letter to Army Authorities

By WALTER M. TRUMBULL

FORT SHAFTER, Guard House. Honolulu, Hawaii—(By Mail)—It has come to light that a soldier in the 3rd Engineers, Schofield Bks., Hawaii, had a letter of protest concerning, the Crouch-Trumbull case returned to him.

The soldier, having learned of our imprisonment, wrote to the Honolulu Advertiser informing them of the jailing of the two Reds and protesting against the illegal proceedings.

Advertiser Suppressed News

His letter, written in March, was not published but was turned over to army authorities by the Advertiser. It is significant that this paper knew of our case about a month before our trials and yet witheld the news.

About the 15th of May, the letter was returned to the writer by a member of the staff of the office of the assistant chief of staff, G-2 Hawaiian Division.

Confined To Guardhouse

The manner in which the letter was returned conclusively showed that the authorities wanted the soldier to know how completely they control the press here.

The same soldier is in confinement at present, charged with the most trivial offense. He has endured considerable persecution without murmer and the guardhouse is the climax.

cuss the question, no vote was given them to ratify or reject the illegal agreement, and no explanation were offered them.

The miners of that valley were offered a settlement at the old wage scale, which was in existance prior to the latest cut, or attempted cut, and were further offered the right to belong to whatever union they wished to, and the guarantee that the coal operators would recognize their union, providing the men would go back to work pending a settlement for the whole valley. This the men refused to do and are standing for an agreement for the whole valley, and the right to have one union of the men's choosing.

In the face of this the union officials have signed an agreement that is a great deal worse than the one that the men could have got themselves, and in a desperate effort to put it over the labor fakers are resorting to any and all methods they think necessary to accomplish their treacherous desires.

Police Begin Violence

On Thursday evening July 9th, a group of boys were playing near the coal company's property when a dozen or more policemen chased the boys down the hillside, and sent a couple of shots into them, striking one boy who today lies in a very critical condition with no hope of recovery. Everything that can be done to goad the men to commit violence is being carried on to supply the excuse needed for a general massacre, but up to the moment of writing the friends of Lewis with their gunmen and police have failed to break the spirit of the strikers, or succeed in their attempt to split solidarity.

The Drumheller men are determined to fight for an agreement for the whole of the valley with no reductions in wages, or reduced condition and the balance of the men in the valley are rallying to their support, even the scabs quitting and repudiating the coal company.

The following resolution was passed at one of the local unions, and shows the sentiment of the men in the district, and their feelings for their fake officials.

To Officers and Members of District 18, U. M. W. of A.—Greetings,

"WHEREAS, the present district officials have by their policy of class collaboration, deliberately played into the hands of the coal operators, causing the disruption of District 18, and

"WHEREAS, our district officers have viciously attacked the active union men of the district, more especially those of Sub-District 5, and are at present openly sabotaging their duty, acting as dictators rather than as servants. They have not only negotiated a wage reduction for the Red Deer Valley Mine Workers, but have done so without the sanction of the rank and file or their representatives and without taking a referendum vote on the question of endorsing the new wage scale, and

"WHEREAS, they are now openly co-operating with the coal operators of the Drumheller Valley, and with the police in forcing the miners of Sub-District 5 to accept unthinkably low standards of living, and at the same time pay per capita to the present incompetents in the district office, which action from the point of view of the workers, amounts to betrayal after betrayal

"THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED, that this local union circularize the remaining locals of old District 18 demanding that they force the present district officers to resign, and make room for such miners' representatives as will work in the interests of the mine workers and the working class as a whole, and

"BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, that we are for the SOLIDARITY of the mine workers of this district, for a union in reality, not merely union in name; we are against splits, even though those who are working for a split profess to seek the interests of the United Mine Workers of America, and

"BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, that we will not tolerate another commission in this district."

"Your fraternally,

ROY REID,
JOHN MICHAYLUK,
J. PEEREN,
Resolutions Committee."

1924 Production Only Five Per Cent Below 1923, Hoover Reports

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 16.—"The American people have little cause to complain of our economic situation during the year 1924, "says Herbert Hoover in a foreword to Commerce Year Book. Even agriculture has shown partial recovery and industrial production was only 5 per cent less than 1923, the banner year.

BUILDERS AT WORK

This Is the Second Important Notice

Twice for Importance

For the second time notice is being made in this column of the special Anti-Imperialist (July) issue of the WORKERS MONTHLY.

The importance of a wide distribution of this issue cannot be stressed enough. Today when Imperialism is becoming an ever more important question to the workers, when the Chinese situation is drawing world wide attention, it is most essential to distribute a Communist analysis of the meaning of imperialism to the working class.

Just What's in This Issue

For the information of every worker (and the shop and trade union are the best places) this issue of the WORKERS MONTHLY gives sidelights on not only the new development in China but many angles on our own American Imperialism and its many and increasing tenacles. Just what Imperialism is, how it operates, why—and how it affects the working class—all these questions are answered for the worker in this special issue of the WORKERS MONTHLY which is one of the very best that has ever appeared.

The many photographs and splendid cartoons are additional features to draw the interest of every worker. Get a bundle of this issue at once. Sell it, distribute it—Build the American Communist movement!

A Word About Free Distribution

A few hundred copies of back numbers still remain in our files. The best place for these copies to be is in a worker's hands. Will you help us get them there? A free bundle of back numbers of the WORKERS MONTHLY will be sent to you without charge and postpaid IF you will see to it that they are distributed where they will do most good.

Here is a splendid way to do a nice job of Communist propaganda work. Will you do it? Tell us how many copies you can use—you'll get them in a hurry.

Letters from Our Readers

He Likes Our Paper.

To the DAILY WORKER: I congratulate you. You are getting out a Red Hot Paper! So much information about world-wide events which the organs of plutocracy will not publish.

I became a radical 30 years ago. I was a "working stiff" then. Now I work the bees and the orchards.

I am a member of the socialist party of California by virtue of registration only. I have been a candidate of said party many times, came within 300 votes of being elected to the city council in 1911.

How They Betrayed Workers.

The socialist party is dead and what is left of it is a joke. I was chairman on arrangements two years ago when they trotted poor old brokendown Debs out to the west to reorganize?—no, to get the cash. The yellow state committee set the admission fee at $1.00 and $1.50. When I protested and said in an angry frame of mind that the "working stiffs will not and cannot pay that price," I was told by Alexander Horr (the little Napoleon) "we don't want the working stiff." Well, they didn't get them either. Did they rebuild the party at that time? Bunk! They talked loud as long as the money lasted.

After the state convention last fall we had some meetings in a park here in Sacramento. The yellow bosses told us "We should not mention socialism."

I have seen so much dirty work in the socialist party in the last few years, I must say, "how can they expect an honest radical to join such company?" Why is it that they use only poor old Debs? Why don't they send some of their damned shyster lawyers out?

Cooperatives Under Capitalism.

I was a director of a so-called marketing exchange of California. I was put on the state executive committee. Then I learned that I was expected to help the First National Bank of Los Angeles saddle a debt of $367,000 on the honey producers of California. They promised me the job of president. I absolutely refused and I told the members "tell them to go to hell." All this happened between 1918-22. They have since tried to collect the $367,000 with small success.

Practically every co-operative marketing echange is under a Dawes plan. I call co-operating marketing a new and better way to skin the cat. And only a damned fool will stay with such a crooked game.

I am waiting for the new crop so will send only $3.50 for six months now. But you can count on my being a regular subscriber.

When I am called a Bolshevik, I say: "Thank you for the compliment." Best wishes, Very fraternally yours, Caspar Nauser.

They Die Young.

To the DAILY WORKER: My work as salesman takes me to the stores in a part of town in which the workers live. Hundreds of young girls work in the stores, laundries and packing houses. These girls are in their teens and should be attending school instead of slaving long hours for meager wages. Their only refuge is marriage so they marry early in life to some man from the working class and start a home furnished on the installment plan.

The income of this new family is small at best. Then unemployment periods make their appearance and there is no income. But the installment payments, they continue regularly.

Such a life soon leaves its imprint on the young wife and mother and before she is thirty she looks haggard and worn. Their bodies weakened by worry, overwork and undernourishment the first disease that comes along carries them off. Few live be-

A complete check-up on casualties has not yet been possible.

The cause of the explosion has not been announced.

Wall Street's Four Fronts in China

The insistence of the American state department on a conference of all powers signing the treaties of the Washington convention to go into the question of extra-territoriality rights in China, delivered to President Tuan Chi-jui by Ambassador McMurray, is evidence of the widening breach between American and British imperialism and American and Japanese imperialism.

Coming at a time when Australia is in the American market for a $100,000,000 loan and the biggest American fleet ever assembled in the Pacific is making a tour of the Far Eastren ports, only a blind man can fail to see that the much touted Anglo-American bloc is only a veil for a deep-seated and irreconcilable conflict between these two dominant imperialisms.

Under the guise of friendship for the Chinese government and people, American imperialism is putting tremendous pressure on her British and Japanese rivals in China. They now enjoy advantages of extra-territoriality and control of customs revenues in which American imperialism does not participate. To demand the same advantages would be to undeceive many Chinese who see in America a friend because she has not heretofore insisted on special privileges and gone in for extensive armed conquest as have the British and Japanese.

It is much simpler and more effective to force Britain and Japan to relinquish their advantages and in this way place American imperialism on an equal footing with them in China.

American finance capital has nothing to lose and everything to gain by such a policy.

It has one advantage in particular—America appears in China as a champion of the territorial integrity of the Chinese republic and thus serves to offset the influence of Soviet Russia—the proletarian power that American imperialism is shrewd enough to recognise as its real enemy in China.

American imperialism is operating in China on three fronts openly—against Great Britain, against Japan, against Soviet Russia. Secretly it is fighting on another front—against the liberty of the Chinese masses.

Just as Wall Street in Mexico frees the Mexican masses from the oppression of British imperialism so that it can set up a more stringent form of slavery under its hegemony, so in China it demands the abolition of extra-territoriality laws in order that it can have at least an equal opportunity with Great Britain and Japan to enslave the millions of Chinese workers and peasants.

That it will have to fight Great Britain or Japan, or both, to establish equal rights for American imperialism is unquestionable. The anti-Japanese attitude of the American press seems to indicate that Japan will be the first foe.

The drive for militarisation of the nation, the increased naval appropriations, the anxiety over the fortifications in the Pacific possessions are sure signs that American imperialism prepares for war in the Pacific.

To challenge the extra-territoriality rights of Britain and Japan in China means war and this is exactly what American imperialism is doing.

The slogan of the next war can almost be heard now:

"Freedom and American democracy for China."

In 1898 we "freed" Cuba with a similar slogan.

The Chinese masses will achieve freedom in spite of the American imperialists if the American working class forces a genuine "Hand Off China" policy and keeps the bloody hands of Wall Street from the throats of the Chinese workers and peasants.

Darrow Sidesteps in Dayton

Fundamentalists can be understood. They stand on the bible as the word of their god and close their minds to reason.

Believers in the materialist conception of history stand on the sure ground of science and are able to show that religion has evolved from the fears and ignorance of our savage ancestors—that geology, ethnology, biology, physics, chemistry and the kindred sciences, historical research and the sociological sciences all prove the mythical character of all religions.

Communists are content to rest their case against religion on scientific proof with additional evidence of its use to enslave mankind.

But what can be said for the defenders of Scopes who seek to prove that a belief in evolution is compatible with a belief in religious dogmas—that there is no conflict between religion an science?

The best that can be said for them is that they are even bigger fools than the fundamentalists who have enough fanatical cunning to feel that the issue is between religion and science, between light and darkness.

The theologians of all ages have fought every advancement of knowledge. They have fought also that freedom of inquiry which leads to knowledge and the opening of the Scopes trial with prayer at each session is symbolic of the belief in a being to whom appeal from the decisions of earthly men can be taken.

It is no far cry from the human sacrifices on the altars of tribal gods to the spectacle in Dayton, Tennessee. Nor is there any great difference between the banishment of the jury when scientific evidence is being taken and the secret hearings and torture of the inquisition.

No conflict between religion and the doctrine of evolution?

No conflict between religion and science?

Whoever does not know that this is one aspect of the age long struggle between master and slave is a fool and who knows and still denies it is a hypocrite.

The need of modern capitalism for scientific processes and mastery of nature has served to gloss over the conflict between religion and science and conceal its essentially class character. The Scopes defense is fighting no clean cut battle, but more than the mediaeval-minded Bryanites is befogging the issues involved.

Only the Communists stand squarely against religion as "the opium of the people."

The Militarization of Railway Labor

By William F. Dunne

AMERICAN railroads are ready for the next war.

At a conference held in Washington, the exact date of which is not known but which was reported in the New York Times of June 22, a complete scheme for mobilization of rail transport was submitted to the gathering composed of "rail transportation officials and businessmen."

The basis of the scheme for military control, as outlined by Assistant Secretary of War Davis to the conference is:

1. Possession and control by the government of the lines taken over is essential in order that the government, in carrying out the war program, may make the necessary demands upon the railroads and insure obedience to these demands as a matter of right.

2. Effective mobilization and use of the transportation resources is impossible unless the lines taken over are operated as a single system under one control and one administration.

3. Requirements of the government can be carried out most effectively, intelligently and successfully by availing of the existing organizations of the several companies and by making full use of the trained experience and skill of their personnel. Too violent changes in either organization or methods of procedure are liable to have an adverse effect on efficiency and morale.

THE army appropr'ations act, passed August 29, 1916, gives the president, acting thru the secretary of war, the power to take possession and control of the railroads. This law was enacted six months before this country entered the world war in April, 1917.

How many people know of such a measure?

The control of all matters relating to the railroads, under the scheme placed before the conference, will be vested in the hands of a single individual appointed by the secretary of war. There will be an executive board of railroad presidents who will be nominated by the Association of Railway Executives subject to the approval of the secretary of war. This executive board will deal only with questions of policy, however, the actual management of the roads being vested in the secretary of the war department and his assistant. The plan states:

> ....it should be the policy of the secretary of war to encourage the initiative and management of his executive assistant by placing upon him the responsibilities for general management.

THE railroads are not going to lose any revenue under the plan. They will be paid:

> ....a sum equivalent to the average annual net railway operating income for the three years ended on the thirty-first day of December next preceding.... except that if exceptional or abnormal conditions were fund by the president to exist during all or a substantial portion of such period of three years which justify a larger or smaller compensation..... and in any event due allowance in the compensation should be made for the use of additions, improvements or equipment, the use of which was not fully reflected in the operating railways revenue of the said three years....

THE railway owners seem to have taken care of themselves very well in the matter of payment for their properties while the war necessity exists. The question arises:

Why, since the capitalist press of America constantly points out the superiority of private over government control, continually lauds the efficiency of the present railway management and fights militantly all measures for the extension of government control, have the railway executives, who since the last war have been claiming that government control ruined their properties, submitted tamely to the plan proposed by the war department?

THERE are probably two reasons: First, the Coolidge administration can be trusted to work no hardship of the railway stockholders and to see that the clause in the war plan dealing with compensation is interpreted liberally—in meaning and in cash.

Second, there is the feeling that the international situation is pregnant with war and that in the event of hostilities it is better to militarize the railroads before railway labor gets a chance to take advantage of the situation. The most militant opponents of government interference in business never hesitates to encourage such interference when it will aid him in crushing labor.

THE railway brotherhoods are the most conservative unions in America. They do not strike, they feel, for the most part, that they are part of American capitalism and are loyal to what are called "American institutions." They have made no protest while the process of militarizing the transportation systems has been going on.

The unions have said nothing while skeleton army units have been set up on the railroads and the master mechanics, trainmasters, roadmasters, division superintendents general managers all the official personnel have acquired militancy rank in the national army ranging from lieutenant to general.

The officialdom of the railway unions have made no protest while a steel web of military discipline, which can be tightened the moment a Wall Street president declares a "national emergency," has been woven around the membership.

THE railway workers of the United States have already become part of the military forces of the American imperialism. Most of them do not know it yet but they will learn the bitter truth when they find that they have been drafted to serve under the same bosses they have to fight to prevent their standard of living being reduced. These bosses have been given military rank, the railway workers will be the troopers, their daily tasks will be to carry out the orders of superiors who can and will order them before a firing squad the moment they protest—in "a national emergency."

Who is so foolish as to think that the rulers of America go to all this trouble for "defense?" Or that unless they have plans of world domination leading inevitably to wars of conquest, they secure agreement from the railway capitalists for government control, under the dictatorship of two men—the secretary of war and his assistant—at a time when violent protestation of the peaceful intentions of America emanate from the White House daily, and the slogan of "no government in business" resounds in every haunt of the ruling class and its hangers-on, from the Civic Federation, the Security League and the Union League Club to the humblest gathering of kiwanises and rotarians?

NO! The American railroads, so far as railway capital is concerned, are ready for the next war.

It remains only to consolidate the skeleton military units on the railroads into actual regiments and divisions officered by the same individuals whom the railway workers have to fight in peace time. War, being the extension of capitalist competition to it logical conclusion, makes it logical also that the railway workers should, as part of the imperialist war machine be bullied by the agents of the railway capitalists.

LET the railway workers examine the evidence submitted here. The evidence of their betrayal into the hands of war-mongers.

They will see that while the railway labor board has been fighting them on matters of small wage increases and working conditions, the rest of the government apparatus has been strenghtening the machinery by which the workers can be deprived of their civilian status at any time the rulers decide it necessary.

In every local union of every railway organization this matter should be brought up and the official instructed to immediately organize the unions for resistance to this wholesale militarization. If the officials do not act it is proof that this scheme has been carried out with their knowledge and that the membership must devise ways and means of bringing mass pressure on both the union officials and the government for the repeal of all military measures.

The time to begin to fight this industrial conscription for imperialist war is now.

MAY KEEP BRYAN FROM MAKING AN ASS OF HIMSELF

But It Will Be Hard Job for the State

DAYTON, Tenn., July 16.—William Jennings Bryan, haled as the "evangelical leader of the prosecution," may be barred from making a new "cross of gold" speech in the Scopes anti-evolution trial, it was learned today.

Altho he has waited in the stuffy courtroom for a week fanning himself patiently while other orators held the spotlight, Bryan may be counted out in his chair. Under the prosecution's present plans, it was learned, Bryan will not be called upon to speak upon any point of law. If he does speak, it will be on evolution and its relation to the bible, which the defense has been trying to expound in the trial.

If the defense fails in this effort, as was widely predicted today, the champion self-advertiser will be without a subject for the first time in his life. He will have come from Florida, dropping his Chautauqua engagements, merely for a vacation in a heat stricken community, far from the luxuries of life. For if the scientific evidence is forbidden by Judge John T. Raulston, Bryan will likewise be prohibited from touching upon evolution, from attacking the modernist cause, from defending fundamentalism and from endorsing the biblical story of the divine creation of man.

These subjects eliminated, the noted real estate dealer might just as well have remained in Florida. His speech, if he makes one under these circumstances, could deal only with the testimony of two fair haired high school youngsters who said Scopes taught something or other from page 155 of Hunters' biology.

Omaha Street Meetings Win Workers' Interest in Communist Movement

OMAHA, Nebr., July 16.—We held very successful street meetings in Omaha with Comrade J. E. Snyder talking on class war prisoners, general strike, unity movement, imperialism and the Chinese situation. We had good crowds and the DAILY WORKER, the Workers' Monthly and our party literature were sold and distributed. These meetings brot us a large number of inquiries and we feel they were highly worthwhile.

Tho Comrade Snyder has left for Sioux City to join Alfred Knutson for a speaking trip thru the small towns and farming communities, the open air meetings have not been stopped. Comrade David Coutts is delivering splendid talks every evening at 16th and Capital Ave., between 8 and 9:30 with Comrade Patten acting chairman. All readers of the DAILY WORKER are invited to attend.

"Pacifist" For Big Navy.

LOS ANGELES, July 16. — David Starr Jordan, the liberal pacifist, declared in a speech before the council of international relations a "peace" organization, that "as long as the United States has a navy, it ought to be a good one."

Jordan spoke on the same platform with Secretary Wilbur, who condemned the pacifists and spoke for further armament.

HANG SCOTT ON SON'S BIRTHDAY, NOT ALLOWED TO EMBRACE HIS WIFE

Six feet of space between them, not permitted to embrace one another and two guards present, Russell Scott and his wife, Catherine, bade their last adieu today.

Scott is to hang this morning for the murder of Joseph Maurer, a drug store clerk.

"Don't tell my little boy that his father was hanged on his seventh birthday," he said.

Governor Small denied appeals by Mrs. Scott and Scott's father that he intervene in the execution.

FRANCE NOT TO LEAVE COLOGNE AS PACT PRICE

PARIS, July 16.—The foreign office announced today that should Herr Stresemann, German foreign minister, in his reply to Foreign Minister Briand make the military evacuation of Cologne a condition precedent to the entry by Germany into a security pact, the reply would be entirely unacceptable.

Rumors that such a condition would be proposed by Berlin have reached the Quai d'Orsay.

Forest Fires Sweep Montana and Idaho, Still Uncontrolled

MISSOULA, Mont., July 16.—"The most menacing in many years" was the way officials today characterized the forest fire situation thruout Montana and northern Idaho.

Two new fires were reported from the Custer national forest in eastern Montana, previously considered "fire proof."

A total of more than 100 fires have been reported in western Montana, and the Idaho panhandle. Many of these have been controlled, but others have spread until scores of dangerous fires are now burning in the Kootenai, Pend O'Reile and Kankishu national forests.

Cal Boosts Commercial Aviation.

SWAMPSCOTT, Mass., July 16—President Coolidge today accepted the resignation of Col. Paul Henderson, of Chicago, as second assitant postmaster general, effective July 31.

"I understand you are engaged in commercial aviation," the president wrote. "Altho this is not work for the government I feel sure that you will contribute to the progress of commercial aviation in such a manner as to render a public service."

The government feels that the commercial planes can be turned into a war fleet on short notice.

MEXICAN GENERALS IN DUEL TO DEATH OVER FAVORS OF SHOW GIRL

MEXICO CITY, July 16.—Identities of the two generals said to have fought a duel to the death over a Mexican show girl remained hidden today. Army officials promised the names would be made known when a complete investigation had been made.

violence, claiming that there were acts of violence committed every day.

"You have a hundred policemen on the job, they seem to handle the situation pretty well for you," replied Cunnea.

Always Urgent.

"This is an urgent matter," repeated the bosses' shyster.

"Did you ever see one of these requests for an injunction against strikers that wasn't urgent for the employers?" asked Cunnea.

Judge Foell became very much interested in the violence charges. "Violence must stop," said the judge. "Will you give me your word that violence will stop, Mr. Cunnea?"

"If there is any violence committed it is instigated by the employers and the police," said Cunnea. "They arrest men and women there indiscriminately, and finger print them as if they were criminals."

Who Expects Foell to "Look Favorably?"

Judge Foell warned the attorney for the strikers to tell his clients that he would not look very favorably on their side of the case if acts of violence continued (as if a capitalist judge would ever look favorably on the workers' side of the case.)

Cunnea tried to have the case set over until Friday while the bosses' attorneys pleaded again for an immediate hearing. With two cases on his hands already set the judge said he probably would have to wait until Friday to hear the injunction plea.

Three More "Criminals."

Yesterday two strikers were arrested absolutely without any cause, and another got a place in the wagon for good measure. The strikers gathered around the wagon and gave the victims rousing cheers, to which a police sergeant objected and threatened arrest of demonstrators. But nobody paid any attention to him or any other cop.

Yesterday the Italian business agent, De Felichi, addressed the strike meeting and got an enthusiastic reception. The meeting was interrupted somewhat by camera men taking pictures of the crowd of strikers. Everybody was jolly and wanted to get into the picture and show their faces among the workers who are standing firmly for the Amalgamated Clothing Workers Union and against the open shop.

New Trick—Same Old Failure.

The I. T. C. is now trying something new to get scabs. It has obtained, by some underground manner of co-operation with other bosses, names and addresses of workers whose previous employers went out of business for one reason or another. Figuring that these workers might still be looking for a job the firm gets the address and sends the worker a letter offering him or her a nice job scabbing—altho it don't say so—at "union wages."

This is another case where the solidarity of the capitalist class is proven, and the strikers are learning to match the bosses in unity—and since the workers have more power than the bosses when they are really united, the outlook is good. The following is a letter received by a worker whose boss went out of business several weeks ago:

"Mr. R. Leesa, 2512 Haddon Ave., Chicago, Ill.

"Dear Sir:—The firm last employing you discontinued business in Chicago because—well, I guess you understand the conditions.

"We offer you now a position in your own line of work at regular union wages. We are going to stay in business in Chicago and to work for us you won't need to wait untill you are at the top of the list. How many thousands are there ahead of you on the list?

"Come in and see us—work under union conditions—receive regular wages and good full envelopes.

"We have always had the best paying positions in Chicago and that condition will continue to remain so.

"Yours very truly,

"International Tailoring Company.

"Bring this letter with you."

This trick is not the first and will likely be not the last one the open shop firms who are aided by the scabby United Garment crew will try to pull off. But the Amalgamated strikers are very alert and no one has accepted the "kind invitation" to scab, even at "union wages"—the kind the United gets them.

The fight goes on and the battle in the capitalist courts shows how desperately the I. T. C. is being pressed. Bankruptcy may lurk around the corner, other firms get their business and without the secret fund of the Merchants' and Manufacturers' association is paying the bills, the I. T. C. is getting leaner fast.

SCOPES' DEFENSE GETS EVIDENCE OF "EXPERTS" IN TRIAL RECORD, WHEN JUDGE TWICE CHANGES MIND

DAYTON, Tenn., July 17.—After torrid clashes in which all the attorneys took part, during which Judge John T. Raulston twice reversed his rulings, the defense for John Scopes finally succeeded in forcing the testimony of scientists on evolution into the trial records.

Judge Raulston at first barred the testimony of the defense's "expert" witnesses entirely, then agreed to sit and hear the professors explain evolution with the jury excluded, and finally decided that the testimony should be given the court in the form of a defense brief, denying the prosecution the chance to cross examine.

Court then adjourned until Monday, to allow the defense counsel to prepare the professors' expositions on evolution.

Hays Stings Judge.

Arthur Garfield Hays led the defense to its one big victory of the trial. As soon as the court made his decision barring scientific testimony, Hays was on his feet angrily objecting.

"This opinion of the court is contrary to every theory of Anglo-Saxon jurisprudence," Hays shouted. "We demand the right to show that this law is unreasonable and if we do that, we will have shown that the law is unconstitutional. With this testimony excluded, the court assumes that the court has superhuman omniscience."

At the taunt, the judge's face turned deep red and state's attorneys rushed to his defense.

"I object to the statement of defense counsel," shouted Attorney A. Thomas Stewart. "I object, because it is a reflection on the court."

But Hays went on calmly. "We hope to persuade the court that this law is unreasonable," he added. "We ask the court to allow us to put in evidence to inform the court. There are people in the United States who would like to place laws on their statute books that the world is flat and that the world is the center of the universe. Such a law is amusing, obviously unreasonable. If you will permit this evidence, your honor will come to the conclusion that you have been in error on this ruling."

Agrees to Hear Profs.

"I will sit and hear it," said the court, obviously impressed. "I want to be fair and if the evidence convinces me I am in error, I will of course, reverse myself. I never hesitate to reverse myself when I find myself in error."

Once the judge granted permission to defense counsel to "hear the scientists" with the jury excluded, the state's attorneys were up in arms, demanding the right to cross examine each witness. William J. Bryan led the fight and in the arguments that

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY

THOSE who are interested in watching certain labor leaders of the conservative school play the role of capitalist lieutenants, should watch the antics of William D. Mahon, president of the Amalgamated Association of Street and Electric Railway Employes, who is now in Chicago, obviously for the purpose of preventing the employes of Sam Insull's elevated railway from striking for higer wages. A little bit of history concerning this man Mahon may be enlightening.

AT the Montreal convention of the American Federation of Labor a Detroit local of the Sheet Metal Workers Union, presented charges against Mahon charging him with maintaining a scab shop in Detroit and with refusing to recognize the union. Mahon was whitewashed by the committee appointed by Samuel Gompers to investigate the charge. But facts as brot out and admitted by Mahon were illuminating. The scab shop, Mahon claimed in his defense was owned by his son, but it developed that his son was also private secretary to Mahon and that his salary came from dues paid by members of the street carmens' union.

THE committee declared that a father could not be held responsible for the sins of his son any more than a son could be held responsible for the sins of his father, tho it was the general belief that William Mahon was financially interested in the open shop ran by his son. It was admitted by everybody that part of the capital used to finance the scab shop came from the dues payments of union street carmen. In order to show his contempt for the sheet metal workers who brot the charges against Mahon, Gompers invited his fellow-faker to take the chair at the convention immediately after the committee's report was read and accepted.

WHAT can the elevated employes expect from a leader of this calibre? They can only expect betrayal. There are 20,000 workers employed on the surface and elevated lines in Chicago. It is one of the most powerful, if not the most, in this city. But it appears that the leaders are dominated by the traction magnates. This is undoubtedly true of William Quinlan, president of the surface mens' union. That gentleman saw to it that his men took a vote on the question of accepting the agreement offered by the company before the elevated men were allowed to vote,

WILLIMANTIC STRIKERS BEING EVICTED, LEARN CLASS STRUGGLE IDEA

By WILLMAN,
(Worker Correspondent.)

WILLIMANTIC, Conn., July 17. Eviction of striking textile workers of the American Thread company began Wednesday, when Deputy Sheriffs John Fitts and Frank Tillinghast, with six burly assistants, began throwing out the furniture and personal property of thirty-five tenant strikers from houses belonging to the company.

Don H. Curtis, labor manager at the mill, said that several hundred scabs were working in the finishing department and that "as far as the company is concerned, there is no strike."

The strikers, who began the conflict with most conservative outlook on social questions, and who were led by the most timid and conservative union officials of the United Textile Workers, have in many cases advanced far in understanding that the Communists, at first charged with being wild visionaries, were correct in their analysis of the strike as a part of a class struggle in which the powers of government under capitalism is always used against labor.

CHANG TSO-LIN STARTS ATTACK ON BIG STRIKE

Imperialist Bribes Are Causing Civil War

SHANGHAI, China, July 17—Chang Tso-lin, militarist tool in China of Japan and sometimes other imperialists, has issued an order declaring martial law in the native territory bordering on the foreign settlement here, and ordering that all pickets trying to continue the strike against foreign imperialists, be shot when "disturbing the peace."

Raids Labor Unions and Strike Offices.

In addition the military of Chang is raiding the offices of all labor organizations and strike bodies.

Chinese think that Chang Tso-lin has been ordered or induced by bribery and promises to give him a joint British and Japanese loan to support his ambition to rule all China by his armies.

But such a loan would violate the consortium agreement and also has the certainty of creating an open split between Chang and Feng Yu-hsiang, the leading military figure honestly championing national liberation. However, it seems that the foreign imperialists are willing and even anxious to cause a civil war, hoping for an excuse that will let them dodge giving up their unequal treaties.

May Start Things.

But if foreign imperialist diplomacy is financing and stirring up internal trouble among the military governors, the world may see anything happen in the Far East.

Chang's soldiers last week closed up strike headquarters across the boundary from the settlement in Chapei and aided in herding strike breakers back to their jobs on street cars after having been carried off by strikers.

JOINT BOARD 'REMOVES' 71 FROM OFFICE

But the Membership Repudiates Act

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK CITY, July 17.— Not only has the discredited Joint Board of the International Ladies Garment Workers accepted the recommendations of the governor's commission and recommended to the membership that they accept this fake "award" on a referendum the Joint Board is putting out to be voted on Friday and Saturday, but in addition the Joint Board accepted the report of the "Trial Committee" and, "removed from office" all except one of the seventy-two officers of Locals 2, 9 and 22 who were "found guilty of Communism."

The report of the "Trial Committee" was made by Chairman Harry Borenstein, and by a vote of thirty to one, with two abstentions (representatives of the suspended locals counting two-thirds of the membership were not, of course, allowed to vote by the Sigman-Peristein-Feinberg gang) the report was accepted affecting the following officers of the three locals:

Fakers' Blacklist.

Local 2—J. Boruchowitz, J. Berland, H. Bravin, A. Cohen, L. Feuerstein, D. Goldbaum, J. Goldberg, M. Gabel, H. Hochstein, A. Shafer, I. Steinzor, D. Spater, A. Wise, A. Block, M. Cooper, D. Kravetz, J. Millet, A. Summergrad, L. Selesnick, H. Selesnick, S. Steinglitz, I. Bloom.

Local 9—L. Hyman, Miriam Friedman, D. Pisman, Lena Lewis, B. Cooper, S. Goldstein, W. Hoffman, M. Leff, P. Herman, Eva Pasher, J. Friedland, Pauline Gartner, M. Goldberg, Belle Press, M. Goodman, I. Seigel.

Local 22—J. Portnoy, Mollie Katz, Pauline Halpern, Abe Lupin, Fannie Farber, Clara Goldberg, William Himelfarb, Clara Fox, Fannie Cantor, Sonia Neuman, Rose Zucker, Louis Rosenthal, William Block, Sarah Begun, Jennie Golden, E. Dachs, Fannie Olivenstein, Anna Mattison and I. Farblash.

The committee recommended that the above defendants be removed from their offices and that they be declared ineligible to hold office within the union for a period of three years.

The committee found that the following local officers had failed to perform their official duties because of indifference, rather than on account of deliberate malice:

Local 2—S. Rabinowitz, W. Blagman, B. Reisner.

Local 9—I. Kanner, M. Goldofsky, S. Lorber, S. Dembus, M. Rembach, J. Achtenberg, H. Reitner.

Local 22—Benjamin Mattis, I. Silver.

Four defendants still remain to be tried.

Not to Be Easy Sailing.

That the czarist behaviour of the Joint Board is going to meet with determined and mass resistance, however, is seen in a simultaneous declaration by the Joint Committee of Action of the three suspended locals.

Denying that the Joint Board of the International Ladies Garment Workers Union is any longer a legal body of the union, or has power to suspend members or sign agreements, the Joint Committee of Action for Locals 2, 9 and 22, yesterday issued a call to its members to refuse to participate in the referendum vote on the report of the governor's commission which is scheduled for Friday and Saturday.

Want Half a Million.

"This vote will be a fake, we know," says Louis Hyman, chairman of the Joint Committee of Action. "These Joint Board officials will fix

SOVIET CITIZEN GETS DEPORTED FROM CHINA BY BRITISH JUDGES

SHANGHAI, July 17.—Fresh complications in the Anglo-Soviet situation were foreseen today when British assessor, Whittamore, sitting in the mixed court, disregarded official Soviet protests and ordered M. Dosser, agent of the Soviet government oil industry, expelled from Shanghai.

He was found guilty of "conspiring to incite disorder" and was given two weeks to wind up his affairs and get o

London Rejects Request Made by Washington for Nine-Power Conference

LONDON, July 17.—The secret understanding between the chief imperialist rivals for the robbery of China has, as foretold in the DAILY WORKER, has been of the most temporary nature, falling apart almost as soon as consummated and again bringing the diplomatic struggle between the United States, England and Japan to a point of rupture that threatens a new world war. Last night Great Britain flatly informed the United States, and for purposes of diplomatic politeness also France and Japan, that she is opposed at this time to any conference of the powers to consider the question of abolishing extra-territoriality in China, which American imperialism, to break the dominant position of British imperialism now resting open extra-territorial treaties, has been actively propagating.

The British government's attitude was communicated to the U. S. ambassador Houghton and the French and Japanese ambassadors, by Foreign Minister Chamberlain, who invited the other imperialist diplomats to Downing street last night.

Great Britain takes the view that her commercial interests in the Orient, and in China particularly, are too vital to permit the Chinese government and courts to have jurisdiction in China over British subjects and property.

British at Least Outspoken.

This is one of the baldest statements of the material motive behind British diplomacy in some time, and certainly is far franker than any of the hypocritical "altruistic" propaganda issued by American imperialism.

It is presumed that Ambassador Houghton cabled the summary of the British attitude to Washington.

It was reiterated at the state department, that the United States has made no "demand" for "immediate abolition" of extra-territoriality in China, but only the creation and meeting of a "commission to consider and report" on the question, and it is pointed out that this is quite another matter.

Washington Faith in Gestures.

It was stated that in view of the clear limitations upon the nature of the inquiry (which practically nullify it so far as actually abolishing extra-territoriality is concerned), the American government says it cannot see any merit in the contention that the inquiry should await "more stable political conditions" in China.

It is the belief in Washington that the gesture of calling the conference and launching a long inquiry, would itself aid the imperialists to pacify Chinese indignation and defeat the drift toward Soviet Russia among the Chinese.

Hit at Washington Treaty.

The rival imperialists to American interests, are stalling around and quite correctly hinting that United States wishes to break down their control over China merely to insert her own. They are claiming that the Washington "treaty" was not a treaty at all, by merely a few "resolutions." One of these "resolutions" reads as follows:

"That the governments of the pow-

'HASN'T HEARD A WORD', SAYS LIE DEPARTMENT ON BRITISH REJECTION

WASHINGTON, July 17—The United States has not been advised that Great Britain is opposed to entering a conference on Chinese affairs at this time, it was stated officially at the state department today.

Secretary Kellogg has made representations to the nine powers which signed the China treaty with regard to a conference on the abolition of extra-territoriality, but has received no replies to date.

The Growing Coal War 13

BRITISH GOVERNMENT GETTING ARMY AND NAVY READY AS GIANT CONFLICT WITH WORKERS LOOMS

What may develop into a greater crisis for Great Britain than the world war, is foreshadowed by the conference which was held yesterday in London, of representatives of millions of British workers to discuss common action against the capitalists in the event of the differences between the miners' union and the coal owners developing into a strike. And there is every little hope held out for a peaceful settlement.

One million British miners and at least four times that many workers in other industries may become involved when the curtain is lifted on the great industrial drama.

On the other side of the ocean over 150,000 anthracite miners in the hard coal seams of Pennsylvania are at loggerheads with the employers. It is only a coincidence that the coal diggers on both sides of the Atlantic should simultaneously stand on the threshold of a struggle with the operators, but it may serve to open the eyes of the miners on both sides of the Atlantic to the wisdom of united action.

The threatened strikes in Great Britain and the United States have set the governments of both countries worrying. Both governments are getting their armed forces ready to smash the strikes. Both governments will make common cause against the workers.

The class struggle is growing more bitter. Capitalism will not be able to recuperate. The power of the workers is increasing. Long Live the solidarity of the workers of the world!

MINERS' CONFAB WITH OPERATORS IS DEADLOCKED

Coolidge Prepares for Strikebreaking Role

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., July 17—While President Coolidge and Secretary of Labor Davis were conferring in Swampscott as to the government's attitude toward the threatened coal strike, the wage parley between anthracite operators and miners continued today with both sides "deadlocked."

Representatives of the miners maintained their attitude that the anthracite industry can well afford to meet their demands of a wage increases and have prepared to petition the government for an investigation of freight rates and coal merchandising methods.

"Coal costs $8 a ton at the mine and a consnumer pays $15 a ton for it," declared a representative of the miners' union. "A saving along the line would provide for the wage demands of the miners and give the public a saving also on the price of coal."

W. W. Inglish, speaking for the operators, pointed out that the United States coal commission in 1923 urged such an investigation and the interstate commerce commission has already completed such an investigation.

"Royalties and other features of the coal industry are not within the

BRITISH CRISIS NEAR AS MINERS GIRD FOR BATTLE

Navy Receives Strikebreaking Orders

LONDON, July 17.—On the eve of what may turn out to be the greatest industrial battle in the history of Great Britain, a conference that may mark a red letter day for world labor opened here today. The executive committees of several organizations representing the most powerful combination of workers on the continent of Europe met to consider a proposal for the pooling of their common interests for offensive and defensive action against the capitalists.

This gigantic army of workers represents the miners, railwaymen, engineers, shipbuilders and transport workers. Coming at a moment when the British ruling classes are between the two horns of a dilemma, represented by disastrous rebellions in their colonies and satrapies and an irreconcilable conflict with their wage slaves at home, this conference bids fair to mark a definite period in the decline of the robber empire.

Rejected Another Confab.

The miners have decisively rejected the government's offer for an inquiry into whether wage reductions and extension of hours can be introduced. This is not a matter for discussion, say the miners in view of the fact that last year's commission showed that the real wages of the miners were below the pre-war level while the profits of the operators were substantially above. The miners are willing to reopen direct negotiations with the owners provided the latter withdraw their notice to terminate the existing contract at the end of this month.

Government to Use Navy.

The government has declared its intention to proceed with the court of inquiry with only the operators present.

The government is preparing to throw in the military and naval forces into the struggle on the side of the

AMERICAN WOOLEN TRUST CUTS WAGES OF 16,000 AT LAWRENCE; MORE MILLS SOON TO FOLLOW

LAWRENCE, Mass., July 17.—Notice of a ten per cent cut in wages in the local mills of the American Woolen company were posted today.

Approximately 16,000 operatives, who have been working on a three and four day a week shift have been led to expect that with the wage cut in effect on July 27th, the mill will go back to full time. A dozen other woolen mills in the city, employing 2,000 operatives were expected to follow the action of the American Woolen company.

Tide of Revolt Against Sigman Regime Is Rising

NEW YORK CITY, July 17.—The tide of revolt against the corrupt and traitorous Sigman gang in the New York Joint Board and in the general office of the International Ladies Garment Workers' Union, is rising ever higer and higer, as will be seen when tomorrow night—Saturday—a monster mass demonstration of cloak and dressmakers will be held in Madison Square Park.

This is the first time since the "war for democracy" that the Madison Square Park has been opened for demonstration. The purpose of for which the great mass meeting is called is to mobilize the masses against the governor's commission and against the fake referendum of the so-called Joint Board to surrender the demands of the garment workers to the bosses thru approval of the outrageous decision of the bankers and lawyers who participate in the commission.

Will Do Own Deciding.

The membership of the I. L. G. W. in New York are determined to do the deciding themselves as to what they shall work for in wages and the conditions under which they gain a living.

Other evidence of the sweeping character of the revolt against the Sigman betrayers are the following:

The shop where Stanzer, the chairman of Local 2, was removed from the job by order of Sigman's crew, was struck at once by all the workers, who refused to go back unless Stanzer goes with them. The boss is expected to give in today, and take Stanzer back.

Local 38 and Pressers Reject Joint Board.

Again, and even more important, is the action of Local 38, which voted last night, by a majority of eight to one, to reject the action of the New York Joint Board in suspending and removing from office the executives of Locals 2, 9, and 22, and to demand re-instatement of all three locals.

And still again—the Pressers' sections, meeting in Bronx and Brownsville, rejected the action of the Joint Board and hooted the Sigman gang officials, out of the meeting.

BUILDING TRADES FORM UNITED FRONT TO FIGHT LANDIS AWARD AND RESIST OPEN SHOP DRIVE

The building trades unions of Chicago are moving into position to make a combined resistance to the open shop "Landis Award" which for the past few years has caused much demoralization and been the battering ram of the Employers' Association and all other open shop groups in the campaign to destroy the Chicago labor movement.

It is learned that at the last meeting of the executive of the Building Trades Council, the president of the council was authorized to call a strike on any building project where non-union men are employed.

To Act as Unit.

This follows the agreement between all the building trades union made about a month ago, in which all unions agreed to take common action to enforce the unionization of all building projects in Chicago. Altho the bricklayers, plasterers, and some others are working under the Landis award, and the carpenters are not affiliated with the Building Trades Council, yet all agreed to act as a unit in protection of the common interest.

The authorization given the president of the Building Trades Council was given in order to unify the different crafts in the expected strike action, as some of the unions have failed to keep in touch with the council by reason of their delegates not attending the meetings of the council's executive.

Painters Give Strong Support.

The Painters' District Council, tho not formally entering into the agreement of the various crafts made last month, nevertheless are ready to support the other unions in common action and Thursday night announced that the referendum on the question of levying a special assessment of $1 to aid the Building Trades Council fight the Landis award, had been carried in the affirmative by a vote of about 4,000 to 85.

The Painters' District Council also instructed all delegates to bring up in their locals the resolution proposed against the use of the paint spraying machines, the use of which is said to be injurious to the health of the painters.

"Billy's" Million Slip from Shepherd, Court Smashes Will

The will of William Nelson McClintock, bequeathing the bulk of his fortune to William D. Shepherd, recently acquitted of a charge of killing young McClintock, was not permitted to be probated by Judge Henry Horner of the probate court.

The effect of the decision is to throw the estate into administration thro the regular channels for persons who die without leaving wills, subject of course, to appeal by Shepherd.

War Veteran Killed.

DENVER, July 17.—Lieut. Col. W. Mapes, a veteran of the Spanish-American and world wars, was killed early today, and two nurses riding with him sustained severe bruises and injuries when an automobile crashed head-on into a street car.

The most important work in literary and social criticism in many years.

It seems incredible that a man of your insight, scholarship and temperament should be so red and fundamental."

the returns to suit themselves and announce some good big figure that sounds as tho they had a great mass of the workers supporting them. Then they can go forth, as we hear they are trying to do, and negotiate a loan of a half million dollars on the promise that they will tax all these members to repay it.

"But they will never collect that tax; not from us, nor from the other locals either. We are all sick and tired of shouldering the debts of the Joint Board, for we know the way they squander our money.

Fancy Figures.

"For instance in July, 1924, after an agreement was all complete between the employers and the union, these officers called an absolutely unnecessary stoppage of work. Drawing on a special fund, altho this was not a strike, they spent over $500,000 in one month. When they were forced to make some explanation, they presented a report which had such single items as 'Hall Committee $43,671.27' —and this did not include rent but was paid to those who kept order in the meeting halls.

"It had an item of $100,119.00 for a 'Picket Committee,' yet there were no pickets necessary because this was not a strike. There was $31,109.81 for a 'Law Committee'— a committee of one—yet there were no arrests, no court cases, and this did not include counsel fees.

"There was $53,938.58 spent by an 'Out-of-Town Committee,' altho this was a New York City matter. The majority of the workers were out of work only a few days in this stoppage, and only a few thousand were laid off their jobs for several weeks. Yet a Brooklyn Committee spent $38,889.10; a Brownsville Committee $7,895.04; Harlem Committee $14,509.45.

"Hall rent was $27,612.80; legal fees $18,485.00 and this did not include the fee of the chief counsel. We could get no further details on these expenditures, even for a 'Miscellaneous Expense' item of $4,716.60.

Not to Be Trusted.

"Such irresponsible leaders cannot be trusted with money. They will get no more of ours, and if they manage to obtain a loan from outside sources, they will be responsible for it themselves. We of these three locals, and the rank and file of the other locals —who are behind us, but dare not openly express their sympathy—will never pay one cent of it.

"We no longer recognize the Joint Board and neither do 90 per sent of the workers. It will be useless for them to agree with the employers that we will abide by the report of the governor's commission for no agreement of theirs will be binding on us. We of the Joint Action Committee are signing no agreements and neither can they. We will take care of the problems of our workers, defend them when they are discharged for being our sympathizers, insist on their right to work despite any difficulties within the union.

Stand Firm.

"We have more than 45,000 union members behind us. Some of them are members of other locals, such as Nos. 35 and 10, where if they express sympathy for us they are dealt with by strong arm methods. They, as well as our own local members, are looking to us to continue the fight, and we shall stand firm."

Cal and His Strikebreakers.

SWAMPSCOTT, Mass., July 17— "The Government is doing all that can be done to prevent a hard coal strike," said secretary of labor, James J. Davis, today following a three and one-half hour conference with President Coolidge at White Court, the summer White House.

Secretary Davis said that the situation was gone over thoroly but declined to comment further. He stated that he was sailing tomorrow for England, to be away until August 25.

Secretary of commerce, Herbert Hoover, long a close student of the economcis of the coal situation, will be summoned to White Court next. To him, in all probability, will be intrusted the actual task of breaking the strike, in the anthracite fields should one take place.

Hoover and Davis have kept themselves fully informed as to developments at Atlantic City where the operators and miners are deadlocked over the identical differences that failed of mediation in 1923.

At their disposal will be every possible weapon of the federal machinery. The president is determined that if necessary he will do to the miners what he did to the policemen in Boston in 1919.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., July 17—In a heated discussion over wage increases, representatives of the miners participating in the conference between anthracite coal operators and miners today called on the operators to submit figures showing "the salaries paid to coal company officials, directors and high-priced lawyers."

The operators rejected the proposition, according to an official of the Mine Workers' Union, "declaring the request to be irrelevant to the purposes of the joint conference."

MAHON HOOTED FROM ELEVATED EMPLOYES MEET

After forcing William D. Mahon, president of the international union to leave the hall, members of Local 308 of the Amalgamated Association of Street and Electric Railway Employes, finally decided to accept the terms of the Chicago Rapid Transit company in face of the opposition of the faker Mahon to the the paltry increase of five cents an hour which they demanded.

Mahon told them that the company was justified in not granting the increase as the gross receipts did not justify a raise at this time. He also said that the acceptance of the terms by the Surface Lines men created a division in their ranks and made a victory impossible.

These statements brought forth angry protests. The men blamed the officials for this division. It was clear that they believed Mahon was in cahoots with the traction magnates. Mahon bitterly assailed the members for showing opposition to his treacherous conduct and he left the platform. He returned afterwards. The men are very dissatisfied with the way their leaders bungled the wage controversy.

FRENCH POSITION IN RIFFIAN WAR GROWS SERIOUS

PARIS, July 17—So serious is the French position in Morocco that Marshall Petain one of the leading military figures in the world war, was hurried to the Riffian front. The armies of General Krim, the Riff leader, are marching on Fez which is a stronghold of French power in Morocco.

Not only is the Riffian chief defeating the crack batallions of France in battle but his propaganda among the tribes hitherto friendly to the invaders is growing in effectiveness.

British Crisis Is Nearing As Miners Gird for Big Battle

owners. W. C. Bridgeman, first lord of the admiralty, admitted that the naval personel were informed how much they would be paid for strikebreaking work. Instructions were issued to the army and navy on July 3, looking toward emergencies.

From the point of view of leadership, the British miners were never in a more advantageous position than today. Not only are the leading figures in the miners' union, men who have been tried in struggles and not found wanting, but the official leadership of the trade union movement as a whole has a forward outlook, which was entirely lacking when the miners threw down the gauntlet to their foes in 1921. The then leaders, J. H. Thomas, Frank Hodges and J. R. Clynes are now discredited and new men have stepped into the breach.

Struggle With Right Wing.

This industrial crisis comes on the heels of a big struggle between the right and left wings of British labor. Several left papers have sprung up lately. It is now reported that J. H. Thomas is bidding for Reynold's Weekly and that John Wheatley, former health minister is bidding against him.

The capitalist papers are beginning to link up the industrial crisis with the alliance between the Russian and British trade unions. This stuff, however, has no terrors for the workers. They will need all the assistance they can get and no doubt, the Russian coal miners will not forget their British brothers when the big strike starts.

BOSSES UNABLE TO RUSH BAR TO CLOTH PICKETS

Affidavits of "Force" Too Indefinite

Hearing on the bill for an injunction against the striking employes of the J. L. Taylor and Co., and the International Tailoring company was laid over by Judge Charles E. Foell, until this morning. The lawyers for the clothing bosses were blocked in their effort to rush thru an injunction when William A. Cunnea, attorney for the Amalgamated Clothing Workers Union members, was upheld in his charge that the affidavits brot in to support the bill for an injunction were too indefinite.

The attorneys for the clothing manufacturers are now scurrying around securing affidavits in which the absurd charges of violence placed against the strikers are stated in a more specific form.

Bill Is Illegal.

Cunnea insists that the bill filed for an injunction is invalid because, contrary to law two separate concerns are jointly asking an injunction against picketing in an identical bill. Judge Foell, much as he would like to rule against the workers, may be forced to decide that a new bill must be drawn, which would necessitate more delay.

The lawyers for the employers declare that the injunction should be granted in spite of the recently passed state anti-injunction law prohibiting the issuance of injunctions for peaceful picketing.

Constitutionality Attacked.

Their claim is that the law is unconstitutional. They declare that Chief Justice Taft of the United States supreme court ruled a similar bill passed in Arizona unconstitutional on the grounds that it violated the 14th amendment to the federal constitution.

This amendment states that "no state shall deprive any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." It would not be the first time that the constitution has been twisted for use in the interests of the bosses if the anti-injunction law is thus declared unconstitutional.

Attorney Cunnea has reminded Judge Foell of the importance of a decision on the constitutionality of the anti-injunction law, and it is thot that briefs will be filed in arguments, instead of a cursory oral agreement before the court.

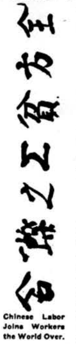
"Workers of the World, Unite!" Chinese Appeal to Workers of America

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL

TODAY, millions in China respond to the ringing slogan first advanced by Karl Marx, greatest leader of the world's oppressed, in their final struggle for liberation. Chinese labor has taken up in earnest, and joins the international chorus, "Workers of the World Unite!" This inspiring plea now goes booming 'round the world in hundreds of languages and dialects, heard everywhere that labor is on the march in the last class war.

Marx's slogan is reproduced here as it appears in the Chinese language. The Chinese interpretation is being published in many newspapers of the Union of Soviet Republics, to show to the workers and peasants of the Soviet Union that labor in China has joined the emancipation struggle of the world's proletariat. It should have a big meaning for American labor.

'WORKERS OF THE WORLD UNITE!' AS IT IS IN CHINESE



Chinese Labor Joins Workers the World Over.

The DAILY WORKER was the only publication in the United States to publish the appeal of the All-China Federation of Trade Unions to the world's working class. This appeal recounted the brave struggle of labor in China, closing with the inspiring words, "Long Live the United Front of the Proletariat of the Whole World!"

Thru this appeal the organized proletariat of China takes front rank in labor's struggle for world power. It puts to shame organized labor in the United States. Where Chinese labor speaks in the terms of the class struggle, of the revolutionary war against all exploiters, the American organized labor movement, finding feeble voice thru its officialdom, further propagates its class-collaboration policies for "peace" with the bosses. Chinese labor has joined the vanguard of the march of the nations toward emancipation, while American labor continues to help bring up the rear of the rearguard.

Only the despicable motive of self-interest has brought any response at all from American labor's official regime to the world crisis developing in the Orient. It is urged that the American worker should only interest himself in his Chinese brother, because the continuance of the low standard of living of Oriental labor, or its further reduction, would strike a blow at his standard of living. But even this receives only casual mention, while William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, says "Amen!" to the policies of the strike-breaking Coolidge administration, in dealing with the Chinese situation.

The position of the trade union officialdom is reflected in the "socialist" attitude toward China. Forgetting the piffle of the "socialist" party's official press agent, that birth control would solve China's problems, we find the party's spokesmen taking the attitude that China is still backward, that it must suffer longer under the imperialist regime in order to bring itself up-to-date, but that in the meantime the great capitalists should be as tender as possible with the Chinese workers.

That is the policy of "socialists" in other lands that has led to open collaboration with imperialism in making ruthless war on colonial peoples, as in France where the "socialists" are the allies of French imperialism in its efforts to maintain "the empire" in Morocco against the rebellious Riffs.

It was this same policy of the Second (socialist) International that tried to tell the workers and peasants of Soviet Russia not to establish their proletarian dictatorship because they were not yet ready for socialism.

But the workers and peasants of Russia paid no heed to these betrayers. Chinese labor also casts off these Judases, extends its hand in comradeship not only to the liberated masses under Soviet Rule, but to all labor, proclaiming, "Let us close our ranks and act together against our common foe!"

The mighty millions of American labor, powerful only when stirred to conscious class action, must be made to hear that cry and respond to it.

ers—the United States, Great Britain, Belgium, France—shall establish a commission (to which each of such governments shall appoint one member) to inquire into the present practice of extra-territorial purisdiction in China and into the methods of judicial administration of China, with a view reporting to the governments of the several powers above named their findings of fact in regard to these matters and their recommendations as to such means as they may find suitable to improve the existing conditions of the administration of justice in China and to assist and further the efforts of the Chinese government to effect such legislation and judicial reforms as would warrant the several powers in relinquishing either progressively or otherwise their respective rights of extraterritoriality.

"That the commission herein contemplated shall be constituted within three months after the adjournment of the Washington conference, in accordance with detailed arrangements to be hereafter agreed upon by the governments of the powers above named and shall be instructed to submit its report and recommendations within one year after the first meeting of the commission

"That each of the powers above named shall be deemed free to accept or reject all or any portion of the recommendations of the commission herein contemplated, but that in no case shall any of the said powers make its acceptance of all or any portion of such recommendations either directly or indirectly dependent on the granting by China of any special concession, favor, benefit or immunity, whether political or economic."

Bunch of Mere Pretenses.

I can thus be seen from the "resolution" which has lain neglected for four years, that no imperialist nation stands any great danger of losing anything by its provisions, even if enforced, and that the game of the United States has been thoroly hypocritical, with one face toward the Chinese pretending to be working hard for "abolition of extra-territoriality" and the other face toward Britain, Japan and France, saying that it is only a pretense means altogether to "calm" unruly China, save her from the Bolsheviks.

MASS. GOVERNOR FIGHTS STREET CARMEN'S UNION

Strike Voted, Fuller Would Imitate Cal

BOSTON, July 17.—Governor Alvin T. Fuller is living up to the bad opinion the Massachusetts Federation of Labor voiced of him at its annual convention last summer. The convention, held during the state gubernatorial campaign, branded Fuller as a foe of union labor and cited his wartime activity in fighting a strike of employes in the Packard Motor Car assembling plant of Boston with which he was connected as executive and heavy stockholder.

Today the employes of the Boston elevated system seek an increase in wages and Fuller issues a statement from the state house, censuring the workers for their membership in an "outside" organization, meaning the street carmen's union of the American Federation of Labor, and telling them that they had good jobs at good wages. Their wages, actually, are just 72 cents an hour—the men asking an increase to 95 cents and the company calling for a cut of seven cents to 65 cents an hour.

Will Fight Union.

In an earlier statement the governor threatened that if the recent overwhelming vote for a strike were carried out he would do all he could to prevent any striker from being re-employed.

At the same time the governor admitted that the men had the technicalities on their side in the immediate issue on which the strike was voted. The company had demanded a change in the arbitration machinery and the men said they would strike if such a change were attempted. The method used for 14 years called for each side appointing its own representative to an arbitration board of three, the first two arbitrators to select a third.

Foe of Labor.

The company's proposed change called for less direct representation, each side to select the other side's representative from a list of five persons nominated by that side. Under this plan the Boston elevated system would select the union representative from five union nominees, and, the men feared, the company would naturally pick the weakest of the five—the one least desirable from the union standpoint. The company at first said it would stand pat for the change but its latest word is that it will reconsider its decision. A few days will tell the tale.

Meanwhile the judgement of the Federation on Alvin T. Fuller stands. He is a foe of union labor because he opposes affiliation of the street car workers with the general labor movement. And he thinks that more than 72 cents an hour is too much for an elevated worker.

TURKISH KEYMEN IN PRISON FOR CALLING STRIKE

Arrested After Protest Against Long Hours

CONSTANTINOPLE, Turkey, July 17.—The government telegraph operators at Samsun and Adana, leading cities of Asia Minor, and other places, have been arrested for going on strike. They will be tried before the Independence tribunals, whose favorite punishment is public hanging.

The telegraph operators struck after their demand to Premier Ismet Pasha that they be relieved was unanswered. All but six of the operators were ill with malaria and they were required to work twenty-four hours a day on altrnate nights.

No substitutes were sent and they went on strike. Twenty-six of the keymen are now being tried, and others are being brot prisoners from other Asia Minor cities.

The authorities charged that the strike was a "threat against the government."

The telegraph operators are paid from $45.00 to $70.00 per month.

"MOTHER" BLOOR COVERS FOUR THOUSAND MILES TO DATE ON HER HITCH-HIKE CROSS COUNTRY TOUR

TOLEDO, Ohio, July 17.—Arriving in this city on schedule on her cross-country - Communist - organizational tour, Ella Reeve "Mother" Bloor has completed to date, 3,898 miles of hitch hiking without payment of a cent of railroad fare.

The veteran sixty-year old fighter, coming with her well-known smile and her readiness to battle for Communism arrived at an opportune moment to speak at two large street meetings arranged for her in behalf of the seven Communist candidates entered in the local municipal elections.

"This will be a glorious opportunity to put the Communist viewpoint before the workers," Mother Bloor stated in an interview. "And the workers of Toledo are also going to hear about the only English daily in this country that states their position everyday. You bet I mean the DAILY WORKER," she added emphatically.

Yesterday at two o'clock in the afternoon a group of children met with Mother Bloor to organize the first Toledo Junior League and the second which this veteran Communist agitator and organizer has welded together on her tour. The first of twenty members organized in Denver, is functioning and growing steadily.

In Columbus, Ohio, from where Mother Bloor has just arrived, a new English local of the Workers (Communist) Party has been formed with Harry Schier chosen as secretary and Kalman Burke appointed as city agent for the DAILY WORKER. As usual a number of new subscribers accompanied the organization of the new Communist unit. This adds another agent to the long chain thruout the country the last being John Stratis of Dayton, appointed there on Mother Bloor's arrival but a few days ago.

To Speak With Foster at Warren.

From here Mother Bloor will proceed to Warren, Ohio, where she will share the platform at the local picnic of the steel workers on Sunday, together with the best known organizer and steel strike organizer, Wm. Z. Foster.

Changes in the tour will be made within the next few days to allow Mother Bloor to reach the mining regions by next week.

GRAND RAPIDS WORKERS HOLD FINE MEETING

Minor Demands "Hands Off China," in Speech

By VICTOR TOZER.

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., July 17.—That the Grand Rapids Workers Party local is fully capable of arranging effective meetings even at very short notice was proven by its great open-air demonstration with the slogans "Stand by Soviet Russia" and "Hands Off China" held at North Park along the eastern bank of Grand River on Sunday last.

Y. W. L. Appeal for Members.

Comrade James Stoker, educational director of Y. W. L. of this city as first speaker, made a special appeal to the younger workers in the audience pointing out that it will be they who in this imperialist conspiracy for another war will be called upon to undergo the miseries of the next, and greater slaughter, and that only by aligning themselves under the banner of the Young Workers League of America will they be able to actively participate in the activities of the only organization with a program of combatting all forms of capitalist militarism.

Bob Miner Principal Speaker

It was with a great ovation that Comrade Minor was greeted upon his being introduced by Eugene Bechtold, the local organizer, who made a brief address outlining the policies of the Workers (Communist) Party in relation to the imperialist moves of the United States and other capitalist powers against Soviet Russia and revolutionary China.

Altho this was Bob Minor's first appearance in this city the workers knowing of him thru his many articles and cartoons in Communist periodicals, listened in rapt attention to his keen analysis of world imperialism and vivid portrayal of the role played by America in its determination to crush the first workers' republic and its bloody onslaught against China in an attempt to suppress the growing class consciousness of the Chinese proletariat.

A special feature of the demonstration was the numerous questions which the speaker encouraged and very ably entertained, questions ranging all the way from the present wage cut and open shop campaign to the dictatorship of the proletariat were given detailed attention with the historic mission of the Communists always in the foreground.

NEW YORK LABOR DEFENSE JOINS INTERNATIONAL

Calls Conference to Launch New Body

NEW YORK, July 17.—At the meeting of the Labor Defense Council, merged with the International Labor Defense and adopted the new name.

This was done for the sake of having a unified, inclusive organization to carry on the work of defense of the militant workers of this country who are sent to jail for participation in the class struggle.

Comrade Rose Baron, who was a delegate to the conference held in Chicago on June 28, at which the International Labor Defense was formed, made a full report on the conference, which was approved. She read the constitution that was adopted there and that provides for individual and collective membership; members pay 10c. per month, while organizations may affiliate by paying a contribution.

Workers in Shops Basis

The basis of the organization are the workers in the shops, trade unions and fraternal organizations. The new organization is one of the best united fronts of the working class in protection of its militant fighters; it brings the workers together in class solidarity and ensures that workers will be more courageous and readier to enter the struggle when they know that their families will be taken care of.

After discussion of the report and the constitution of the International Labor Defense, the following resolution was adopted:

Merge Into I. L. D.

"After hearing the report of Comrade Rose Baron on the conference held in Chicago on June 28, 1925, at which the International Labor Defense was formed, the Labor Defense Council of New York City in meeting assembled on July 14, 1925, decides to merge with the new organization and to adopt its name.

"The New York section wholeheartedly pledges its support to the new organization, and will do everything in its power to build up. Complying with the principles and organizational ideas underlying the International Labor Defense, the New York section will seek to mobilize the workers of New York City in the trade unions, fraternal organization etc., regardess of political affiliation, creed or color, in order that all victims of the class struggle may be given the aid essential for carrying on the fight.

Call N. Y. Conference

"The New York section of the International Labor Defense calls on all friends and sympathizers to assist it in building up an organization worthy of the working class of the struggle against exploitation and oppression who are incarcerated in the capitalist prisons of the United States and other parts of the world."

After adopting the new name, it was decided to call a conference on Sunday, September 13 in order to launch the new organization on a broad scale. Comrade Baron was unanimously reelected secretary.

To Run Workers' Movie

The International Labor Defense will run the outing and movie that was originally planned by the Labor Defense Council. This outing will take place at Pleasant Bay Park on August 23, and promises to be one of the biggest affairs of the season. Tickets cost 35c and it is expected that all comrades and sympathizers will exert their best efforts to make the outing a huge success.

The next meeting of the International Labor Defense will take place on August 4, and all branches must elect delegates, so that the language sections may be built up and brought into the local conference.

Chicago Letts Go Into the Movies

Why a full-fledged workers movie department should be located in Chicago without being fully used by the movement was a mystery to the Lettish Workers Party branch, so at their last picnic they hit upon a new scheme to draw a crowd. Speeches and games were "old stuff," but everybody welcomes a chance to get into the movies. So they invested in a movie film and charged it to advertising. It drew the crowd and offered an hour's novel diversion.

And when, in a few weeks, these films will be shown at their headquarters as part of a "Workers' Film Night," everybody who appears in the film will bring out all his wife's relatives to see the show. Pictures of the crowd, of the shooting gallery where Red Army target practice is indulged in, of bar and dance hall, will be very welcome. And a political tinge, prophetic of the future, is given when the capitalist "dummy" candidates, Coolidge, Dawes, Bryan, Davis, etc., are knocked over by solid Bolshevik baseballs.

BUILDERS AT WORK

What Are You Doing This Sunday?

GOING TO SEE ANY "OLD TIMERS" YOU KNOW?

Tomorrow's Sunday. Tomorrow you may not have anything in particular to do. Perhaps you would accept this suggestion:

Why not take a trip to visit some of your friends and fellow workers in town? If you haven't seen them for a while—so much the better. Talk over old times—the old job—and ask them if they would like to subscribe for the DAILY WORKER.

Every worker will be "pleased plenty" to hear about the coming serial publication of RUSSIA TODAY—The Official Report of the British Trade Union Delegation to Soviet Russia, and no worker will refuse to subscribe at the special rate (only until August 1) of two months for one dollar.

Maybe You Don't Want To Do This—

In that case go out to the country. The air will do you good. All kinds of workers organizations are holding picnics over Sunday—probably tomorrow—and there's no better place to get a sub. Why not accept the suggestion? Take a book along (of sub blanks) and go out to the country.

No better way to combine pleasure with propaganda exists—and this is important Communist activity. This is work in which you can see immediate results of the kind that will build the Communist movement into a great force in this country.

If you intend to see some "old timers" you know—or maybe you're going to a picnic—tell us about it so we can send you some special sub cards!

World War Saddled Australia With a Huge Debt Burden

MELBOURNE, Australia, July 17.—In 1901, the total public debt of the Australian continent was $1,017,591,875 In 1913, it had grown to $1,604,078,435, while by June, 1924, it had increased to $4,832,393,695. Thus, between 1901 and 1924, it had increased nearly five-fold. In 1901 the population of Australia was 3,826,286; in 1913, 4,872,059 and in 1924, it was 5,867,500.

The debt per head of population was $268 in 1901; $331 in 1913; and $823.50 in 1924. The taxation per head increased from $15 in 1901 to $23.50 in 1913 and to $61 in 1924. The huge increase in the public debt and in taxation between 1913 and 1924 was mainly due, of course, to the war. Australia's total war debt is $2,400,000,000.

The Crisis in Great Britain

The greatest crisis in its history impends in Great Britain. Far more serious than the situation in 1919 which ended with the collapse of the Triple Alliance thru the treachery of Hodges and Thomas is the present conflict, beginning also in the coal industry—the basis of British heavy industry.

The government has set up a court of inquiry to investigate the industrial situation, but the miners' union has refused to appear before this body or accord it any recognition.

This outright defiance of the tory government is an indication of the frame of mind in which the representatives of the miners will come to the joint conference with the railwaymen and transport workers beginning today.

This conference is the most important ever held by British labor. It is called to perfect organization of a new fighting alliance between these three powerful industrial groups. Other conferences of this kind have been held, but never have they convened when British capitalism was in such distress and the world situation so critical.

The present crisis has been developing slowly since the world war, if the word slowly is the correct term for a declining process that has ruined in a decade the foreign trade of what was once the greatest industrial and financial power on the globe.

British capitalism had always had a heavy balance that made possible control of the foreign investment field until the world war and her foreign investments brought a steady stream of profit to the British capitalists. Raw materials from the colonies were brought to Britain in British ships, turned into finished commodities and reshipped to the four quarters of the earth in British ships again. British industry flourished and British labor was employed.

But last year the British surplus for foreign investment had shrunk to $150,000,000 as compared with $900,000,000 in 1923 and this year the trade balance will probably be unfavorable to the extent of $100,000,000.

The process of decay is reflected in the statistics of unemployment.

The percentage of workers unemployed in basic industries is:

Coal, 15.8; coke, 12.1; pottery, 15; glass, 19.3; pig iron, 17.7; steel, 23.6; tin plate, 22.7; wool, 17.8; linen, 40.1; water transport, 32.6.

Let us hear from C. T. Cramp, head of the National Union of Railwaymen and chairman of the British labor party. He says:

> Capitalism in Great Britain with its accompaniments of militarism and extreme nationalism, which wait upon it everywhere in its old age, is passing away. I believe it will disappear in ways which are not anticipated by those who first raised the standard of socialism.
> Some of us gravely doubt if ever again the adult population of this island will be fully employed. It may be that we shall have to contemplate the possibility of a shrinkage of population and a position more closely approximating that of Denmark or Holland.

We agree with Cramp, the "moderate" socialist, that British capitalism is passing away, but that it will pass away in a manner "not anticipated by those who first raised the standard of socialism" is a foolish statement and could be made only by one who does not know what Marx, the founder of revolutionary socialism, said of the passing of capitalism:

> "Capitalism came into the world dripping with blood and dirt from every pore and it will go out the same way."

British capitalism can be no exception to this rule. That it is not is proven by the steadily increasing misery of the British working class, the atrocities committed upon the colonial peoples, their revolts against imperialism and the rapidly sharpening class conflict of which the present crisis is only one symptom.

The British ruling class has held power cleverly—and ruthlessly. But it can no longer feed and clothe and house the millions of workers who produced the wealth it seized. Its world power was based on its great industry and a working class that would fight for the empire. Both are gone.

It can be said safely that the present crisis, no matter what the immediate outcome, will be the least serious of those that will occur from now on. Plundering of the colonies cannot be carried on while the working class at home is near revolt and inability to plunder China and India successfully intensifies the domestic crisis.

All power to the British miners, railwaymen and transport workers. The British empire is passing, but the future belongs to the British working class. If population is to be reduced let it be the capitalists, the aristocrats and their crew of hangers-on who are made to migrate or starve.

History has given the British working class the role of leading the revolution in western Europe, of disarming the enemy of the European and colonial revolutions. It is not yet fully conscious of its mission, but that it intends to fight is shown by the militant attitude of the labor movement in the present industrial crisis, the leading part it is playing in the drive for world trade union unity in company with the unions of the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics and its support of the Chinese national liberation movement.

followed, there came an outburst of passion.

"I suppose the state will be allowed to cross examine each witness," Bryan asked quietly, waving his straw fan idly.

"You will not," thundered Darrow, who had leaped to his feet. "This testimony is presented to the court for the purpose of inserting it in the record to show what the defense intended to present as its evidence."

State Gets Own Medicine.

"We have a right," Bryan continued, "to cross examine."

"No, no," shouted Darrow. "We offer it to enlighten the court and if it does not enlighten the court, a Bryan cross examination would not do any good."

"Shall this case go up on appeal," Bryan demanded, "with only one side heard?"

The politician was excited. He forgot even to wave the fan.

"Shall this expert testimony of the defense be spread upon the record and the state shut out of any evidence?" he demanded.

"That's what happened to us here," was Darrow's groweld answer.

"What is the purpose of a cross-examination?" the court suddenly interposed. Turning to Darrow, he added: "Isn't it for the purpose of bringing out the truth?"

"Oh, no," the Chicagoan retorted, thumbing his famous suspenders. "It has no bearing here. We want this evidence entered in the record merely to show our case and to show higher courts what has been excluded here."

Defense Examines Own Witnesses.

The court ruled out the state's request and the attorneys fathered before the judge's desk to determine how the scientific testimony would be taken. It was agreed finally that the defense should prepare a brief by examining its own witnesses and the court upheld the defense's request for an adjournment until Monday.

Immediately after the recess, Dudley Field Malone, supplemented Darrow's fling at the judge: "There has hardly been a motion or suggestion except the one for adjournment today, made the defense that has been granted," said Malone. "In a trial, supposed to be before a court and jury because of objections raised by the state the jury has been permitted to sit in the courtroom only 15 minutes since the trial geban."

As a result of these developments, it was apparent the trial will end Monday or Tuesday at the latest. Once the defense's case is spread on the record, there will come a closing outburst of oratory, the jury will retire, take one ballot and bring in a verdict of guilty.

Professors Ready to Spout

The scientists, professors in America's "best" colleges, Clarence Darrow had stated for the defense, would attempt to show that "science and the bible do not conflict."

The professors, ranged in a row at the defense table, were prepared to seriously mouth such nonsense. They were used to teaching what they were told by the manufacturers who own their schools and their jobs. It came easy to them to "teach" at the order of the customers.

But Bryan saw to it that they did not get this chance. Bryan had told the judge "science and the bible conflict," and taking his cue from Bryan, the "fundamentalist" Raulston barred the defense evidence.

The defense attorneys had pleaded for a chance to "reconcile the bible with the theory of evolution." They had catered to the "modernist" preacher, and his boss, the "modernist" capitalist. They had brot in goose step professors to attempt to show that evolution was "safe" for the masters, that science could be perverted into a tool for the uses of the ruling class.

No Hope For Acquital.

The court held that the testimony of the scientists would be "irrevelant and incompetent."

It would have been a death blow to the defense's hopes for an acquital of Scopes.

Refuses to Hear Professors.

The decision was rendered immediately after the court was opened with prayer by Dr. C. G. Eastwood, fundamentalist pastor of the Dayton methodist church. There was no objection from the defense as an exception was noted automatically on the record.

In his first decision, Judge Raulston ruled that the only time expert testimony was needed in a trial was when the "ordinary man could not form an opinion."

He held tho, in the Scopes no such situation existed as the only question was whether Scopes had violated the law by teaching a "theory which defied the divine creation of man."

"If this is the only question," the court asked, "then, why call experts?"

Bryan Proves Buffoon.

Bryan had earlier in the trial lived up to his reputation as a buffoon when in his speech he said, "Man's a mammal: man is in a classification with elephants. How can those scientists teach such stuff?" Later he stated, horror stricken, "Evolutionists deny by logic every truth of the Christian religion."

Church Must Not Dictate.

Dudley Field Malone, in his answer to Bryan's sermon, drew applause when he said, "Are we to have our children know nothing about science except what the church says they shall know?"

Malone, however, endeavored to show that he was "just as good a Christian" as Bryan, and followed the line of the defense in endeavoring to shield religion from the contradictions of science. He tried to interpret the bible "symbolically."

Bryan Expert—On Politics.

Malone dug into Bryan's god-like pose, declaring that instead of giving his life to god, "Bryan, with a very passionate spirit and enthusiasm, has given most of his life to politics." Malone was greeted with a ten-minute demonstration when he finished.

Defense Wins One Victory.

In his ruling, Judge Raulston held that the only question involved was whether Scopes taught a theory which denied the divine creation of man and that no "experts" were needed to shed light on it.

The session opened this morning with prayers as usual, and then came the court's ruling. Later, when defense attorneys were objecting to the decision, the court announced that if he found he had made a mistake, after reading the testimony of the scientists, he would reverse himself.

Cannot Cross Examine Scientists.

After another clash between counsel the defense won a second minor victory when the court refused the state's appeal for the right to cross examine the witnesses. An agreement then was entered for adjournment of court until Monday, while the scientists hurried away to "the mansion," on a knoll overlooking Dayton to prepare their excluded testimony.

This strange procedure was taken first to preserve the record on the appeal to high jurisdiction, and second, that the scientific theories on the origin of man might not "leak" into the jury's ears. It was done with frequent clashes and after Clarence Darrow, ranking defense counsel, had openly charged the court with favoring the prosecution.

When that occurred, an ominous silence spread thru the court room. The spectators leaned forward in their seats, but the "bull dog" criminal lawyer from Chicago never flinched.

Says Judge Favors Bryan.

The judge's ruling had outraged defense attorneys. First, Arthur Garfield Hays, then Dudley Field Malone and lastly, Darrow himself had attacked the decision. Darrow was mad. Snapping his suspenders, the Chicagoan growled:

"It is strange that the court has sustained every motion made by the state and overruled every motion by the defense."

The court room was shocked. The state's attorneys were amazed. The judge stood facing Darrow, uncertain what to do.

"Does the attorney intend to reflect on the court?" Raulston, asked in a low tone.

"He has the right to decide that," snapped Darrow, looking the judge in the eye.

SOVIET WARNS BRITISH THEY PLAY WITH FIRE

"Cut Off the Hand" of New War, Says Pravda

MOSCOW, July 17.—An editorial in the Pravda replies to attacks upon Russia by the English conservative press by warning the militarist wing of the conservative party that they "are playing with fire."

It accuses Britain of carrying on intrigues against Russia in every country and trying to organize a united front against Russia and holds British diplomacy responsible for nearly every inimical action against Russia by the great powers in the border states and the Balkans.

New War And Blockade.

The Pravda says information has reached the Soviet government that the British ambassador to France has proposed to Briand a joint break with Russia and an immediate blockade which would be guaranteed by the British fleet in the Baltic and Black Seas and on land by Poland, Czecho-Slovakia, Latvia, Rumania and Esthonia.

Whether this is ordinary blackmail, says the Pravda, or should be regarded as confirmation of rumors of a big plot against Russia, "we are not going to yield to blackmail.

"If attacked, we shall repulse the foe in such a manner that the incendiaries won't derive any benefit."

Cut Off the Hand That Touches Russia!

The Pravda calls upon the workmen and peasants to watch events, and adds:

"Thanks to the capitalists, a conflagrative blaze may suddenly descend upon the laboring masses, who should be ready to cut off the criminal hand which set out to instingate the new adventure."

CAL TO GIVE FORD 200 GOVERNMENT SHIPS TO PAY POLITICAL DEBT

WASHINGTON, July 17.—It was the expectation here that Henry Ford would get the 200 old ships which the government wants to sell. His bid of $1,706,000 is regarded by Chairman O'Connor of the shipping board as "the best yet received."

The emergency fleet corporation will study the bids and then recommend to the shipping board that "the best" be accepted.

Ford got his bid in late, but the obliging shipping board held up awards until it finally arrived.

AS WE SEE IT

knowing that Sam Insull's employes were in a rebellious mood.

QUINLAN carried on a propaganda against the idea of a strike and drew such a dismal picture of the financial situation of the company that the men, lacking leadership and knowledge that they could do nothing but accept. Using this vote as a club, the employers went to the elevated men but the latter stuck to their guns and refused to agree to the company's terms. Twice they voted and twice they insisted on the paltry five cents per hour increase they asked for. It was then that the employers brot the faker Mahon from Detroit.

THAT gentleman immediately got to work and gave a long interview to the press, to the effect that industrial conditions did not warrant an increase in wages. One would imagine after listening to the wail of this faker, that Sam Insull, the owner of the elevated lines was begging on the street corners for alms. The hundreds of thousands of dollars that Insull can afford to subsidize opera stars with, comes out of the bone and flesh of the elevated employes. Are not the men who perform the arduous work of looking after the passengers who patronize the "L" lines at least as much entitled to consideration as the fat opera barkers and the female parasites that are supported in idleness at the expense of Insull's employes?

MAHON says that the split in the ranks of the surface and elevated men makes a successful fight impossible. But that split was caused by Mahon and his tool Quinlan so as to render a strike impossible, and dishearten the workers. Says Mahon: "An arbiter would strongly consider the fact that some 15,000 of the 20,000 street-car men had voted to renew the old agreement and likely would not consider the demands of the elevated men entirely justified. As long as the company officials on two occasions have refused to meet the demand and have cited industrial conditions to back their refusal, I do not believe at this time and under existing conditions it will be worth while to make a fight or even to resort to arbitration."

THE men's leader simply say that as the company refuses to grant the demands made by their employes for a five cents an hour raise and have convinced Mahon that their earning powers make an increase impossible, the men should not kick. Surely the company could not have a more useful ally than such a leader. He is worth more to them than any one of their highly paid experts. If he succeeds in forcing the company's terms on the elevated employes, he will have saved in the vicinity of three quarters of a million of dollars a year for Sam Insull. That should be worth something to Mahon. What is the price of this treachery?

BIGGEST EVENT OF THE SEASON AS USUAL IS TO BE THE WORKERS' PRESS PICNIC AT RIVERVIEW PARK

Always the biggest event of the picnic season, this year's Workers' Press Picnic promises to be bigger and better than ever. It will take place at Riverview Park on August 2.

August is a favorite month for picnics, as about that time the mellow beauty of early autumn supersedes the sticky July weather that makes life so miserable for the workers who live in this sometimes windless city.

The proceeds of the picnic will be devoted to the Workers Party Press. This is one of the greatest inducements to thousands of class conscious workers in Chicago, who realize the importance of having a labor press that will tell them the truth and offer them advice and guidance in their struggles with capitalist exploiters.

One of the papers to be benefited by the picnic is the DAILY WORKER, the only Communist daily in the English language. Thousands of workers who are not members of the Workers Party will want to help it live and grow in power and influence. They can help by coming to the picnic and adding their mite to the press fund.

Foster to Speak.

Of course, there are other inducements besides the call of plain duty. Every kind of amusement common to picnics will be offered. There will be speaking. Among those who will entertain the audience with talks on current events of interest to the working class are William Z. Foster, national chairman of the Workers Party; H. V. Philips, organizer of the American Negro Labor Congress; Ella Reeve Bloor and Chinese speakers. William F. Dunne, editor of the DAILY WORKER, will be chairman.

For those who like to trip the light fantastic, an excellent dance hall and snappy, jazzy music will tempt the most heavy of foot to gyrate to their heart's content. And when parched lips call for help, charming girls wearing red ribbons to distinguish them from angels will be easily visible with delightful and cooling concoctions.

Get your ticket now. Admission costs only 50 cents. The picnic is under the auspices of the Workers Party.

Commission Rules for Shippers.

WASHINGTON, July 17.—The allegation of commercial and shipping interests of Galveston, Texas, that the rates on export, import, and coastwise traffic, in carloads, between all points in western classification territory and Illinois, on one hand, and Galveston on the other are unreasonable was upheld by the interstate commerce commission today.

World Capitalism and the Soviet Union

By KARL RADEK

The Question of the Russian and Chinese Markets

THE only way left to international capitalism to solve the question of markets, is the second way: the capturing of new markets at any price. What new markets are to be obtained? If we consider such markets as the Japanese or Indian, we perceive that they are now developing their own industries, which very jealously oppose the intrusion of foreign goods. If we consider such markets as the countries of South America, we have to realize that their powers of absorption can only develop very slowly, as these countries are relatively very thinly populated.

In order to develop these countries by means of colonization, it would be necessary to invest enormous amounts of capital, which are likewise not available. There remains only Russia and China, which constitute a huge market for international capital, not only because our mujik, as well as the Chinese peasant, requires everything from the linen goods to tractors etc., but also because the peasant population in Russia and China can give an equivalent in exchange. The whole of Europe is suffering from the fact that it has to purchase agricultural products from America. But what can it pay to America in return? It has to pay with what America already possesses—with industrial products. Russia, therefore, is not only important for Europe as a market, but also as a source of raw materials and corn. God does not always punish the Bolsheviki with bad harvests! Agriculture is recovering more easily than industry, as its chief forces for the time being are still nature and human labor power. This is the explanation why, in spite of the misery and the backwardness of our peasantry, we have been able to raise our agriculture up to 80 per cent of the pre war standard. If there had been no bad harvests, then we should this year have attained to the pre war level of production. The basis of the progress of our agriculture is not yet technics, but the fact that the brain of the mujik is becoming active, that the revolution and the war have caused a profond psychological change among the peasantry.

WE do not always notice that in our every day work. Every foreigner however who has seen Russia before the war and who visits it today states, that there has been created for the first time in Russia a basis for a technical advance in peasant economy, because the mujik is beginning to think. He is no longer afraid of the tractors and other wonders from over the sea, but gladly accepts them. Russia can increase its agricultural export. It thereby offers European capital a huge and growing market.

If we now consider China, this country which, as regards its coal and iron resources, occupies the third place in the world and is thickly populated, it suffices to indicate the possibilities of development if one says that China is already today carrying on a foreign trade equal in value to three milliard gold roubles, althought capital has only penetrated into the narrow coast districts.

CHINA is looked upon even today as a medieval feudal power. This view however, is absolutely false. Manchuria alone which during the Russo-Japanese war from the standpoint of commerce, was of no importance, is now exporting 100 million puds of various kinds of grain yearly a fifth of the Russian prewar export. China constitutes today a new gigantic market, which, should world capital succeed in capturing, would serve as that decisive and vast reservoir with the help of which world capital would really be able to extricate itself from the morass of the last imperialist war.

At present one might say the following: "In Western Europe, world capitalism, with the help of English and American capital, is working feverishly to restore the conditions for stabilizing the social relations of the pre war period, and is undoubtedly achieving considerable results in this direction, in the first place in the sphere of the restoration of the world economic system." We know from our own experience what the stabilization of the valuta means in this connection. The situation of the workers in Russia is at present still far from being a splendid one. The fact, however, that the country possesses a stable valuta must have a correspondingly favorable effect upon the workers' household budget. The same applies to the state budget, and to economic life in general.

That which we are witnessing in this connection in Russia, is not absent in the capitalist countries. The stabilization of the valuta is the most important basis for the restoration of the whole economic life.

Let us now consider the present social and economic situation. Here we must in the first place examine the prospects of the struggle of international capital for new markets.

The Question of the Imperialist United Front

THE first question is, whether world capital, in this fight for the extension of the markets, has succeeded in creating a united front. This question must be answered in the negative. Capitalism has not succeeded in setting up a united front, and it will hardly succeed in doing so in the future.

Why is it so difficult for the bourgeoisie to set up this united front? For the reason that politics is a tenfold more complicated thing than it appears to be if one only considers it schematically. England is pursuing the same aims as America—the extension of the market, but in the first place for itself and not for the United States. And whilst the two states act together in certain questions, as, let us say, in the German reparation question, we see in other questions, likewise relating to Germany, that Germany becomes an object of an economic struggle between both parties. When the gold mark was introduced in Germany, the purpose of which was to cover the German mark, the question immediately arose, whether this gold mark should be based upon the dollar or the pound. If the gold mark rests upon the dollar basis, then it is dependent in the first place upon America, in the other case London would become the center for discounting German bills of exchange. There is proceeding here an uninterrupted struggle between English and American capital over the question of the domination of Germany. American capital is the stronger, but English capital is more organically bound up with Germany. As a result of "common" actions and a hard struggle, the American banks have succeeded in grabbing the fourth part of the shares of the German Bank. We therefore see in this connection, as regards the stabilising of capital conditions in Germany, where America and England act together, an uninterrupter struggle, which prevents common action on the part of the capitalist sharks.

In the Far East, England and America are likewise acting together and are endeavoring by this means to open the Chinese markets for foreign capital. Here, however, England relies upon diplomatic privileges which she obtained before the war. America does not posses these to the same extent as England. Soviet Russia is also intervening and demanding the abolition of all diplomatic privileges, and thereby delivers a blow to England and America. To the Americans there naturally occurs the question:

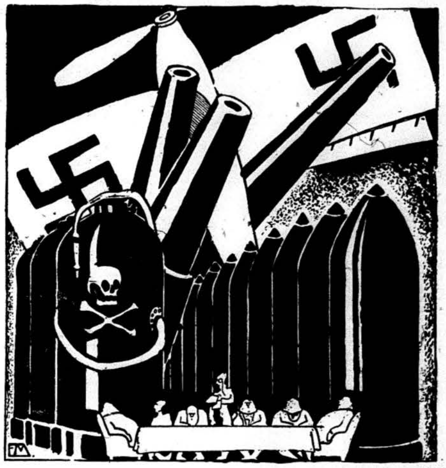
TALKING ABOUT DISARMAMENT AND PEACE



While invading the Riff country in Africa and dispatching troops and battleships to China, the "civilized" capitalist countries are talking about the limitation of the sale of armaments in Geneva and of peace in the Pacific at Honolulu, Hawaii.

Red Anthracite - -

By Alex Reid

THE color of anthracite is red. Down in Pennsylvania millions of tons of hard coal are produced yearly, and if you look at it closely you will see a red hue covers the mineral when it is hoisted from the bowels of the earth.

A flaming red splotch, with tattered flesh clinging to the ragged edges of the coal gleams in the sunlight as it is dumped into the chute, amidst a crashing roar of sorting machinery and a cloud of coal dust.

RED with the human blood, and as the boys pick out the dirt from the coal as it passes along the picking tables, they notice not the soft dark spongy scraps mixed with the coal. They are used to it, they have seen it often, it is part of their work.

On July 8, three men in the anthracite were crushed to death on the main haulage way, as a result of another violation of the mining law. The law provides that manholes, "refuge places" shall be made not more than 60 feet apart, whitewashed and kept in proper condition for the refuge of the miners, when travelling or working on the haulage roads as the trip passes with the coal cars. But no manholes were near, they were caught in a trap.

THE roar of the onrushing trip grew louder, the men were frantic, the cars were almost on them as they faced for a place of refuge. That is a place of safety called a manhole. The law says they are to have a manhole, but the law doesn't amount to anything to the hard coal magnates.

What thoughts were in their heads that day as they realized their position? No doubt, they became aware of the trap in which they were caught, and the impossibility of escape. They were husbands and fathers, with all the hopes and aspirations of healthy men, looking forward to the day when they could give their children a better chance in life than they had, give to them an education, and build a little home for the old lady to be secure in her old age, proud and happy in the knowledge of security from the dreaded landlord.

IT happened quicker than we can tell it. The trip climbed the obstacles, three of them. The entry was a mass of cars, coal and timber. A red fluid mixed with the coal, saturated it and passed on along the ditch at the side of the haulage way, and the cold hard coal was covered with a sticky soft fleshy-like substance, and the three men finally found a refuge from the murderous operators of the anthracite in Pennsylvania.

To make manholes and keep them in repair costs but a few cents extra and the law specifically provides for them.

OVER 500 men per year are crushed, killed, in the anthracite and 90 per cent of these cases are a direct result of the negligence of the coal barons and from 2,200 to 25,000 per year injured to a major or minor degree. But what of that? It costs the company nothing to continue to butcher them, while it would cost a few cents to make and keep manholes.

And besides that, there are too many men in the industry now, 200,000 too many of them; at least the operators say so, and J. L. Lewis, the miners' president, also says so.

To hell with the men, human labor power is the cheapest commodity on the American market, squeeze them out, run or starve them out, crush them and fill up the manholes. No money can go for manholes. Paint the hard coal red, to hell with the men, gold is God. God is gold in the anthracite.

IN 1923, the Glen Alden Coal company made $3,125,895. Profits in three months.

In 1924, the Lehigh and Wilkes Barre Coal company made $7,404,010 profit.

In 1923, the Philadelphia and Reading Coal company made $5,375,285 profit. And the Pennsylvania Coal and Coke corporation made $1,115,658 profit in 1924.

Those four companies for one year made approximately $17,020,848 profit out of the human blood of the slaves in the hell holes of the hard coal, yet no money for safety for those victims of the insane economic system.

AROUND a manhole stands a group of miners, 1000 brothers from the same vicinity with heads bare and bowed. Strong husky men, these miners, gathered today at that manhole to lower unto their last refuge place the remains of their murdered brothers.

Tears silently flow from many eyes as the final act takes place. The victims were well-known and respected in the community, and the worst part of the tragedy is yet untold.

TONIGHT down there in the shacks of the deceased miners a coal oil lamp burns. A shadow of sorrow surrounds the homes of the widows. The blow was too sudden, no preparation was given them before the mangled thing was wheeled into the house before the burial. A look of black despair, and anguish, of woe, covers the face of the wives, their spirit seems broken, their very lives are crushed. The picture is pitiful to behold as the little ones cry for "Dad." "Dad, I want my Dad."

For a moment I leave the scene of sorrow and look into the Waldorf Astoria Hotel in New Yrk. What a contrast. Pointed out to the writer a few weeks ago were the parasites' wives and daughters of the owners of the hard coal, bedecked with jewels, lounging at a well-filled table covered with all the choicest things eatable. And a couple of slaves waiting on them, to attend to their lightest wants. Sweet music was being supplied by a concealed orchestra, and geranium perfume floated thru the air.

LOOKING back today from the hard coal mines in this hour of sorrow, I recall the shudder I experienced when looking at the sensuous parasites congregated in the luxurious hotel eating of the bodies, and drinking the life blood of the murdered hard coal miners.

THIS state of affairs must continue in the coal business as long as the system of private ownership prevails. Nationalization of mines with control in the hands of the workers to the end that service and safety will be the first consideration is the only cure for the disease of private ownership and its resulting terrors.

And as our eyes wander back to the mines we see a cloud of dust arising in the atmosphere as the coal is brought to the surface and dumped into the chutes, amidst the noise of engines, shakers, picking tables, washers, and crushes, and as the boys pick the dirt from the coal, a soft, sticky flesh-like substance is found and there in the sunlight we notice that the color of anthracite is red, red as the flames of hell to which the coal barons would consign all rebels against their bloody rule.

Coolidge Welcomes Enemies of the Polish Workers

By B. K. Gebert

WE have received the following information from Poland:

In the middle of the month of July, Count Alexander Skrzynski will visit America. He is Poland's minister of the foreign affairs. The government of Poland has instructed him to get a new loan from American bankers. On the occasion of his visit to this country he will deliver a few public lectures about the "heaven" existing in Poland at the present time.

THE arrival of Count Skrzynski should be given wide-spread publicity among the Polish, Ukrainian and White-Russian workers of this country.

The American workers ought to carry on a special campaign of meetings and demonstrations against the terror that the government of Poland is carrying on against the workers and peasants, and national minorities whose territory Poland has occupied. It is necessary to inform the American public of the nature of the government which this Skrzynski is representing.

With his arrival it is necessary to let everybody know about the arrests and murders of workers and peasants, mass persecutions, the closing of Ukrainian and White-Russian schools, military colonization of Ukrainian and White-Russian territory, by Polish cossacks, and about many other brutal acts of the Polish bourgeoisie.

TRY to organize demonstrations and protest meetings in the cities where Count Skrzynski is going to speak.

WHO is Count Skrzyuski?

Count Alexander Skrzynski, Polish foreign minister owns the large estate of Zagorzaly in Galicia.

In 1909, Count Skrzynski joined the diplomatic corps of the Austro-Hungarian monarchy and first served as attache in the foreign ministry in Vienna. In 1910, he was appointed as secretary to Franz Joseph's embassy in Paris.

The present "great Polish patriot" could not serve the Hapsburg monarchy for in 1918 the revolution swept away the Hapsburgs and the Count Skrzynski had to look for a job.

The so-called Polish republic arose and its government appointed him minister to Roumania, where he served from 1919 to 1922, putting thru the military alliance of Roumania and Poland, against Soviet Russia.

After this he became Polish delegate to the infamous league of nations, and when the present Grabski government came into power, he was appointed its foreign minister.

AS a foreign minister, Count Skrzynski made a treaty according special privileges to the vatican, practically giving it complete domination over the Polish masses.

Besides this he made other agreements with the states bordering Soviet Russia, organizing them to make war on the workers and peasants' government.

He is a tool of French imperialism, which is carrying on propaganda among Polish immigrants in France to join the army to fight against Morocco.

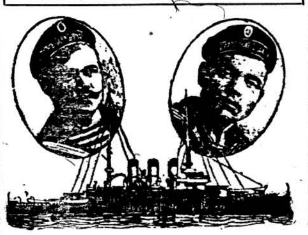
IT did not surprise us to read of Coolidge's official welcome to this bitter enemy of Soviet Russia and the working class. He will also be welcomed by the wealthy Poles and yellow socialists of this country, who have arranged a banquet here in Chicago, to be held at the Congress Hotel on July 25.

WORKERS of America must know that the real reason for Count Skrzynski coming to America is to get an additional loan for the Polish government, more money for the army which is being trained by French and British officers for war, not only against Soviet Russia but also against the national minorities and workers and peasants in Poland, who are in a death struggle against the bloody government of landlords, bourgeoisie, priests and traitors to the working class, a government controlled by Wall Street and French and British imperialists—all of whom are interested in one thing: to keep Polish workers, peasants and national minorities in chains.

Polish workers and peasants warn the American bankers that when they get the power in their hands, they will not recognize a single dollar of debt to American bankers.

American workers then will be sent to collect money from Polish workers as they have been sent to Russia, Latin America and now to China. But will they go? They must not!

"Count Potjomkin Tawrichesky"



TWENTY years ago, in June 1905, the first mutiny in the Russian czar's navy took place. The rumblings of the coming revolution were felt all over Russia. The food and the iron discipline in the navy were rotten. On the battleship "Count Potjomkin Tawrichesky" of the Black Sea squadron stationed near Odessa the meat was full of worms, but the drunken doctor pronounced it good for consumption. The sailors refused to eat it and the infuriated commander ordered the guards to fire on the mutineers. Comrade Matjushenko, (on the left of the picture) cried to guards: "Comrades! Why should you murder your brothers?!" At these words the commander lost all his senses, and snatching from a guard the rifle shot Comrade Matjushenko dead. But the commander was felled death on the spot by the butt of rifle from another guard and the revolt was on. The comrade shown on the right of the picture then took charge of the battleship. Most of the brutal officers who resisted were shot and thrown overboard. The killed sailor was taken ashore and laid to rest under military guard of honor in the harbor. A general strike began in Odessa and the police was afraid to show up on the streets. Thousands of workers paid their respects to the killed comrade. Another battleship joined the revolt, but the rest of the squadron was taken away from Odessa to save it from revolt. The sailors after cruising for a while in the Black Sea finally left the Russian waters, went to Roumanian shores, left the battleship there, and scattered to different countries.

The Fireman's Death

By Liam O'Flaherty

EIGHT bells tolled slowly in the engine room. He marched down the iron ladder into the stokehold. The others marched rapidly in front of him, their light shod feet pattering, their covered left hands rushing along the hot rails with a slipping sound. His feet stumbled heavily down. His hand trembled on the rail.

He was sick he should be in bed. But he had been a fireman for twelve years without missing a watch. His pride said: "Die before your fires rather than let a fellow worker shed his body's sweat for you."

When he landed in the stokehold the hot fumes struck him in the chest. He gasped, caught his eyes with his fists and staggered. His stomach muscles contracted. They crowded around him in pity, urging him to go back to his bunk. He straightened himself fiercely and thrust them away with a swinging movement of his arms. "I'd die sooner than that," he growled.

HE marched to the fires. His thin outward curving calves were visible passing the bright glow from the ashpits of the furnaces. His tall slim body and his bony head were hidden in the gloom.

The retiring watch went up the ladder to the deck. Their faces were black. Their eyes were white. Their sodden trousers clung to their sweating thighs. They went up the ladder groaning curses on the sea, the fires, God, and the rich men who make slaves toil in the bowels of ships.

It was very dark. Ashes and coal dust floated in a thick mass thru the sluggish air. The electric lights glimmered like dim candles. The bulky forms of the boilers loomed in the darkness. The engines thudded. A dull volcanic murmur came from the hidden fires.

HE stripped before his fires and put his sweat rag in his belt. Then he seized the long swaying rake to clean his low fire. He opened the furnace door. His body flashed into the firelight. He was naked to the waist. The ribs rose in ridges on his fleshless breast. The skin lay taught along his protruding jaws. His eye sockets were black. His biceps were rugged knots interlaced with sickly blue veins.

He stooped forward and thrust in the rake. A wave of heat emerged, striking him in the face. He reeled before it for a moment. Then he made a great effort and stood erect. A cold sweat poured out all over his body. That terrified him. Had the others seen? He looked cautiously. They were working furiously. They had not seen. Good.

HE swore a blasphemous oath and muttered to himself: "I'm not going to give in." He hauled out the red hot ashes and the jagged cakes of spent coal that clung like glue to the fire bars. He finished one side. He changed over the live coals from the other side. He cleaned the other side. All finished. He handed the shovel to the trimmer to coal the bars. Then he walked very stifly to the ventilator.

God! Not a breath of wind came down the dusty gaping tub from the sunbaked deck. His lungs strained like inflated bladders to catch the hot air that struggled down his parched throat slowly.

And there was a great painful inward heaving of his sides like the panting of a tired horse.

His whole body murmured: "Water, water, water." But his fierce mind would not listen to the cry. Water meant death and surrender. He must feed the fires.

SUDDENLY his head seemed to whirl round and round. Madness seized him. He wrinkled up his mouth and nose. Then he laughed harshly. Rasping sounds filled the stokehold, furnace doors opening, shovels grating along the iron deck, black coal being shot in among the licking flames. It was the madness of conflict. His weakness vanished. He dashed at his shovel, seized it, spat and opened the door of his right hand fire. "Give it to her boys," yelled the pot bellied engineer, as he rushed into the stokehold. "Steam is falling. Steam is falling. Give her a shake."

The great fires roared and shot out whirling shafts of yellow flame to meet each shovel full of black coal that was hurled into them. He talked wildly to the fires as he hurled in the coal. He called them foul names and put out his tongue at them. He glared at them and hurled himself at them savagely. They had been his enemies for twelve years. He piled coal on them, more, more, more until he smothered them under a black glistening mound. Their vast roar was submerged beneath the already red glowing black mound. Then he dropped his shovel again and stepped away.

HAH! There was strength in him still.

BUT what was this? He could not hear. Not a sound. And everything was dim. His eyes had fallen back into his skull. Somebody was standing in front of him making a noise. He gripped his eyes and peered. He saw a mouth wide open and moving, spitting black coal dust from its blood red tongue as it spoke. That was the bloody Irishman from the starboard boiler. Telling him he looked like a corpse and should go on deck. By the slippery heels of the bald headed Chilian deck swabber! He ground his teeth and mustered all his strength. "Leave me alone" he yelled. "I'm a Glasgow fireman and I never give in. And I NEVER will. Leave me alone."

His voice ended in a shriek.

He groped for the slice. His hands clawed at it blindly for he could see nothing in the gloom. The long thick iron bar swung towards him as he pulled at it. It pushed against his shoulder and he staggered backwards three paces. "Steady on," he muttered. He crouched and raised it, trembling all over. Then he groped to the fires. He opened the door and thrust the wedge shaped point of the slice at the base of the mound. He ran it along the bars to the very end. Then he drew himself together. He must lift that mound and break it in the middle, in order to give air to the flames. He jumped with a loud gasp and landed, crosswise, face downwards, on the slice, his two hands clenching the slice against his hollowed stomach. He almost lost consciousness. A terrific pain ran from his stomach to his head making all his body numb. But his brain still thot of the fire and the mound that must be broken. It was not broken. The slice had not left the bars? It had merely bent slightly downwards from the middle to the end, under the impact of his body. His feet reached for the deck. He stood erect. He moved backwards two paces slowly, crouching low, all his sinews rigid, his eyeballs protruding.

THEN uttering a savage yell, he jumped again on the slice. He landed once more upon it crosswise, his two hands clenching it against his hollowed stomach. The slice rose by the head. The mound broke. A huge red scar appeared. The flames shot out. With a roar they covered the mound and whirled about the door, licking the air and darting out along the slice towards the hanging body of the fireman.

He did not move. His body hung limply across the slice. His toes tipped the deck. His eyes were fixed. His lips were white. He was dead.

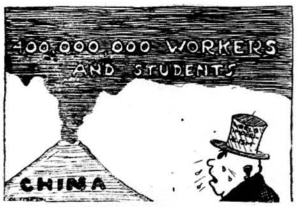
The Chinese Volcano in Action



By Sol Fishman, 15 years old, Y. W. L., Coney Island, N. Y.

Social-Democracy in Wisconsin

By ANDREW OVERGAARD.

ANY worker who believes that there is any difference with the socialist party of Wisconsin and the German social-democratic party led by Noske, Scheidemann and Co. (murderers of Karl Liebknecht and Rosa Luxemburg) both in relation to everyday demands of the workers or in international affairs, should follow closely the editorial policy of the Milwaukee Leader in relation to these questions.

The Milwaukee Leader, which was established by the support financially and morally of the organized labor movement here, no longer speaks in behalf of the working class. The Leader has in fact become the personal mouthpiece of Victor Berger and a few other traitors to the working class. As far as the news columns are concerned there is no difference between the Leader and the Hearst scandal sheets. Hardly any news of a real working class nature finds its way past the censorship of old Vic. Berger.

Instead one can find statements by oil kings, bankers and steel kings coming back from Europe and lauding the efforts of Von Hindenburg in stabilizing Germany, the near collapse of Soviet Russia, etc., all without editorial comment. Such is the order of the day in this so-called "socialist organ."

Political Mulligan of Socialist Party.

AFTER the death of Robert LaFollette, the socialist party is in a bad pickle. The socialist party in the last presidential election sacrificed its last principles of independence and crept together with all the labor fakers on the LaFollette band wagon. Berger lets the cat out of the bag in his "findings" in the June '25 issue of the Leader, stating: "The socialist party of our state (which held the balance of power in both houses of the legislature) has spent so much enthusiasm and money to elect LaFollette that it is still somewhat weakened."

He states further that' "The so-called progressives of Wisconsin were never a party with any definite set of principles. When LaFollette started out on his reform career, he was simply opposing the railroads and corporate wealth on the question of taxation."

It Had to Die.

HERE Victor Berger admits that the socialist party supported a movement without principles, but that it could not help itself. It had to die anyway so whether it died by suicide or was killed by the lion makes no difference. He "finds" further that, "Since the LaFollette movement in our state was always overwhelmingly a personal affair centering in Robert Marion LaFollette—its heart fell out when Bob died!"

After all the Communists were right that this movement was a personal movement not based upon the organized strength of the workers, who had nothing to say about policy or platform. The story told to the workers of the state sounded quite different before the election.

Then Victor was busy slamming the Communists for daring to appeal to the workers for support to the only candidates of the working class and running on a definite class program the candidates of the Workers Party, Foster and Gitlow. At the present time there are many contenders for the place left open after LaFollette's death. Governor Blaine, Mrs. LaFollette, Jr., and a number of others are already in the scramble for political jobs.

The question of what the socialist party is going to do remains to be seen. It is rumored that the socialists intend to put up ex-Lieutenant Governor Comings, who is scheduled to speak together with Debs at the July 19 picnic of the party. It is even rumored that Comings has made application to join the socialist party.

Paid Low Wages.

The American socialist party is well on the road to compete with the Swedish party of which one of the princes is said to be a member. Victor can soon "find" that the "better class" is being converted to socialism. What is the socialist party doing to strengthen the weak trade union movement in the state of Wisconsin? The answer must be: absolutely nothing. The city of Milwaukee has a so-called socialist mayor and administration and still we find that the wages paid workers in this city rank among some of the lowest.

It is indeed sad to listen to the discussion in the Central Labor Council here, which is controlled by the S. P. Home rule, high buildings and a number of other unimportant legislative reform bills plus label league reports and a few jurisdictional squabbles constitute the business of that body, but if questions of international trade union unity, amalgamation, a labor party, united front on the Chinese intervention by the imperialist powers and a number of other important problems are brought up it is either ridiculed or buried in the executive committee.

Socialist Party and Imperialism.

IN Victor Berger's "findings" one day we find him in a terrible rage against the imperialists in China, but the next day he "finds" that after all the Chinese people cannot yet be trusted to protect the foreigners and it is a great question whether they can govern themselves.

His solution of the problem is that "We good democrats should try to convince the foreign capitalists not to be so cruel to the Chinese people. Unfortunately the arguments used against the Chinese workers on strike are the bayonets and guns of the imperialist powers. The Chinese workers and students are tired of turning the other cheek and have determined to do some fighting of their own..

They will probably not pay much attention to the "findings" of Victor Berger and other socialist pacifists.

Attacks Soviet Russia.

THE editorial in the Leader entitled, "What Moscow Missed" hits the nail on the head and definitely exposes the socialist party of Wisconsin and its boss, Victor Berger, as part and parcel of the same imperialist bandits who are now shooting down Chinese workers and students and preparing an attack against the only workers' republic in the world—Soviet Russia.

According to this editorial, Moscow is going to pay for having had the nerve to expose the treacherous role of European socialist parties since the 1917 revolution. Lenin made some wrong calculations, according to this "finding," that instead of exposing the mensheviks as capitalist—tools he should have united with them and forget the revolution.

Says the editorial further: "By missing this opportunity and intriguing against both the capitalists and the socialists, the Russian Bolsheviks made enemies of the organized workers in Europe as well as the capitalists." Here Berger lets the cat out of the bag. The develish Bolsheviks have dared to make enemies out of the capitalist class and their servants the social traitors and they must be punished for that crime.

The editorial continues: "Now the international situation is rapidly drifting towards an isolation of Soviet Russia and China by the big powers and the only ones that can protect Russia and China, the socialists and trade unionists of Europe, have learned by bitter experience that they get no thanks for helping Moscow out of trouble. In fact, many European socialists have come to the conclusion that socialist ideals will be better served by letting real capitalists run Russia rather than by supporting a capitalist regime under a Communist label."

Socialists Fight for Capitalism.

WHAT more proof is needed to show the role of social-democracy as the last bulwark of capitalism? Oh you vicious Bolsheviks, why don't you crawl on your feet to Noske, Scheidemann, MacDonald, Vandervelde, the murderers of the workers and peasants of Bulgaria and all the rest of the traitors to the working class and ask them to fight against the imperialist goverunments, of which they are part and parcel.

The class conscious workers wish to ask Victor Berger where in hell he has ever found those traitors including himself, fighting for the oppressed workers and peasants of Europe and the far East.

You speak about isolation, why don't you mention the unity between the Russian and British Trade Unions comprising the two strongest trade union movements of the world. If you call that isolation, let us have more of it for the workers. The Chinese masses have learned where to look for protection against the imperialist robbers. Experience has taught them that Soviet Russia run by the Communists, is the best protection and along with Soviet hussia stand the Communist Parties all over the world.

Yes, Victor, many socialists of the caliber you mention have come to the conclusion that it is better to give up all socialist ideals and vote for war credits as in the French chamber, for ammunition to shoot down the Riff people who are fighting for independence.

Enemies of Workers.

WE know that you and your kind are the enemies of our class in Soviet Russia and that you will be rejoicing when the imperialist powers attempt to attack the First Workers' Republic. We know further that in due time when the American proletariat finds itself in struggle for power and attempts to take over the means of production you will be leading the fight against them. The working masses of Milwaukee will in due time learn on which side of the fence these traitors are and find out that after all they are nothing but the last bulwark of capitalism.

To the social-democratic workers we say, unite with the Communists under the slogans, "Stand by Soviet Russia," "Hands Off China." Unite to prevent another world slaughter.

SOVIET UNION USES AMERICAN CAPITAL

FOLLOWING the granting of a large manganese concession by the Soviet government to the W. A. Harriman and Co. New York bankers, the demand for recognition of the Soviet Union on the part of American business firms is making itself heard.

The Soviet Union conceded the rich manganese workings in Soviet Georgia to Harrimann, in return for a percentage of the receipts. In addition Harriman is to bring in capital and modern machinery. The concession goes back to the Soviet Union after a term of years.

American Labor Press Directory.

This book should be invaluable for either persons or groups who get out publicity in behalf of labor causes. It lists the names and addresses of some 600 labor papers published in the United States and Canada and gives a list of labor papers published in other countries.

In addition to the names and addresses it gives information on the editor and publisher, size, frequency of publication circulation figures where available and other information interesting to labor editors and publicity workers.

Hitherto the only way of getting data on labor papers was from lists compiled by individuals and often unreliable and out of date. If you or your organization gets out publicity for labor papers this book will be a valuable tool. It may be ordered thru the DAILY WORKER Literature Department, 1113 W. Washington Blvd., Chicago.

An Italian Voice Speaks for Soviet Russia

By GUIDO MIGLIOLI

Italian representative on the Peasants' International

ONE of the peasants at Quareli, Tiflis, Sovinet Russia, had said to me in parting: "You must write about us and describe everything which you have seen."

I promised him to do so, and for this reason I crave the hospitality of your columns for the following lines:

In the words of that peasant was expressed the whole history of the Georgian peasantry, the whole soul of this industrious population.

THE peasant of that salubrious country, vibrant with new life, is possessed of just one desire: to be recognized. It is the natural aspiration of a people that is feverishly engaged day by day in building up the new life born of the revolution. He feels the need of refuting the calumnies spread about the Georgian peasant that he did not share in the passionate determination of all the toilers to defend the conquests of the revolution and to speed on the march of progress. It is a good reminder to all political students that the history of the Georgian renaissance is being written not only in the towns, but also in the villages, that it is wroght by the daily toil of these humble yet powerful tillers of the soil.

There is no need to color the truth, when it is so bright and self-evident.

ON Sunday morning we arrived at Telave, a little township nestled in the midst of the most flourishing agricultural plains. Even on the day of rest I saw the intense activity of the little town, which had all the appearance of a modern center of culture and intellectual persuits. The chairman of the Soviet showed me the new schools, the new theater in course of construction, the hall for the public organizations. All this is being built upon the ruins of the atrocious regime which for many generations had oppressed the population and kept it in poverty and ignorance; now the people are eagerly building up their social institutions, their cooperative and credit organizations. In front of the cooperative store, which now handles 60 per cent of the town's trade there were some silent women vainly trying to sell something. Cooperation has put them out of business. I took a photograph of these two opposite worlds which may still be seen side by side, the one accompanying the other like the shadow of the night before the fulness of the dawn.

I was particulairly interested in cooperative credit organizations. In a few months the membership had grown into 1,000, and the paid up capital to 30,000 roubles. Deposits are beginning to pour in. Thousands of peasants come to this modest-looking building to ask for advice and to deposit their savings. I smothered the kind and intelligent superintendent with a multitude of questins, which my travelling companion, Comrade Kantor, faithfully translated. I asked what was the ratio as between deposits and loans. I would like to reproduce here those figures.

IN a short space of time there was on hand 100,000 roubles, of which only 10 per cent had been loaned out on long credits, which signified the quick turnover of the capital and the intensity of the peasants' labor. The progressive index of financial operations has insured to this little, yet solid institution steady progress and stability.

Such was the life in the little town, and the same vigor I found vibrating in the villages.

I had the opportunity to visit the villages of Shilda and Quareli. The difficult communications prevented some foreign visitors from cutting deep into the villages. Nevertheless, as I had already done in the Ukraine and on the Don, I tried immediately to get into the villages and to see with my own eyes the cultural and economic development, the political growth of the agricultural population.

AT Shilda I was overwhelmed by the strength of the agricultural cooperation. Having a membership of 300 people, it is already a prosperous institution, well supplied with agricultural implements and transacting considerable purchases and sales of commodities. I looked over the balance sheet and found the institution perfectly solvent. I attended a meeting of the cooperative organization that was addressed by a young Georgian peasant, a splendid type of vigorous manhood. Of course, there is still a good deal of backwardness in regard to technical equipment. The vineyards are cultivated with painstaking care, but there is sitll plenty of virgin soil to be ploughed up by machinery. In regard to sericulture the methods are still rather primitive. Not all the peasants appreciate as yet all the advantages to be derived from proper sericultural methods. Nevertheless I believe that the silk industry is going to be one of the leading sources of prosperity in that country. The same in regard to cattle raising, where the observer could see at first blush the need for zoo-technical selection.

THE work of scientific progress will still require a good deal of time. Nevertheless I could not help seeing that tremendous results have already been achieved during the 4 years of Soviet rule, which does everything for the promotion of education and progress.

I was particularly struck by the fact that in such a short space of time the masses have been so thorougly aroused and enlightened as to assimilate all the forms of social and economic propaganda. This is clearly the result of the work of the Communist leaders and of the leaders of the trade unions and of the cooperative movement, as well as of the technical workers who have devoted themselves entirely to this work, with the same generous self-sacrifice that I personally had the occasion to witness in the governmental and cooperative institulife. At Shilda I found a people's home and a theater, new and splendid buildings, and a consumers' cooperative store embracing 250 families. I also found a body of young people aglow with political passion and a thirst for knowledge and modern ideas.

THE same striving after education struck me upon my visit to the village of Quareli, where the well-kept roads and the architecture of the new buildings bore witness to the intense amount of work accomplished in the last 2 or 3 years. One of the local teachers told me: "The progress of our school is expressed in the following figures: before the revolution—100 pupils, in 1922—200, and in 1925—more than 600. There are not enough schools now to accomodate all the sons of the revolution who are clamouring for knowledge and education."

It was my good fortune at Quareli to meet a countryman of mine, an Italian from Trentino who has been living as a laborer in this village for the last 5 years.

I took him aside and engaged him in conversation, convinced that with the frankness characteristic of the average Italian he would give me a plain and unvarnished story of the life and work of these peasants. What he told me was more than I had ever expected.

"Look at this cooperative store," he said, "look at these flour-mills which also belong to the cooperators. These are only the more striking signs of the prfound progress of the entire population. Among the older people there is still some reluctance to accept the modern methods of agriculture, but the young people are eager to learn. Here is the newspaper posted on the wall for everyone to read. If this village will continue at such a pace, it will become one of the most prosperous and happiest in Kakhetia."

I was profoundly moved by the story of this Italian laborer, who spoke with such faith in the future of the country that has adopted him, and at that moment my thought turned back to the Italian peasants who know of no such bright hope just now.

ON the following day, walking over the blossoming fields and hills, past the gay vineyards, I felt that the day was not far distant when my countryman's words would come true.

After a short visit to the gigantic state wine-cellars at Tsinondali, I traversed the broad plains of the Mukuzan region, where the methods of cultivation are more rational and up-to-date. I saw the vineyards in the full splendor of springtime. I found the whole population carried away by enthusiasm for constructive work and progress. A good deal of credit for this enthusiasm was due to the energetic and practical propaganda of the experimental vine-growing station, organized by the local vine-growing department. If the method of grafting will be adopted over 250 desiatines in the coming year, it will mean the adoption of the new methods by the whole country within the next few years.

THIS is indeed a revolution which is felt in the growth and development of the country. I speak of a revolution which transforms, which brings culture, which moves towards prosperity and progress, which ensures peace and solidarity among all the toilers, and fraternal accord among the peasants and the workers. This is not the "revolution" spoken of by bourgeois newspapers and short-sighted and ignorant politicians in Europe, who allege the peasants of Georgia to be in revolt against the new order of things.

Further Communist Arrests in Egypt

By J. B. (Jerusalem)

IN September 1924, Egypt was the scene of a Communist trial. Zaglul Pasha, who was at that time at the head of the government and at the pinnacle of his power, wished to show to the English how well he was able to maintain order. All the accused were condemned to imprisonment with hard labor. The Egyptian reaction rejoiced: Communism in Egypt is now dead and buried; "all" the leaders are arrested, "all" organizations dissolved and "all" Communist nests cleared out.

Zaglul Pasha had scarcely carried out this task for British imperialism when there came the end of Zaglul glory. Driven from the government, threatened and humiliated, the party of Zaglul has today become the victim of that Bankers' clique which is devoted to England and to whom Zaglul Pasha, thanks to his weak and ambiguous policy, gave the possibility of taking over power. This clique—the Zivar Pasha ministry—is preparing to deliver a decisive blow to the Egyptian nationalists. No means of incitement and calumny appears too vile for this ministry, which is supported by English bayonets, in order to exterminate all revolutionary and freedom-loving elements still remaining in Egypt. It is therefore a matter of course that the rage of these betrayers of the Egyptian people is directed first of all against that organization which appears to them to be the most dangerous: The Communist Party of Egypt.

In spite of the heavy blows which the Communist Party had already suffered in the previous year in spite of espionage and attacks, the Egyptian Communist Party had recovered with surprising rapidity. New forces were streaming to it, the revolutionary mood among the workers and the advanced intelligenzia, which was visibly strenghtened by the British acts of violence, caused the slogans of the Communists to meet with an enthusiastic response. The trade unions, under Communist influence, revived again and, along with the brother party of Palestine and Syria, the basis was created for a wide field of activity in the Near East.

THE Egyptian police were obliged to intervene before the "danger" became too great. By means of an expensive system of provocateurs and spies, they concocted a monstrous Communist "conspiracy." On the 31st of May and the days following numerous arrests of Communists took place. In all, 17 persons have been imprisoned up till now, the majority of them being natives, among them being journalists, officials and workers. As the police were at a loss to bring forward concrete charges, the various government organs resorted all the more eagerly to insinuations of the vilest sort. From the most minute descriptions of "Moscow Emissaries," up to piquant details concerning the complicity of the English Communists and the Soviet government, there was not lacking one of the features which distinguish reactionary incitement thruout the world.

In fact, it even seems as if the entire grandious action aimed just as much at creating an impression abroad as appeasing the native bourgeosie. Feverish search has been made for proofs as to the subversive activity of Russian agents in British spheres of influence. Zivar Pasha is now in a position to bring forward everything Chamberlain's heart desires: Communist "conspiracies," mysterious "Eyes of Moscow," English delegates, and even a whole trunk full of documents! The thing is so artfully contrived that it is the easiest thing in the world to use it as a means against the hated Soviet government.

AND not only this. The fact that two of the arrested jorunalists are members of the staffs of prominent Zaglulist newspapers, suffices in order to involve the Zaglul party in the affair. It is pointed out at the same time that the Communists, like the Zaglulists, were connected with that group of terrorists, the members of which carried out the assassination of the governor of the Sudan, Sir Lee Stack, in November last year and who were condemned to death for the same in a trial which has just beep concluded. The aim which is being pursued in seeking to prove these connections is only too obvious.

By such means, and with the help of the Egyptian bourgeoisie and brutal police terror, the English hope to throttle the revolutionary movement in Egypt.

NATIONAL DEFENSE CONFERENCE HELD IN CHICAGO ON JUNE 28th UNANIMOUSLY ADOPTS RESOLUTIONS

The resolutions printed herewith were unanimously passed by the more than one hundred delegates present at the National Conference for Labor Defense, held in Ashland Auditorium, Chicago, June 28. These represented workers' organizations from all parts of the country and were called together by the Labor Defense Council to unite all forces in the labor movement against persecution of workers and for defense of all class war prisoners regardless of political opinion or industrial affiliation.

The Conference founded the International Labor Defense, an individual and collective membership organization that is to undertake the rôle of champion for all workers attacked by organized capital irrespective of their faith or affiliation. A National Committee of 37 was elected upon which are many prominent figures in the labor, radical, and liberal movements of this country among whom are Eugene V. Debs, Upton Sinclair, Bishop William Montgomery Brown, Fred Mann, Ralph Chaplin, Scott Nearing, Wm. Z. Foster, Benjamin Gitlow and Ben Fletcher. Andrew T. McNamara of Pittsburgh was elected chairman of the organization, E. C. Wentworth, vice-chairman, and James P. Cannon of Chicago the secretary.

At the conference 25 local trade unions beside central labor bodies, workers' defense organizations and labor fraternal and benefit societies totalling a membership well over 200,000 were represented by delegates. In addition scores of endorsements came from workers' organizations and prominent individuals thruout the country who could not be represented there.

The resolutions that follow were passed by the conference in the nature of instructions for work to the officers of the International Labor Defense and taken as a whole, comprise a complete program.

2. Against Injunctions and Anti-Labor Legislation

THE campaign of the exploiters to crush and terrorize the organizations of the workers includes, among its most effective weapons, special anti-labor legislation and the arbitrary use of court injunctions against workers in the midst of struggle. Criminal syndicalism laws of an almost uniform type are now on the statute books of thirty-five states and serve as the most handy "legal" weapons at the disposal of the bosses. These laws are supplemented by lesser statutes, such as anti-picketing laws, and by decisions of the highest courts in the several states and the union, designed to close every door to the legality of the labor movement. The use of autocratic injunctions in labor disputes turns over to corporation hirelings on the bench virtual control over the activities of workers' organizations and shuts them off from all means of legal redress.

The infamous Daugherty injunction issued by Judge Wilkerson practically outlawed the great railroad shopmen's strike of 1922 and paralyzed its activity in all parts of the country. The notorious Busick injunction in California condemned members of the I. W. W. to prison without the right of trial. Practically every industrial dispute in recent years has brought with it the issuance of injunctions calculated to break down the resistance of fighting workers.

Criminal syndicalist laws and injunctions are aimed not only against the revolutionary sections of the working class. The whole organized labor movement is menaced by this legislative and judicial tyranny. The persecutions of the more radical workers by these means are only experiments in preparation for their wholesale use against all sections of the labor movement which show any disposition to fight for the interests of the workers. There is already abundant evidence of the intentions of the capitalists in this regard.

It is a matter of the greatest urgency to make the organized workers generally understand that the persecution of the I. W. W. members in California and other western states and the railroading of Communists in Michigan, Pennsylvania and New York are rehearsals for wholesale campaigns of the same character against wider sections of the labor movement.

The defense of the I. W. W. and the Communists in these cases is the concern of the whole organized labor movement. The fight against criminal syndicalism laws and the use of injunctions is the fight of the working class as a whole.

The International Labor Defense will undertake as one of its principle activities the organization of a campaign thruout the whole labor movement against criminal syndicalist and other anti-labor laws and injunctions.

3. Legal Aid

INADEQUATE and incompetent legal defense has eased the way for the framing-up and railroading of many workers. Able defense counsel and widespread attendant publicity are obligations which the labor movement owes to every worker who is put on trial for his activities in the class struggle. The employment of qualified attorneys is necessary not only from the standpoint of legal technique and proceedure. The correct policy is to secure the services of competent lawyers and, by combining their work in the court room with organized publicity and protest, to transform court trials of workers into propaganda demonstrations in which the capitalist persecutors are put on trial before the working class.

An important item in the pages of worker persecution is long confinement of defendants awaiting trial. A substantial bail fund must be provided to ensure the liberty of persecuted workers pending trial.

These projects require large sums of money which must be raised by workers in defense of their persecuted brothers. A great defense treasury to be expended in procuring the best possible court actions for workers on trial for their activity must be created. A large national bail fund, established thru loans from workers and individuals and organizations sympathetic to their cause, must be ready to secure the release of workers pending trial.

The International Labor Defense calls upon all class-conscious workers and all sympathizers of the labor movement to do their full share toward providing the funds necessary for this work.

4. Information and Publicity

THE labor movement is not generally informed of the facts of labor persecution and perversions of justice in labor causes. Conspiracies against labor are frequently carried out in secret. Many an obscure worker has been railroaded to the penitentiary without its being known publicly. These cases that cannot be kept secret very often do not receive the interest they require and deserve. Labor spy systems flourish, foreign-born workers are deported, class-war prisoners are maltreated and workers are flagrantly deprived of constitutional rights without the knowledge or protest of the labor movement as a whole.

These matters are of vital concern to the masses of the workers. Every unprotested persecution engenders more. Unacquaintance with the methods of frame-up, ignorance of the extent of perverted class-justice and lack of knowledge generally of the conditions of labor persecution involves the danger of unpreparedness. Silence concerning their excesses encourages the labor-baiters to more violent ones.

Widespread, systematic and organized publicity must be created to throw glaring search-lights upon all of these crimes against the workers. Not a single instance of labor-baiting should be allowed to escape the attention of the labor movement.

It is the aim of International Labor Defense to develop publicity toward this end in all its forms. Regular press service, public meetings, motion pictures, books, pamphlets, leaflets, stickers and posters shall be utilized, for extending to every corner of the labor movement the exact news and data about all cases of working-class persecution. In addition to these, the National Conference is of the opinion that an illustrated monthly magazine devoted to the cause of Labor Defense should be published as soon as a sufficient organization base is established to assure its success.

5. Prison Relief

IT is not to the credit of the labor movement that its fighters who are in jail for their activities in the class struggle, are frequently neglected and deprived of the ordinary comforts of tobacco, books and other necessities that help to mitigate in some degree the horrors of confinement.

Shut out from the world and from the movement for which they are sacrificing their liberty, these fighters are deserving of all the material comforts that can be supplied them. And, what is equally important, they must be kept in communication with the movement by means of frequent and regular leters from those outside. Such letters from all parts of the country from members of the workers movement, sealing the bonds of solidarity and expressing fraternal remembrance of the imprisoned fighters, keeps up the morale of these captives of capitalism and strengthens their will and courage to face their prison burdens. At the same time, the letters in return from the class-war prisoners, serve as constant reminders to those outside of their duty.

International Labor Defense will devote special attention to the organization of this work. It will undertake to institute all the necesary arrangements required to establish extensive communication between those outside and those confined and raise special funds for the maintenance of systematic provision of material comforts and necessaries of life to class-war prisoners.

6. Relief for Dependents of Imprisoned Fighters in Class War.

THE weakest spot in the armor of of the revolutionary working-class fighter is concern for his dependents and the fear that they will be neglected while he is confined in prison and powerless to protect them. It must be recorded to the shame of the labor movement, that poverty, hardship and neglect have too often been the fate of dependent families families and the consciousness of it eats into the very hearts of those in prison.

This is so only because defense work is not properly organized and because the workers are allowed too soon to forget those who fought for them. The heart of the working-class is warm and sound. The workers will respond readily to an organized appeal which reminds them of their duty to the dependent families of their imprisoned fighters.

The conference appeals to all workers to respond liberally to a special fund to be set up by the International Labor Defense for the purpose of relieving the hardships of the mothers, wives and children of the soldiers of the class war who sacrifice their lives or liberty for the cause of labor. The International Labor Defense feels it a first duty of the labor movement to provide regular material and financial aid to the dependents of class-war prisoners.

7. The White Terror in Other Capitalist Countries

IN almost every capitalist country in the world white terror is raging against the workers. The imperialist masters of the world, and particularly in Europe, are attempting to exterminate the revolutionary movement of the exploited working-class by wholesale murders, jailing and tortures.

In the Balkans countries, the labor movement has lost all semblance of leagl rights. In Roumania, Bulgaria and Jugo-Slavia, labor unions and organizations of farmers are outlawed. The slightest protest from the workers and poor farmers calls forth the most bloody campaigns of murder and persecution. In Bulgaria alone no less than four thousand workers and peasants have been murdered by the black reactionary Zankov government. In Poland the white terror rages with the greatest fury and claims thousands of victims. In Hungary, Italy and the Baltic states, the fascist tools of foreign imperialists have murdered workers and jailed them in great numbers. In Germany and the rest of Western Europe thousands of workers lie in prison for their resistance against intolerable economic exploitation and ruthless political tyrrany.

This is of the most vital concern to American workers whose fate is indissolubly bound up with the fate of workers in other lands. The class struggle is an international struggle and demands the international solidarity of the workers of all countries.

This conference declares itself heart and soul for the cause of internationalism and reaches out fraternal hands to oppressed workers and exploited peoples in all lands who fight and suffer under the iron heel of capitalism.

The Conference dedicates the International Labor Defense to wholehearted support of the victims of the white terror in other lands. It sends fraternal greetings to the Labor Defense Organizations throughout the world and pledges its cooperation in the work of aiding class war prisoners in all capitalist countries.

8. Cooperation and Unity of the Defense Forces

THE defense of persecuted fighters for the cause of labor and the fraternal support of their dependents is a common platform upon which all sincere workers who believe in the principle of the class struggle can unite. This activity is the concern of every class-conscious worker and merits the full support of all sections of the workers' movement, and all those sympathetic to the cause of labor.

The International Labor Defense is dedicated to the principle of unity in the common fight and will endeavor to weld together into one body all the forces of the labor movement for the struggle against working-class persecution and for the defense and support of persecuted fighters and their families.

Where special circumstances create the necessity for separate, independent defense bodies, the International Labor Defense will strive to coordinate its activities with theirs in such a way as to ensure the maximum of defense endeavors on the basis of fraternal unity in the common fight for common aims. The primary duty of the International Labor Defense will be to rally all possible support in defense of workers persecuted for their activities in the class struggle, without exception.

The Reformist Leaders in a Dilemma

By ANDRES NIN

THE determined attitude taken by the English trade unions in the question of trade union unity has embarrased the reformists of all shades. They can now no longer repeat that the proposals for trade union unity are only a manoeuvre of Moscow, that the leaders of the English organizations have been deceived by these Bolshevist devils, that we are sowing dissention in the trade union movement etc. The workers of all countries are beginning to understand clearly, that our fight for unity is by no means a manoeuvre, that the real splitters of the trade-union movement are the reformists, and that it is extremely naive, not to use a stronger expression, to imagine, that responsible trade unionists such as the members of the English delegation, who have been active members of the labor movement for many years, would have allowed themselves to be deceived by the communists during their stay in the Soviet Union.

THE resolutions which were passed by the Anglo-Russian Trade Union Conference in April, have still further increased the confusion in the ranks of the reformists. The leaders of the Amsterdam International who have always proclaimed the right of the National Executives in different countries to freedom of action, are now astonished at the unprecedented boldness of the English trade unions who are acting on their own initiative and have come to an agreement with the Russian trade union organization. And to what purpose? The object is to unite the workers of all countries who are organized in trade-unions in a single International which will be able to combat the capitalist offensive. This is why the right group of Amsterdam is opposing this initiative with so much energy, for its realisation would be a death-blow to international reformism. As this reformism is closely allied with capitalism, for which a split amongst the workers is essential, it is quite natural that the reformists are enemies of unity and use all means in their power to sabotage it.

The office of the Amsterdam International has not yet replied officially to the last letter of the Russian trade union council. But two eminent leaders, Ooudegeest and Mertens, the secretary and the vice-chairman of the International have made some statements. There was a time when Oudegeest enjoyed a certain reputation as a diplomat. The secretary of the Amsterdam International is in danger of losing this reputation. Since the English and Russian trade unions came to an agreement, he has written nothing but nonsense.

WE recall the article which he wrote during the visit of the English delegation to Russia and which was commented on at the time. In a new article on the last Anglo-Russian Conference which was published in the "Bulletin of the I. F. T. U.", Oudegeest confides a new and important discovery to us. According to him, the leaders of the Russian trade unions are fine fellows, honest fighters, with whom Amsterdam could quite well come to an agreement. But there is an obstacle, and that is the Communist Party which binds the hands of Tomski ("who is our friend"), and above all there are Zinoviev and Lozowsky, who terrorize the Russian trade unions and force them to remain in the Red International of Labor Unions and to submit themselves to the instructions of the Communist Party! As long as the Russian trade unions do not break off these connections, is about what Oudegeest says, our "instinct of self-preservation" will prevent us coming to an agreement with them. These are fine explanations! It is difficult to imagine greater intellectual modesty. Is it ignorance or bad faith?

Not only the Russian workers but those of all other countries know the close connections which bind the Russian trade unions, the most solid foundation of the dictatorship of the proletariat, to the Communist Party which is the advance guard of the labor movement and the leader of the revolution. The reformist leaders are not ignornat of the fact that it is impossible to separate the Russian trade unions from the Communist Party, and they are quite well aware that Tomski, the so-called defender of trade union independence, the poor "victim of Communist tyranny" is one of the most influential members of the party and of the political bureau.

MERTENS, the well-known separatist, the originator of a kind of trade union exceptional law against the Communists in Belgium, less easily loses his head but his perturbation is quite transparent. He understands the whole immense significance of the agreements concluded between the Russian and English trade unions. This accounts for his compaints and protests against the boldness of the English trade unions. In "Le Mouvement Syndical Belge" (The Belgium Trade Union Movement) of May 9 he writes:

"What right have the English comrades to interfere in the internal life of the trade unions of other countries? Why do they wish to force their views, their opinions, on other organizations? Do they not understand that just this is one of the numerous obstacles which separate us from the Russians who also, under the pretext that they have brobght the state o fthe future into actual being, want to force their policy, their methods of aetion and their way of thinking on to other countries?"

Mertens is trying to side-track the question. Who has ever talked of forcing the peculiar Russian or English points of view on other countries? Our aim is quite limited. It is merely a question of establishing the unity of the international trade union movement and, in order to arrive at this goal, we impose no preliminary conditions. We are prepared to submit to the will of the majority of workers, which the reformists do not seem inclined to do.

THIS is why they revolt against the idea of a world congress thru which unity might be achieved. We, however, shall not cease to propagate this slogan, and we are convinced that we are reflecting the wish of the overwhelming majority of the workers.

THE movement in favor of unity is pursuing its path in spite of the reformist sabotage. The report of the English delegation has met with a tremendous response in all countries, even among the reformist workers. The cause of unity is gaining ground every day. In Germany, delegations of trade unions which are affiliated to the reformist General Federation of Trade Unions, are preparing to visit the Soviet Union; many local organizations are speaking in favor of unity. In France, more than a hundred of the trade unions affiliated to the reformist C. G. T. have assumed a similar attitude. In Italy, workers of all parties are declaring their solidarity with the Communists, whom the reformists have excluded. In Belgium hitherto the stronghold of reformism, a trade union left group has been formed, which is prepared to fight for unity. These are only a few of the most important facts.

The movement for unity will gain in significance from day to day. We are convinved that the will of the working masses of all countries will finally carry the day in spite of the sabotage of the reformists.

Kool Kalculations of Kal and Kellogg Co

"HAVE you had any replies from the powers to your suggestion that an international conference be held on the question of reconsidering extra-territorial laws and other matters," asked Kal of Kell as the two leading flunkies of Wall Street, walked on the lawn of White Court, in Swampscott, Mass.

"I might as well have sent out a circular letter calling for a meeting of the ku klux klan in Dublin, Ireland, or asked France for a payment on account, for all the notice was taken of it," grunted Kell.

Kal.—If things keep on going as they are now, you and I will get the devil. You muffed the Mexican situation, by letting Calles pose as a hero slapping a bully, and I am afraid nobody will take any notice of either one of us in the future. They'll think we're a pair of fourflushers.

Kell.—What can a fellow do, when he gets instructions and strict orders to carry them out, no matter what the consequences to himself are? My note did the job in Mexico. You see, Calles is doing alright now.

Kal.—That is all very well for those who are on the inside, but tho we don't usually pay much attention to the common people, what they think of a politician counts at the polls, and until we get ready to drop the ballot box as Mussolini did, we have got to consider their feelings. The nation had a strong attack on us and the nation has considerable influence.

Kell.—Don't worry about the nation. That bunch of pacifists are easily fooled. In fact I think they are very willing to be fooled. If you or I say something nice about China next week, Villard, Rev. Norman Thomas and the rest of them will be falling all over each other praising us. The Communists are the only people we can't fool.

Kal.—I thought they were on the run. That's what Mr. Green of the A. F. of L. told the department of justice when he called to renew the contract they had with Mr. Gompers.

Kell.—I have an idea it would be better for us to hire a couple thousand stoolpigeons than to depend on Green. If we had a lot of fellows to fight the Communists in the unions, we'd be doing better.

Kal.—But the D. of J. tells me that the socialists are doing that, and they don't cost much.

Kell.—Like hell they are. Why there aren't enough socialists left all over the country to make a decent funeral. And see what they have done in New York, in the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union.

Kal.—What the blazes have they done?

Kell.—Instead of pretending to fight the manufacturers they came out openly on their side and tried to make the workers accept an agreement that the workers did not like. Then they preferred charges against their opponents and removed them from office. The result is that the rank and file are now in sympathy with the Communists and saying: "By god they are right. The socialists are dirty dogs."

Kal.—At that rate it looks as if the Communists were growing. They tell me they are behind this trouble in China.

Kell.—That's good stuff for the public and Morgan tells us to spread it out thick, but between you and me and the hobby horse, we are to blame for the situation in China. By the way the last time I saw the Big Fellow, he was breaking his sides laughing over the predicament our British cousins were in.

Kal.—Is he satisfied with the way we are handling the Chinese situation?

Kell.—He said Borah saved the day for us. The trouble now is that the Chinamen think Borah is president, and if later on you say something critical about them, they may laugh it off thinking you are only the governor of Rhode Island or dog catcher in Wolf Point, Montana.

Kal.—I don't think I talk enough. What do you think?

Kell.—I don't think. I gave up that long ago. Say Kal, when I used to think for myself I looked as seedy as a hobo after making a tour of Scotland. You know I was a progressive once. There is nothing in it Kal, and as for you talking too much. Better leave well enough alone.

Kal.—Just the same it's tough to have people kidding you and saying you don't know nothing.

Kell.—Well, if you talked they know you know less. Anyhow it's some consolation to know that most of the voters know even less than we do. You had luck on your side. If Harding ate less and drank less it is more than likely that you would now be prosecuting bootleggers in Vermont instead of posing as if you were running the United States.

Kal.—But, we started out to talk about China. What's going to come out of it anyhow?

Kell.—From what I can see the Chinese are going to kick us all out and the best thing we can do is to hold on to the market. That's what the Big Fellow said, tho there is a difference of opinion in Wall Street. Some of them want to line up with England, but the Chief says that we are not interested in pulling England's chestnuts out of the fire.

Kal.—But it is reported that Britain is making a deal with Japan.

Kell.—The Chief thinks that's only a bluff to force us to come across and help beat down the Chinese so that they will quit. Even if it is genuine he thinks that New Zealand and Australia won't like a renewal of the Anglo-Japanese agreement, and that they will come over to us.

Kal.—According to that Britain is almost as helpless as an armless paralytic in a scratching contest.

Kell.—Pretty soon England will be as much out of place in a fight as the pope of Rome at a leg show.

Kal.—Or as the president of the Anti-Saloon League at the annual picnic of the Vermont Hard Cider Growers' Association.

Kell.—Have you anything on the hip, Kal? I didn't have a good drink since the last cabinet meeting.

Kal.—Alright, I'll send for my prohibition agent. He just held up a consignment of Scotch, the best I have sampled for a long time.

Kell.—After we have a few drinks we may be able to throw some light on the Chinese question.

Kal.—After we have a couple of shots we will curse Morgan to our heart's content and think we're two somebodies.

why should one expose oneself to blows over that which one does not possess? As a result of the difference in the situation of England and America in the Far East, and as a result of our strong attack in the question of privileges, the American ambassador delivered a speech in which he advocated the gradual abolition of privileges. The united front here possesses just as little stability as it does in regard to the German question.

THE interests of England and America are equally divergent in regard to Russia. So far as American interests are concerned, America would not suffer if we were suddenly to disappear from the face of the earth, as one of the main questions of American economy is the question of the market for agricultural products. America does not want any agricultural competition at present. The Americans, while endeavoring to hold up the restoration of the economic power of the Soviet Republic, hope at the same time to go over mainly to cattle breeding, as then Russia would not only be an unpleasant competitor for them, but would be required by them as being a huge market for supplying corn and grain.

Professor Tuleikov was right when he pointed out the hope prevailing in American circles that in 15 years America would begin to import corn, and that Siberia would then have to feed the west coast of America. In war and in economics, more than in anything else, everything depends upon time. At present it is to the advantage of America to postpone the economic reconstruction of Russia. England, on the other hand, which at present has to purchase from America, cotton, corn and many other articles of food, and in this respect is dependent upon the United States, would be able to free itself from this dependence to the extent to which the Russian grain market developed.

THESE two great capitalist powers have united for the time being in order to wring concessions from the Solvet Union. If their efforts however are shattered by our resistance, then each of them will proceed separately and there will be no talk of united action.

If, however, the Soviet Union agrees to grant concessions, then the question arises: what concessions shall be made and to whom shall they be granted? For Russia it is more advantageous to grant concessions to American oil trusts than to English oil trusts, as America is not in close contact with the Far East, which cannot be said of England. In the Far East there meet Japan, the Soviet Union and China. If Japan abandons the idea of territorial conquests in China, then a certain unity can be established between the Soviet Union, China and Japan against England and America.

The above, even if somewhat rough sketch of the world situation shows that capitalism will hardly succeed in creating a united front.

BESIDES America and England, there are a whole number of capitalist countries—Germany, France, Italy, etc.—and also many smaller capitalist countries. Should the united front be organized, and should this united front be victorious, then those countries would reap the benefit of it who command this united front. They only need the smaller countries so long as the united front is maintained. When the united front has achieved its object, then these little countries will no longer be necessary. The little countries perceive this quite clearly, and this explains their inclination to unite with us, which fact does not conduce to strengthen the bourgeois united front.

These are the general prospects. Will the creation of the united front be achieved? Even should it succeed, this front could not be regarded as a strong one; it would be incapable of solving the tasks imposed upon it.

THE strengthening of capitalism is unavoidably accompanied by capitalist antagonisms. In 1924 we experienced an improvement in the relations between Germany and France. This is an objective fact, which is due to the circumstance that Germany is paying as much as it can, quite apart from any good will to pay. The paying machine is functioning mechanically. Germany is now raising money without seriously shaking its monetary system? This will only be seen in three years time when the carrying out of the expert's report passes from the phase of raising the money in Germany to the phase of paying over the same. This will be a period of fresh debates and, perhaps, of the collapse of the whole policy of the experts' report.

America is endeavoring to work out on paper the peace between France and Germany, in order to be able to say to France: "My dear sirs, nobody threatens you any longer, reduce your army and pay us back your debts." But France is not keen on doing this.

Now we come to the Anglo-French front. During the last few years the struggle between France and England for hegemony played a very great role, nevertheless there is to be recorded here a dimunition of th antagonisms, due to the fact that France, as a result of the collapse of the franc, is no longer in a position to supply its vassals with money, and is naturally losing influence. If Poland receives 35 million dollars from America, then it follows that Poland must to this extent dance according to the tune played by Washington and New York and to the same etxent must turn away from France.

The same also applies to Czecho-Slovakia.

As soon as France and England become more dependent upon America, the small European states become less dependent upon France. For this reason France does not for the moment constitute a great danger for England. England, however, wishes to consolidate this truce. But then the difficulties in the east come to the forefront. England is endeavoring, by making concessions to France, to secure its rear in its actions in the east. In this respect its calculations are very simple and extremely "innocent." It believes that Germany, in the event of the success of the stabiliaztion of capitalism, would in five years constitute a strong power. Who else has such a huge chemical industry as the Germans? And even if they at present have no cannons, they will nevertheless remain a great capitalist power. And when the moment arrives, that is to say, when Germany becomes strong—so thinks England—then it will be possible to withdraw the concessions granted to France.

For the time being we see here a certain truce.

The Situation in the East.

HOW is it now with that stretch where the struggle for the market is taking place, the front of the east?

In the first place there is to be noted here a gradual but steady growth in the national revolutionary movement in all countries of the east. There exists a whole literature in England which calls attention to these facts ten times as often as we do in our literature.

The most important symptoms of the growth of the national revolutionary movement in the east consists in the following: first, in the economic growth of the eastern bourgeoisie, which is based on the fact that during the war European capital was not capable of supplying the oriental countries with a sufficient quantity of goods, so that they began to develop their own industries.

In the meantime there arises among this oriental bouregoisie the natural fear of the competition of foreign capital. This not only applies to China but to all other eastern countries, as for example Turkey, where the policy of the government consists in restricting the importation of foreign goods in order to render possible the growth of Turkish industry and Turkish commerce. The expulsion of the Greeks and Armenians has the same purpose—protection of native capital from foreign competition.

THE second cause of the intensification of the revolutionary crisis in the east consists in the growth of national consciousness among the native intelligenzia. In all young bourgeois countries the intelligenzia, at the commencement of the liberation movement, plays the first fiddle. This was the case with us in Russia before 1905, and is the case today in the east. Before the war the eastern intelligenzia looked up to the European and American democracy. The strongest of those capitalist powers which were in close contact with the east was America. And America defended the policy of the so-called "open door" it posed as the defender of the independence of China against England, Russia and Japan. Leading American politicians took India under their protection. The emigration, workers, merchants, and in fact all oriental people living in America, were enthusiastic over American democracy, where every foreigner settling there is granted full rights of citizenship.

But in the course of time the mass of the oriental intelligenzia perceived the true features of this democracy, and in what consists the nature of American "self-determination of the peoples." When, after the Versailles peace conference, the province of Shantung with its population of 40 millions was cut off from China and was made a "present" of to Japan, this fact served to enlighten the eastern intelligenzia better than any propaganda as to what is the real attitude of bouregois democracy towards the national movement. It is not surprising that we see at present in the east an ideological revulsion of the intelligenzia from Europe and America, a revulsion which at times assumes the form of reaction against European civilization in general.

THE third factor is the growth of the workers' and peasants' movement. The movement of the laboring masses in such countries as China and India is on the same level as was the Russian labor movement in the year 1896. It is the first mass movement of the proletariat.

Along with the mass struggles there is proceeding the creation of Communist Parties. The Russian proletariat, from the year 1896 had to carry on its fight for another ten years before it arrived at its first revolution. We hope—and this hope is based upon objective facts—that the east will traverse this road at a more rapid rate and with better results than the Russian revolution of 1905.

The revolutionary movement of the east is a factor the importance of which we underestimated.

When we consider the situation in Egypt, which was clearly illuminated by the bomb thrown at the English Sirdar—this also can hardly be considered as a sign of the stabilization of capitalist conditions, when we remember that the bomb was thrown by a railway worker—we must again and again emphasize that the national movement in the east has not only seized the intelligenzia, but also the broad masses of the people, and that the chief task of world imperialism—the etxension of the markets by intensified exploitation of the colonies and suppression of the eastern countries, will meet with other resistance than was formerly the case.

The Foreign Political Prospects of the Soviet Union.

WHEN we speak of the prospects of the Soviet Union we must take into consideration two aspects: the relation between the proletariat and the peasantry, and the extent and the force of the pressure of the foreign capitalists upon the Soviet Union. The question is, whether we shall be able to come to an agreement with the caiptalists regarding the conditions on the basis of which we shall be able to live until the next rise of the European revolution, not only as a Soviet state, but for that aim for which we were established: for the development of socialism. We are profoundly convinced that the next few years will bring with them a real agreement with world capital. This conviction is based upon the simple fact that the capitalist great powers have divergent interests regarding us. The attempt to exercise a joint and permanent pressure will end in failure.

The question now is whether they will be able to reconcile themselves to the existence of a workers' and peasants' republic. If they are not able to do so, then they can do what they please. The main question is, whether they can destroy this republic. They have already attempted it by military means—but they did not succeed. They will not succeed in the next few years in mobilizing the masses of the peoples in their states against us. Can they strangle us economically? Can they carry out an economic boycott against us? It is easy for America to speak of an economic boycott, as she does not need us; England can also play with this policy for a certain time, but the smaller countries such as Germany, Italy, Belgium, France, etc., which have no oil and are interested in our benzine, cannot carry out a consistent boycott. They will attempt to intimidate us, but our situation is more favorable than theirs and we will find the necessary means in order to shatter their united front.

The question of the Russian debts is bound up with the question of the inter-allied debts. We are interested in postponing the solution of this question. Should it prove that the allies can only extract from France 10 per cent of its old debts, why should we be better payers of debts than France? In practical politics what will decide this question is, whether we conclude an agreement at the moment when we have a good harvest and whether the allies will recognize that we are not afraid of their pressure, or whether this agreement is concluded at a time when our country is in a difficult situation.

THE chief peculiarity of the policy of the Soviet Union consists in the fact that Russia, in spite of all its poverty, can thanks to its vast extent, afford to wait its own time.

We are confronted with a period of pressure, a period which will be accompanied by a whole number of various threats, but which we shall survive, and which, in all probability, will smooth the way to agreements which will permit us not only to maintain, but also to develop our socialist state.

In regard to the Russian revolution, world capital exhibited the following phases: In the year 1919 it attempted to strangle Soviet Russia, it attempted to buy a part of the working class and to crush the steadfast revolutionary part. We had at that time, on the one hand, the intervention in Russia and the crushing of the spartacists in Germany, and on the other hand, the promises of the socializing of inrustry in Germany, France and England, the extension of the suffrage to the workers etc. In spite of this world capital did not succeed in strangling us. The second phase consisted in the attempt to negotiate with us and to strangle the revolution in the east. In 1921, the imperialists negotiated with us in Genoa and shot down the Turks. They reckoned that if they succeeded in strangling our revolutionary rearguard we would have to capitulate.

THE third phase began when they perceived that we were not throttled by the famine catastrophe and that the NEP did not mean a return to old capitalist politics. Then, in the year 1923, there set in the Curzon policy. It consisted in the attempt to come to an understanding with the east, with the Turks, and to exert pressure upon us. To this period belongs the peace of Lausanne and the ultimatum which was submitted to us. This attempt to divide the main forces of the world revolution from each other ended in defeat. Today we are witnessing the preparation for a simultaneous attack against the east, against us, and also against the European proletariat.

This shows that the enemy is compelled to deliver blows simultaneously on all fronts. But he is overestimating his forces and will be defeated.

Ga[illegible]nt Workers Pack Ne[illegible]York Park to Show W[illegible] Left Wing Power

NEW YORK CITY, July 19.—The great Madison Square Park was packed yesterday afternoon by over thirty thousand cloakmakers in a public demonstration against the Sigman gang of International officials and their fake referendum on the "award" of the governor's commission. In a dense mass they covered several blocks and gave the lie so that all who have eyes could see that Sigman and company's days are numbered! All could see that Sigman's lies about the opposition to him being limited to "about 1,500 Communists and agitators" are only grotesque falsehoods!

All New York could see and did see that the capitalist newspapers which favor the Sigman gang are fighting the great mass of New York garment workers in this case as they have done in every other case!

Here on Manhattan Island gathered a mass of workers, an example of the living power and vitality of the proletariat! Here gathered the deep force which is causing a revolution in the American unions! Here was exressed the dynamic power of the left wing movement built up by the Trade Union Educational League!

Here and there over the vast assembly speakers were talking, gesturing, explaining and reiterating the story of the betrayals time and again by the Sigman, Peristein, Feinberg gang. Cheers and applause arose, sweeping like a wave over the whole mass.

Everywhere one could hear nothing but condemnation for the union officials who had betrayed the interests of the workers; and nothing but praise and repeated pledges of support for the executives of Locals 2, 9 and 22 who have been suspendee and then ordered removed from office after a farcical "trial."

Resolutions Get Thunderous Assent.

Resolutions were offered and passed by roars of "ayes" with a unanimity that must have turned the craven hearts of the fakers if they were there to listen. Speeches in Yiddish, English and Italian branded

AS WE SEE IT.

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY

IN view of the approaching visit of A. A. Purcell, president of the International Federation of Trade Unions, to the United States, the publication of the British Trade Union Delegation's report on conditions in Soviet Russia about to appear serially in the DAILY WORKER should be of unusual interest. It is no exaggeration to state that no other document that saw light since the end of the war caused a greater sensation on the continent of Europe than did this remarkably cool and impartial story of the progress made by the workers and peasants in Russia since they overthrew the czar and established the rule of labor on the ruins of feudal-capitalism.

THE men who wrote this report are far from being Communists. But right thru their report, like a streak of light, runs the backbone of the case for the Soviet Republic. "This is a workers' government," the document says in substance, and whatever is done here is done in the interests of the workers and peasants, by the workers and peasants for the purpose of bringing more joy and comfort to those who toil. Every reader of the DAILY WORKER should bring this document to the attention of their friends. No other English paper in the United States will carry this report in full.

F. A. MACKENZIE foreign correspondent for the Chicago Daily News is now in Sweden. Mackenzie was formerly in Soviet Russia, and for some time sent out rather fair reports of conditions there. But his masters did not want the truth so Mackenzie got his orders to send out what he was getting paid for. It is not safe to lie in Soviet Russia, so the Daily News correspondent waits to write the rough stuff until he got out of the Soviet Union. Then he turned loose, and gave the perverts of the Chicago Tribune a run for their money. Mackenzie admitted that he played the role of stoolpigeon in Russia for a purpose.

NOW he sends out a fantastic yarn from Sweden about a minute plan for world revolution sent out by the Communist International. That this alleged plan came from no more authentic scource that a bourgeois paper published in Stockholm did not make any difference to the Daily News correspondent. No better proof of the unreliability of this document could be shown than the paragraph calling for the assassination of the heads of government. Everybody who knows anything about Communist organization and tactics knows that they are decidedly opposed to individual terror, not because they would shed any tears

PURCELL, ADVOCATE OF WORLD TRADE UNION UNITY, WINS ELECTION

LONDON, England, July 19.—A. A. Purcell, president of the International Federation of Trade Unions, and one of the chief supporters of world trade union unity, has been returned to parliament in the Forest of Dean, Gloucester, by-election.

The seat was formerly held by the Labor Party, but its former member, James Wignall, belonged to the conservative wing. Purcell, a friend of the Soviet Union, increased the majority from 1,309 to 3,022. A large number of miners reside in the district.

Purcell head the British trade union, delegation to the Soviet Union, which made a report recommending unity of the Russian and English trade unions.

DETROIT AUTO WORKERS PREPARE TO FIGHT WAGE CUTS BY JOINING UNION; BOSSES CONCEAL PROFITS

By EDGAR OWENS.
(Special to The Daily Worker)

DETROIT, Mich., July 19.—The largest and most enthusiastic open meeting held by Local Union No. 127, Auto Workers, since the inauguration of the organization drive was held in their hall, 55 Adelaide Street, Friday evening. The hall was packed with auto workers, most of whom are employed at Fisher Body Plant No. 18. There was also a good representation from Plants 10, 12, and 21. More than 80 Fisher Body employer signed up.

The strike at Plant No. 18 was the principal topic of discussion. This strike is assuming proportions that has the employers worried. Edgar Owens, J. H. Collins, and Wm. Logan, general president of the Auto Workers' Union, addressed the meeting and discussed in detail the technique of conducting the strike. The difficulty growing out of the lack of organization was emphasized and stress laid on the necessity of coming into the union as a disciplined body under wise generalship and with

Strike Against Wage Cut at Fisher Body Plant 18

By AL GOETZ.
(Special to The Daily Worker)

DETROIT, Mich., July 19.—The campaign of wage cutting at Plant 18 of the Fisher Body Co. last week, is going merrily on. So is the walkout of the men. About six more departments have felt the heavy hands of the efficiency experts and these same departments are out 100 per cent on the street hollering for the rest of the workers to come out too. At least six hundred men are out who are showing splendid sticking qualities. A picket line was established today that functioned so well that not a single man got thru to the employment office and for some mysterious reason the employment office has announced that no hiring would be done until Monday.

One of the biggest departments out on strike are the trimmers. The trimmers are fighting to re-establish their old scale. The old scale of the trimmers for hanging a rear back was $1.10, it was cut down to 85 cents.

On Front Backs they were cut from $1.50 to 70 cents a piece. All the flat work and headlining which formerly had paid a high rate was similarly cut until the most highly skilled trimers in the Automobile Industry

ANDERSON ATTACKS JOHNSTON IN STORY OF BIG STEAL OF VOTES IN LATE MACHINISTS' ELECTION

WASHINGTON, July 19.—(FP)—J. F. Anderson, vice president of the International Association of Machinists and candidate for president of that organization at the last convention, has reopened the fight in a letter addressed to the membership the heading of which is: "The Story of the Big Steal." In it he makes an attack upon William H. Johnston, the president of the association and E. C. Davison, the secretary treasurer. Attached to the letter is a report from Herbert P. Leeman who was Anderson's watcher in the election ballot count, together with sundry affidavits.

Johnston Won't Talk

President Johnston and Mr. Davison refuse to make any comment on it now. In his letter Anderson declares that he is convinced that after a

BRITISH GAIN THRU PERIL OF FRENCH IN RIFF

Unite in Opposition to Nine-Power Conference

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LONDON, July 19—The perilous situation of France, faced with utter defeat in the Riffian war and drawing near the edge of a financial precipice in the new "gold loan," has aided the British government in successfully putting over her pet imperialistic schemes for a united front against Soviet Russia in the West and another against both China and Soviet Russia in the East.

Apparently by gaining the defection of France from America's proposal to call the nine powers into conference to "consider" extra-territoriality in China, she has checkmated American imperialism's own crafty move to lessen British influence in China and aid her own by posing as China's friend.

Fight Coolidge's Conference.

It is now Britain and France leading the opposition to any conference against the United States and Japan, with Japan under the surface playing her own game and threatening to upset all calculations by a possible sudden flop into a Pan-Asiatic bloc against her rival imperialists who all happen to be occidentals, but whose first and original sin is being rivals for control of China.

However, for the time being, Japan stands between England and America as a friend of both apparently acting as mediator for their strongly conflicting interest and agreeing with them upon general policy of opposition to the Chinese liberation movement.

Exploits Race Prejudice.

Britain is making the most of race prejudice and by cunning propaganda is seeking to turn the imaginary "yellow peril" of the Sunday supplements against Soviet Russia. The greatest significance is attached here to the German answer to the French security note, which is expected to lay the basis for Chamberlain's cherished ambition to bring Germany along with France and the group or puppet nations on the Soviet frontier, to an accord based upon a new war against Soviet Russia whenever Britain says the word.

France, thrown into danger by the Morocco defeats and nearly bankrupt, has evidently been won over to follow British lead in evacuating the Rhur—shee needs the troops badly in Africa—and giving the German reactionaries at Berlin the opportuity to come into the "security pact"—really a united front against Soviet Russia—on the grounds that France is laying aside a policy of revenge.

France also has felt the need of a fight against Soviet Russia, as the influence of the Soviet power has touched her vital spots in Morocco and China and menaces her colonial interests in Indo-China.

The fight against what Austen Chamberlain calls the "yellow peril" includes according to his own statement, the fight against Soviet Russia, which he says has "betrayed its white heritage." His reason, however, is more truly expressed in the fact that Soviet Russia has renounced all unequal treaties with China and other oppressed nations formerly imposed by the czar, and has held that these oppressed nationalities and races have a right to full self determination and repudiated the claim that the "white" imperialist nations have any god-given right to oppress and exploit the "darker" and defenseless races.

Chamberlain naively states that the Germans must join his proposed front against the "yellow peril" as Germans are better than Latins in having "a keener color sense," to which remark some scoffing laborites have said that the Germans also make better artillery and ammunition than the Latins.

Roumania Won't Pay Harvester Co.

BUCHAREST, Roumania, July 19.—The agreement between the International Harvester company and its Roumanian debtors has collapsed, the Roumanian National bank categorically refusing to furnish foreign exchange to American debtors. The debts contracted before the war amounted to about $1,000,000.

Back Stairs Diplomacy Chokes Off China Facts and Plots Naval Threat

SHANGHAI, China, July 19.—An anomalous situation, in which the foreign settlement of Shanghai, governed by a mixed municipal court of imperialist agents of which Sterling Fessenden is chairman, is neither subject to the laws of China nor to the control of the Peking diplomatic corps, has arisen to give the most reactionary imperialists great joy.

It all came about by reason of Great Britain's refusal to agree to the report of the Peking diplomatic corps on the Shanghai shootings of students and workers and her throwing over the secret understanding with America and Japan as soon as it was made.

Back of this is, of course, the British gain of France to oppose the proposal of America for a series of conferences on China. As quickly as France reversed her position of previous approval, and declared that the "time is not ripe," Britain also broke the line up and felt that she could afford to defy America.

This was bound up with the report on the Shanghai shootings, blame for which was laid on the British police troops and the American chairman of the municipal council, Sterling Fessenden. This caused a split in the diplomatic corps, as America, England and Japan upheld the point of view that the imperialist troops had a right to shoot any Chinese at any time over anything or nothing, while the French, Italians and Scandinavians were anxious to get themselves clear from the boycott, the Chinese were laying down against British and Japanese, and did not want to draw fire on themselves by clearing the Shanghai foreign troops of their guilt.

It all came to a crisis in the British foreign office in London, where secret meetings were held, so very secret that to escape notice, many of the high-hatted diplomats entered the foreign office by a rear basement door used by menials.

Shanghai An Independent Nation!

Here the fight went on and British won the point that Shanghai's municipal council owes allegiance to nobody on earth, being a sort of principality and power in itself, and that the diplomatic corps must keep its hands off and its opinions to itself.

Also discussed at the London secret confab, was the advisability of a naval demonstration against China and war moves against Soviet Russia. It was agreed that if warships were sent in force to Chinese waters, they must carry sufficient landing troops to put down the Chinese by force in the treaty ports.

ARMY OFFICIALS STEAL PAUL CROUCH'S MAIL, CONFISCATE HIS BOOKS

Ft. SHAFTER, Guard-House, Honolulu, Hawaii —(By Mail)—The copies of "Communism and Family," "Marriage Laws of Soviet Russia," and "Leninism vs. Trotzkiism" ordered from the DAILY WORKER Pub. Co., came to the Ft. Shafter prison office. The prison officer, L. Krenter, opened the package without my permission and refused to allow me to have the books. My request for a receipt was ignored.

It appears that laws intended to protect the stolen wealth of Morgan must not be used for the benefit of personal property of class conscious workers.

MALEVOLENCE SWAYS MOVIES OF CALIFORNIA; STUDIO WORKERS KEPT ON THE RAGGED EDGE

LOS ANGELES, July 19—Announcement is made that movie picture production in this section is to be increased largely commencing with August 1. Competition, it is claimed, is growing keener, the big companies fighting each other frantically for business. Statements are published that preparations are being made on an immense scale by the giant rivals in the film war.

The public should take the news with two parts salt added for safety. Exaggerative advertisement is at the back of it.

Just one company, the Universal, at University City, and that only, is preparing for enlargement of production. All the others are stationary.

News Boys Shouting for Filmdom.

The Examiner and Times vie with each other in shouting for the movie producers. Each goes the other one beter every time movie news is announced. As boosters, Hearst and Chandler have their eyes on advertisements from the producers. They are news boys who shout because they must eat.

Last December the Examiner announced what the movie production would be for 1925. It put $75,000,000 for one company, $50,000,000 for another, $25,000,000 for another and not less than $10,000,000 for any. A

A. C. W. FACES INJUNCTION FROM JUDGE VIOLENTLY OPPOSED TO VIOLENCE; DEMURRER IS FILED

The lawyers for the Amalgamated Clothing Workers' Union, facing an injunction by the International Tailoring Company in the strike now going on, have filed a demurrer under the recent Cuthbertson anti-injunction law, which demurrer states that the picketing which is sought to be forbidden by the injunction "are legal acts and not subject to injunction or restraining order, and are permitted under the statutes of the state of Illinois."

However, they will have to convert Judge Foell to that point of view, as he is very insistent that there shall be no unlawful picketing by "violence." If there's going to be any violence, Judge Foell insists that the scabs and police observe the old saying that it is "more blessed to give than to receive."

Must Be Frame-Up—But Which?

Just what frame-up the bosses' private detectives are preparing to spring Monday in order to make it easy for the judge to grant an injunction despite the anti-injunction law recently passed at Springfield: this is the problem that confronts the eight hundred Amalgamated Clothing Workers now starting the fourth week of their strike against the International Tailoring Co. and the J. L. Taylor Co.

After three postponements, the injunction hearing will come up at 9 a. m. before Judge Charles E. Foell. This well-known "injunction" judge is between the devil (namely, the bosses) and the deep sea of legal technicalities. On the one hand, the tailoring corporation demands an injunction; on the other hand, is the fact that this is the first case to be heard since the "anti-injunction" bill passed. Now what is an honest-to-god injunction judge to do?

Finks to Rescue.

The tailoring firms' finks are going to help the poor man out. It is expected that they will provide framed-up evidence to prove that the strikers are not subject to lenience under the anti-injunction law because their picketing has not been "peaceful." The law merely applies to the granting of injunctions against "peaceful" picketing. If any cases of lack of peacefulness on the part of the strikers can be proved,—that is if they

GREEN UPHOLDS UNION SCABS AGAINST A. C. W.

Fitzpatrick Supports Class Solidarity

A letter from William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, upholding the United Garment Workers' Union, and characterizing the Amalgamated Clothing Workers' Union as a "dual organization" was sharply criticized by the delegates to the Chicago Federation of Labor at yesterday's meeting.

John Fitzpatrick, president of the Chicago Federation of Labor, defended the striking Amalgamated workers and condemned the scabbery of the United Garment Workers' Union.

C. F. of L. Against Scabbing.

Green's letter was written in answer to the demand of the Chicago federation's executive board that the fact that the International Tailoring company and the J. L. Taylor company was using the name of the American Federation of Labor and of the United Garment Workers to advertise for workers to replace strikers. Green replied that the Amalgamated was a "dual seceeding organization," and that the matter had been referred to the A. F. of L.'s executive council.

"The United Garment Workers is the only organization in the trade recognized by the A F. of L.," Green said, and advised the Chicago Federation of Labor "not to interfere with such disputes."

"The American Federation of Labor has found that clashes taking place between recognized organizations and seceeding organizations cannot be solved by granting recognition to dual

SCOPES' PROSECUTOR IS CHAMPION OF BACKWARD COUNTY; ATTACKS REDS

DAYTON, Tennessee, July 19—In a statement showing the conservative character of the Rhea county officials, Walter White, superintendent of the county schools, who signed the complaint against John Scopes for violating the state anti-evolution law, said, "No citizen of this county has become so highly educated that he feels it his duty to substitute the red flag for the American flag, or dispose of his bible."

"No citizen of Rhea county was arrested during the late war on a charge of disloyalty. We believe in our god, our country, our flag and our prayer."

The steel trust, which owns the Tennessee Coal and Iron company, and the large plantation owners, will no doubt use their influence to have White promoted, after such staunch defense of the exploitation system which has made a few millionaires, but has pauperized the great mass of workers and farmers of the state.

DEPORTATION OF FOUR I. W. W. IS CANCELLED; COMMUNISTS HELPED

The department of labor deportation warrants issued against I. W. W. members William Moran, Herbert Mahler, Pietro Nigra and Joseph Oates have been officially cancelled, according to information received from defense Attorney Schorr in New York City.

Much agitation in Europe and Australia over the glaring injustice of the American government's action in pressing for deportation in defiance of its own laws was carried on by Communists in foreign labor unions thru the direction of the Red International Affiliation Committee of the I. W. W. and added considerable pressure upon the department of labor in Washington for cancellation of the deportation order. As this was something of a test case other I. W. W. of the same group may not be proceeded against.

CLOSING ARGUMENTS IN SCOPES TRIAL BEGIN TODAY; DARROW AND BRYAN CLASH OVER EVOLUTION

DAYTON, Tenn., July 19.—Closing arguments in the Scopes evolution trial will be begun Monday morning, and the jury is expected to end the first chapter in the fight to allow the teaching of Darwinism in the public schools by bringing in a verdict of guilty within two days.

William Jennings Bryan and Clarence Darrow are indulging in constant bitter clashes over the issues of the trial.

"The evolutionists have not been honest with the public," Bryan stated. "The ministers should tell their congregations that evolution leads logically to agnosticism."

Darrow again declared the Scopes' defense had "no desire to have the christian world give up its belief in god or its bible."

"Religion and science are entirely separate," said Darrow.

Can't Read Testimony In Court

The testimony of the scientists and professors brot here by the defense to say that "science and evolution do not conflict," will be handed to Judge John Raulston Monday morning in the form of briefs, and Raulston is expected to rule that the testimony must not be read before the court.

The professors were "desecrating" the sabbath today putting the finishing touches on their statements.

To Invade Other States

Bryan, who, it is announced, will endeavor to induce the legislatures of seven more states to prohibit the teaching of evolution, declared that the "tennessee evolution case has uncovered a conspiracy against evolution."

Walter White, superintendent of schools of Rhea county, in a statement describing the citizens of his county and upholding the anti-evolution law said, "No citizen of Rhea county has become so highly educated that he feels it his duty to substitute the red flag for the American flag, or dispose of his bible."

Those who are attempting to bar science from the schools are trying to make Darrow out a radical, but Darrow has assumed his most pious look and his scientists are mouthing christianity in order to show the powers that be that they are worthy of their jobs in the capitalist owned universities.

Mathews Defends Christianity Dope

Shailer Mathews, one of the defense witnesses, has stated that christianity also undergoes evolution, that "the christian theologian can find new understanding of Jesus as a revealer of an immanent but self expressing personality. Only those who are ignorant can find antagonism between christianity and science."

What Mathews failed to point out was that the ruling class changes the interpretation of christianity when it best suits the capitalists purpose of keeping the masses from being discontented.

Mothers Confound Bryan

From their mountain homes deep in the Cumberland Hills, two mothers arose today to confound William Jennings Bryan.

These two mountain women—mothers of pupils in the biology class of John Thomas Scopes—flatly repudiated the Commoner in what has been the heart of his defense of Tennessee's anti-evolution law. They said their sons, Howard Morgan and Harry Shelton, were not harmed by their lessons in evolution.

It was Bryan who said, "Mr. Darrow asked Howard Morgan, 'did the teaching of evolution do you any harm?' Why didn't he ask the boy's mother?"

"Go to the father and mother," the Commoner thundered, "and they'll tell you how their children's minds are being poisoned." But the mother proved Bryan a poor prophet.

First, there was Mrs. Luther Morgan, mother of Howard.

"The teaching of evolution hasn't hurt me or my boy," said Mrs. Morgan.

Evolution Not Poison

And then, she added: "I don't think any of us here in the mountains have studied evolution enough. I wish I knew more about it."

Mrs. William R. Shelton, mother of the 16-year old Harry whose testimony corroborated young Morgan's felt the same way. And these were the only boys to testify against Scopes. She calls her son "Bud."

"As far as I am concerned, they can teach my boy evolution every day of the year. I can see no harm in it whatever," said Mrs. Shelton.

"Why, when they called Bud to testify against Mr. Scopes, he had forgotten most of his lessons. He had to get the book out and study it up. In fact, as far as he acted around the house, I didn't even know he had studied evolution until this 'monkey business' came up. I suppose I might have watched his studies more because Scopes was arrested, I had to get Bud's book to find out what evolution was.

"I think it's all foolishness arresting Mr. Scopes. I can't see that he did any harm by his teaching and it's silly to punish him."

Thus the mothers of the hills answered Bryan.

JURY TRIAL GIVEN WEB PRESSMEN'S LEADER IN BATTLE AGAINST BERRY

NEW YORK CITY, July 19.—The court of appeals in the case of Simons of the Web Pressmen's Union, ousted by Major Berry for sticking to the interests of the workers in the great "outlaw" strike which was broken by scabby legionnaire Berry, has ruled for Simons in granting him the right to a jury trial on the points of dispute with Berry, thus reversing the judgement of the appellate division.

RELEASE CICERO COMMUNISTS IN SPEECH FIGHT

The charges against Irving Search and J. K. Dante, arrested in the Cicero free speech fight, were dismissed in the Cicero police court. The two Communists were arrested two weeks ago at a street meeting on the corner of 49th Court and 14th St. A gang of sluggers, led by a priest, attacked the meeting and tried to break it up. Instead of arresting the rowdies, the police arrested the speakers.

The prosecutor, Christiansen, told the defendants that he believed in going to church every Sunday and protecting religion. He also rang in the Scopes case, and said he would protect Cicero from "heresy." The policeman who made the arrest of Search, however, said the Communists were arrested not for attacking the church, but for "distributing and selling a pamphlet about unemployment." The judge then dismissed the case.

David Bentall, attorney for the Communists, demanded that the police interference with Workers Party meetings cease. He announced that meetings are held on the street corner every Thursday night, and would continue.

Christiansen, who spoke loudly of "protecting the church," has also done good work in protecting the vice and crime ring, and the Western Electric company, noted as tax dodgers. He would not guarantee however, that the Workers Party would be protected from the attacks of Cicero policemen.

Last Thursday night, altho no arrests were made, a police Ford drove up, dragged Comrade Androlius, who was speaking in Lithuanian, from the platform, warned the speakers not to continue and sped away.

All party members are urged to be at the corner next Thursday night to help conduct the meeting and see that rowdies or priests do not break it up.

Hundreds Are Killed in Korea After Han River Floods Banks

SHANGHAI, July 19—Thousands are dead in Korea as the result of floods caused by overflow of the Han River, according to advices received here today from Keijo.

The entire city of Ryuzan was submerged and it is supposed loss of life was very great, but crippled communication made it impossible to obtain exact information.

Three hundred persons are believed to have been killed when a government school at Maho collapsed. Its foundations were undermined by the flood. Nine thousand villagers in the Tokusoin area are cut off in a flooded area and loss of life which may have occurred there cannot yet be ascertained.

COMRADE LASSEN HUNGARIAN RED FIGHTER, DIES

Was Editor of Elore, Author and Idealist

By ISRAEL AMTER

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, July 19.—Comrade John Lassen, former editor of the Hungarian Communist daily newspaper Elore, who has been ill for six weeks, died in the St. Josephs hospital Friday night.

Comrade Lassen was a militant revolutionist since his youth. He was active in 1914 in spreading anti-war propaganda in Hungary, where he helped to found the left wing of the social democratic party, and the Communist Party of Hungary.

Comrade Lassen made an attempt on the life of Count Tisza, for which he was sentenced to prison. He was released by the Soviet revolution and led the youth revolution in Budapest, after which he attended congresses of the Young Communist International before coming to America in 1921.

In December, 1924, Comrade Lassen was indicted by the United States government and threatened with deportation for writing a revolutionary poem, and articles in the Elore.

Comrade Lassen contributed many articles and stories to the DAILY WORKER, including his novel, "Masters and Slaves."

For eleven years Comrade Lassen was ill with tuberculosis which reached an acute stage last week. The funeral will be held at the Hungarian home on Sunday. He will be cremated. Comrade Lassen's life was an example for all revolutionists, he was an idealist, an excellent Communist fighter, a thinker, author and man of action.

HOLD COMMUNIST SPEAKERS OVER NIGHT IN JAIL

Arrested at Open Air Street Meeting

Police arrested two members of the Workers (Communist) Party, Fred Biedenkapp and Marek, at an open air meeting on the corner of Milwaukee Ave. and Division St., Saturday night.

The Communist meeting had proceeded 45 minutes when the police arrived and ordered Comrade Biedenkapp to disband the meeting. This he refused to do, and the police took him to the Chicago and Racine Aves. police station.

Comrade Marek then attempted to speak and he too was arrested. A large crowd had gathered before the speakers were taken away in the patrol wagon, and the police sergeant threatened to run his auto into them.

The case will come up this morning in the police court where the comrades are jailed.

STRIKE AGAINST WAGE CUTTING AT AUTO PLANT

Detroit Sees Strike at Fisher Body Plants

can only make about 60 cents an hour at the new rates.

These men who had been accustomed for many years to $9.00 and $10.00 a day, can now make only from $5.00 to $6.00 and that only under exceptionally favorable conditions. Often when the work is slow or when there is a hold up anywhere these men are unable to earn more than $4.00 to $4.50 a day.

Big Cut.

Besides the Trimmers, the Duco-Sprayers, Slush Sprayers, Ground-Sprayers, Paper-Belters and a number of other departments have come out. All these different operations have received heavy cuts in wages amounting to an average of 35 per cent. Most of these men had been earning $7.00 and $8.00 per day and they will have the greatest difficulty from now on in making as much as $5.00.

These savage wage cuts are convincing the men that the management has absolutely no thought of the welfare of the workers. They are beginning to realize that they must fight their own battles and their present temper indicates that they are going to fight this out to a finish. The strikers are certainly giving the company the surprise of its life. There have been many departmental strikes in the past but none of them have been fought so tenaciously and at no time did they assume the proportion that this one is beginning to assume. Unless the company makes a right about face with wage cuts in the other departments, the whole plant will be out before this strike is settled.

Beware of Splits.

Some of the departments among whom are the Cushion Makers, who were also on the point of leaving the shop were kept in by the bosses by a promise that they were to get their old prices back again. We do not know if this promise has been kept but we are quite certain that this concession to the Cushion Makers will last only until the others have been beaten and are back on the job working at the rates enforced by the company.

A deplorable feature of this strike is the lack of organization among the strikers. Not many of them are as yet members of the union, and altho the strike has so far been carried out with great courage and determination there will be no worth while results for the workers unless they organize themselves in the Auto Workers Union and by permanent organization maintain that which they are now trying to gain.

Must Unionize.

Auto Workers' Union, Local 127, has been making a strenuous campaign all summer among the Body Workers in Detroit, pointing out again and again the inevitability of just such wage cuts as this and urging the workers to get organized so as to be able to give effective resistance to the onslaughts of the employers.

The Auto Workers' Union stands for the following demands:

A minnimum scale of $1.00 per hour.

An Eight Hour Day and a 44 hour week.

Time and one half for overtime and doubletime for Sundays and Holidays.

No piece work without day rate for waiting time.

The Auto Workers Union calls upon all Body Workers to join together and by united action defeat the employers in their wage cutting, speeding up campaign and establish the above demands as the minnimum conditions under which any man will have to work. Local 127 meets every Friday at 55 Adelaide.

Hindus Demand Home Rule.

LONDON, July 19—The British parliament has received a manifesto signed by 40 representative Hindus demanding the passage of a new commonwealth of India bill. The manifesto protests against the British government's steps to "perpetuate the administration of Indian affairs by a foreign bureaucracy."

U.S. Aviator-Mercenaries on Riff Front Is Sign of French Imperialist Decay

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

TODAY, imperialist France puts her reliance on the professional soldier in making war against the Riffian armies of Abd-el-Krim in North Africa. Loyal colonials as long as they last, regulars from the evacuated districts of Germany, and now, most despicable of all, aviator-adventurers from the United States, who happened to be lolling away their time in Paris.

Hessians hired from German feudal lords were used by the British king against the American colonists when they were battling for freedom in the revolutionary war. One would think, therefore, that there would be at least the semblance of an American tradition against the professional murderer in the soldier's uniform.

But instead, American literature teems with the mock-heroic deeds of the "soldier of fortune," the mankiller who murders for the sport of it. Richard Harding Davis has lionized this character in fiction, especially the professional soldier who went with the vanguard of American imperialism to plunder in Mexico, Central and South America.

The Hearst press has always lauded this type of mercenary. It is now the Hearst press, especially thru the writings of Arthur Brisbane, that claims the Riffians are waging a hopeless struggle against the French because they cannot successfully face the airfleets of the imperialist enemy. The Riffians have done pretty well against the Spanish plunderers, and they are this week challenging the full strength of French militarism. This would indicate that the boasted strength of France in the air, claimed to be the greatest strength among all the nations, is not living up to the great claims made for it.

• • • •

There must be some reason why France must appeal for a "foreign legion" of mercenary aviators made up of "swash-buckling" Americans. It may be that Frenchmen, like Sadoul and Marti who refused to fight for French imperialism in the world war, are to be found even now in the French air forces in Africa, refusing to do the bidding of their militarist masters. There have been indications that the French soldiers is less loyal to the French franc than the sword-rattling American who fights for a price. It may be well, for future reference, to give the list of these Hessians who wear the stars and stripes, who may some time return to the United States and enlist on the side of the bosses in some great strike that looms ahead. Here are some of them:

Col. Charles Sweeney, of Spokane, Wash., is organizer of the mercenary crew.

Col. Charles Kerwood, of Chicago.
Grafton Grey, of Chicago.
Chester Gillette Parker, of Helena, Mont.
A. Granville Pollock, of New Orleans, La.
William Rodgers, of Pittsburgh, Pa.
Paul Rockwell, of Atlanta, Ga.
Reginald P. Weller, of New York.
Joseph M. Stehlen, of Brooklyn.
Paul F. Baer, of New Jersey.
Thomas H. Buffum, of Boston.

Not many "foreign" names there. No doubt all of them 100 per cent Americans; ready to do the bidding of the almighty dollar at a moment's notice, whether in crushing the discontent of American labor at home, or making an alliance with the House of Morgan to bolster up the tottering French capitalist regime.

• • • •

It is said that there are Russian Soviet aviators in China. Perhaps there are. We do not know. But if there are, they are champions of the liberation of the Chinese people. They serve in the cause of labor's international emancipation. As soldiers of the Red Star, they carry a new message over the world.

• • • •

American capitalism may go into insane spasms of jingo ecstasy over the murderous deeds of its mercenaries in North Africa.

But American labor must learn that a blow struck at the natives of North Africa, at the workers of China, or any other oppressed nationality, is a blow struck at them.

More will be heard from the "Soldiers of the Red Star" and the "Soldiers of Fortune" in the days to come, as tumultuous waves of discontent rise and fall, and rise again, always toward victory, over the face of the globe. Labor everywhere will in time take the Red Star as its guide. It will join in the war against the "Soldiers of Fortune" and the capitalist social system they seek to preserve.

NEW YORK AND LOS ANGELES FIRST TO PLAN DEFENSE DEMONSTRATIONS

International Labor Defense announces from its national office here that New York and Los Angeles are the first cities to bgein preparations for engaging in the great nation-wide defense campaign to be staged on Sunday, September 13. This day has been set aside as "Labor Defense Day" and will witness large mass meetings and local conferences in all parts of the country. The conferences, held in all cities on the afternoon of Sept 13, will launch permanent local organizations of the International Labor Defense, that was founded as a national workers' defense body at Chicago on June 28.

The mass meeting, to be held in the evening, are to give impetus to the work of defending the 128 class war prisoners in the prisons of the country. James P. Cannon, national secretary said: "We are going to have these demonstrations in one hundred cities from coast to coast and we are mobilizing a hundred of the best speakers in the labor movement to speak at them."

CHEER FOR CHINA, INDIA, SOVIETISM AT DETROIT MEET

Organize in All-America Anti-Imperialist League

DETROIT, Mich., July 19.—"Three cheers for China, India and Communism all over the world!" Several hundred Chinese and Hindu students responded to this prophetic slogan as one man last night; when the chairman, H. S. Liang, called for the three cheers, the auditorium of the startled Detroit Central Y. M. C. A. rang with the thunder of the reply.

This incident followed a speech by Manuel Gomez, secretary of the All-America Anti-Imperialist League, who had come from Chicago at the invitation of the Ford Chinese Students' Club and the students' Emergency Committee of Detroit to address a joint meeting of these bodies with the Hindustan Club of Detroit.

Other speakers included W. L. Hsu, J. L. Huang and Mrs. Ma, Chinese, and Alup Singh, S. M. Ouarahi and Mr. Deb, Hindus.

Press Growing Liberation Drive.

Determination that the great national liberation movement which has sprung up in China shall not die down but shall push on to eventual complete victory over foreign imperialism, showed itself thruout the meeting.

Hindus as well as Chinese showed that they are willing to make real sacrifices for what they clearly recognize as their common cause. When a collection was taken up for funds to be sent to the students and workers of Shanghai, many of them dug down into their pockets and handed over every dollar they had with them. Loud and prolonged applause greeted a contribution of $25 by the English-speaking branch of the Workers (Communist) Party, local Detroit.

Against English Impreialists.

J. L. Huang, in charge of the collection, misunderstood the term "English branch," confusing it with the name of the Communist Party of Great Britain—and he instantly shouted out: "We are against the English imperialists, but we are not against the English Communist Party."

In the name of the Chicago branches of the Workers Party $40 was pledged. Altogether, the collection amounted to $1,060, given freely, amidst indescribable enthusiasm.

Shows Anti-Imperialist Unity.

Gomez, in his address, dwelt upon the significance of the meeting as a sign of the anti-imperialist unity of Asia, and not only of Asia, but of the oppressed colonial and semi-colonial peoples everywhere. That this unity is no fiction was proved by the mere mention of the heroic struggle of the Riff tribesmen against imperialist France, which evoked stormy applause.

The speaker also declared that the meeting represented an even more transcendent unity—the unity of the revolutionary working class movement in the home countries of imperialism with the struggle for liberation in the colonies. He laid special emphasis on the close friendship merging into alliance between China and the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics, symbol of the international victory of the working class.

The terrible conditions prevailing in the foreign-owned textile mills of Shanghai were vividly portrayed by Mrs. Ma in a speech bristling with indignation and defiance. And the climax fo the meeting was reached when gray-haired Mr. Deb, president of the Hindustan Club of Detroit, his voice breaking wtih emotion, assured the Chinese that the Hindus were ready to stand by their cause not only with money, but with their life's blood if need be.

Organize Provisional Committee.

At the conclusion of the meeting an unofficial provisional committee of three was set up to consider plans for establishing a section of the All-America Anti-Imperialist League in Detroit.

The committee, which is to meet today, consists of H. S. Liang, president of the Ford Chinese Students' Club and chairman of the Chinese students' emergency committee; Ahmed, of the Hindustan Club, and Edgar Owens, district organizer of the Workers Party of America in the Detroit district.

GERMAN FASCIST STUDENTS TRIED FOR DEATH PLOT

Made Plans to Murder Stalin and Trotsky

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MOSCOW, June 24.—(By Mail.)—The trial of the German fascist students, Kindermann, Ditmar and Wolscht, accused of having prepared terrorist acts against Stalin and Trotsky, was opened before the Moscow supreme court in the evening of June 24. Jaroslavsky presides, Ullrich and Cameron are members of the court and Krylenko is prosecuting attorney; the official defense has been taken over by Ozep and Dukowskoy.

Numerous members of the foreign embassies as well as numerous foreign journalists are present.

The defendant Ditmar speaks Russian; the others, German. Wolscht refuses to be defended. Kindermann requests only legal advice. As experts for the characterization of the political situation in Germany and of the political motive forces behind the defendants, Horpius and the representative of the German Communist Party in the Comintern, Heinz Neumann, were summoned. On grounds of extra-territoriality, the German embassy council Hillger refuses to appear before the court; he declares his willingness however, to be examined commissarily at the embassy. The prosecutor announces that the examination of Hillger is of prime importance, because Hillger has to corroborate or deny the statements made by the prisoners during their preliminary examination.

Abuses the Court.

The defendants Wolscht and Ditmar are quite at their ease. Kindermann is a confused phantast. He attempts to provoke the court with the statement that the indictment is a product of insanity. He claims to have signed the protocol in a state of hypnosis. The prosecutor explains to the defendants their various rights according to the Russian criminal code.

The chairman announces that the witnesses summoned by Wolscht from Germany would reach Moscow on the evening of June 25. At the appearance of the witnesses for the prosecution, Kindermann again attempts to abuse the court. He is severely censured by the presiding judge who makes it clear to him that the court alone is competent to judge the admissability of the witnesses.

To the question of guilt, Kindermann declares that all defendants would plead not guilty. However, only Wolscht joins this plea, whereas Ditmar pleads guilty to every point in the indictment.

There is little protection today for workers connected with the chemical industry or the use of chemicals.

EXPOSURE OF SALE OF EMBALMED BEEF TO WORLD WAR SOLDIERS GETS RISE FROM SWIFT PACKING COMPANY

By CARL HAESSLER

(Federated Press Staff Correspondent)

Swift & Co., the Chicago packers named in the embalmed beef story sent out by The Federated Press early in April of this year, are cautiously making indirect attempts to stop the spread of the revelation. The F. P. exposure cited the discovery by a chemist in army service during the world war that the unspeakable "embalmed beef" of the Spanish-American war of 1898 had been resurrected after 20 years and sold to the army in the world war.

The chemist, now in a responsible industrial position in Chicago, had been stationed at the government laboratories in Savannah, Ga., during the hostilities. There he tested suspicious specimens of the food supplied to Uncle Sam's fighters by Swift & Co. and other profiteers.

He found some canned beef not only spoiled and chemically bleached but that pinholes in the cans had been resoldered and the cans themselves very heavily lacquered. Dissolving the lacquer he found the telltale stamp, 1898, on the cans.

Story Widely Printed.

After the war he told Harold Swift, the meat magnate and president of the board of trustees of the University of Chicago, whom he had known in college. Confronted with affidavits from the army laboratory files Swift was "very much surprised."

The Federated Press story was printed at least in three papers in Chicago, several in New York and in others all over the country. Not a word came from the usually alert publicity and research department of the packing company. The proof behind the story was too full of dynamite. Two months passed and at last the corporation found a victim on which to experiment.

Swift did not attempt to muzzle any of the three Chicago papers nor the New York or other metropolitan publications that used the F. P. story. But L. D. H. Weld, manager of the Swift research department, swooped down on a tiny publication way off in Nebraska, the Norfolk Press, and demanded an accounting.

Perhaps Weld was emboldened by the fact that the editor of the Norfolk Press is a woman. But since she is a levelheaded woman she got in touch with the Federated Press, her representative saying, "I am quite sure that when you begin to answer Swift & Co. they will soon lose interest." Since then a month has passed.

Received No Answer.

The F. P. has written to the valiant Weld, in care of Swift & Co. as follows:

"We learn that Swift & Co. has become interested in the embalmed beef revelation published by The Federated Press over three months ago. We printed what we believed to be well supported facts on unimpeachable evidence and see no reason to alter any statement in the article but will be glad to send out a correction if there is any basis for one.

"If after consulting Harold Swift of your corporation you still desire to push the inquiry, we shall be at your service but hope you will deal with us direct instead of pouncing on an obscure woman editor in Nebraska."

MacDonald Here This Fall.

LONDON, July 19.—J. Ramsay MacDonald, "socialist," one of the best premiers that British imperialism ever had, plans to go to Canada the early part of fall. Conferences of the Interparlimentary Union at Washington and Ottawa will be held this fall and a large party of house of commons members are scheduled to attend. It is expected his trip will include these conferences and also the convention of the American Federation of Labor to be held in Atlantic City in October.

Money Scandal Causes Split in Klan

DENVER, Colo., July 19.—The climax in a ku klux klan money scandal was the secession of the Colorado klans from the national organization and its formal declaration to follow the Denver klan.

GOVERNMENT TO TURN AIR MAIL ROUTES TO WAR USES? COOLIDGE ORDER TO THE ARMY REVEALS

WASHINGTON, July 19.—The war department will "investigate the possibility" of using the air mail routes for battle plane in time of war.

Orders were issued today for six army pursuit planes to fly from Selfridge Field, Mich., to San Francisco to determine how many airplanes could be accommodated and re-fueled at the air mail landing fields. The flight will start on July 20 and stops will be made at all regular landing places.

JOBS STILL GET FEWER, BUILDING ONLY PROGRESSES

148 Men to 100 Jobs, Throughout Illinois

Industrial employment in Illinois is on the downgrade. The Illinois department of labor's monthly review, prepared by R. D. Cahn, chief statistician, and issued yesterday, shows less change during the last thirty days, however, than in preceding months.

Altho employment figures are lower than for any June since 1921, the rate of descent has slowed down. The number of workers employed fell by only 4-10 of 1 per cent in June, whereas the rate of fall was 1 per cent in each of the three preceding months, owing perhaps, to more summer work opening up.

4.5 Per Cent Less Working Than in 1924.

Reductions in working forces are less than those of a year ago when Illinois employers, after laying off 2.5 per cent of their workers in May, eliminated an additional 3.4 per cent in June. The decline of a year ago, however, started from a higher point than was the case this year. There are now 4.5 per cent fewer people employed than at this time in 1924, and 15 per cent fewer than in June, 1923.

Building Volume Grows.

The phenomenally large volume of building operations keeps the employment curve from dropping still further. In seventeen of the twenty-three principal cities of Illinois, the volume of new building work authorized was larger than a year ago.

Building progress was recorded at Aurora, East St. Louis, Rockford, Rock Island and Murphysboro. In the city last named, which was struck by a tornado in March, more than $400,000 worth of work has been projected during the last two months.

In Chicago the volume of new work for the calendar month amounts to $33,087,100. In Aurora, Decatur, Oak Park, Peoria and Rockford new projects are valued at between $500,000 and $1,000,000, and in Cicero, East St. Louis and Springfield between $250,000 and $500,000.

Steel Business Slumps.

Employment fell sharply in iron and steel plants, which laid off 2.4 per cent of their employes during the month. In furniture, musical instruments and household furnishing factories, employment fell off between 1½ and 4 per cent.

Seasonal increases in the apparel and food industries were pronounced. Warm weather brot increased employment in beverage, ice cream and ice factories. The meat packing industries also had more employes than is regularly the case. Canning employers, approaching the peak of their season, added 26 per cent more workers in June than they had in May.

Coal mining operations are still bad. Reports are current, however, that some collieries now sealed, will resume operations in the early fall.

Free employment conditions were changed but slightly. There were 148 applicants per 100 positions open in June, which was slightly less favorable than in May or April.

Mechanics Get Raise

WASHINGTON, July 19.—(FP)—Wage scales of skilled mechanics employed by the District of Columbia were increased approximately 10 per cent by act of the board of commissioners. These employes were getting $6.40 a day and their new rate will be $7.04. They have practically continuous employment and 15 days leave with pay annually.

An Index to Los Angeles

GLENDALE (suburb of Los Angeles)—Unable to obtain work, Herman Van Black, about 35 and believed to be from a prosperous Nebraska family, lived for many days on what scraps he could find in garbage cans. Today he was found unconscious and dying, poisoned by what he had eaten. In his delirium, the man told of unsucessful efforts to secure work and his dread of asking aid.

WIVES OF TWO MURDERED POLISH COMMUNISTS ARE GIVEN HEARTY WELCOME BY WORKERS OF SOVIET

MOSCOW, U. S. S. R. (By Mail)—The wives of the treacherously murdered Polish revolutionaries Baginsky and Vetchorkevitch, arrived in Moscow and in an interview with the representatives of the Executive Committee of the International Red Aid gave their impressions and reminiscences of the last months of their stay in bourgeois Poland.

"Our sufferings began already in 1923, when the Polish hangmen threw our husbands into the military preliminary confinment prison in Dikaya St., Warsaw. A few days before his assassination," said Baginsky's wife, "my husband said to me: "I could tell of such horrors that I find it difficult to believe they could happen in the 20th century."

Comrades Baginsky and Vetchorkevitch were soon made to realize by their own bitter experience how true these words were.

Hounded on Streets

After comrade Baginsky's and Vetchorkevitch's assassination their wives returned to Warsaw. They were so closely watched by detectives that they had to sever all connection with their friends, in order not to expose them to the danger of arrests and raids. Moreover, they avoided walking in the streets, as Warsaw "ladies"—furies in the guise of "angels" mocked and derided them in every possible way, using abusive language, etc.

"These ladies," said Comrade Vetchorkevitch, "and also the police, knew that I was a proletarian by birth (my father was a working man) and wanted to root up this "nest of Bolshevism."

The president of the repatriation commission Kulikovsky, used every possible means to make us give up "Bolshevism dreams." He promised to support us and to place our children into schools at the expense of the state. When this old hypocrite saw that all his vile efforts were in vain, he began to threaten us with "god's" punishment, saying that our children would curse us.

"Your children will curse you for taking them to the country of the barbarous Bolsheviks"—said Kulikovsky repeatedly.

Welcomed in Soviet Union

"When even this was of no avail the secret police took a hand. All sorts of threats were used. But we were not frightened even by this, and went to Piontkevitch, the chief of the Polish secret police. He would not receive us for a long time, but we were so insistent, that "his lordship" came to us in a passage surrounded by a large body of detectives and policemen armed to the teeth. After stormy negotiations, we received the permit to go to the U. S. S. R.

Comrades S. I. Vetchorkevitch and D. S. Baginskaya closed the recital of their bitter experiences with the remark: "The hearty welcome extended to us in Moscow will make us forget the horrors which we have experienced in bourgeois Poland.

FILL TENT AT K. C. HANDS OFF CHINA MEETING

By E. HUGO OEHLER.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., July 19.— At the "Hands Off China" meeting held here, five speakers held the audience's attention for two hours and a half in spite of the heat. The tent was packed with occidentals and orientals who heard the speakers representing the oppressed races express their solidarity against the imperialists and their demands in China.

The students who represented the orientals in an international way were C. I. Chang, Chinese; L. I. Savimento, Philippino and Siao Ogino, Japanese.

Col. Bradley, Negro speaker, gave an excellent talk as a representative of the downtrodden 12 million Negroes of the states and those of the unprotected colonies.

Thurber Lewis, representative of the Workers (Communist) Party, expressed the American workers' sympathy for the Chinese and showed what is necessary for the abolition of imperialism. The five speakers let loose more working class thoughts than the capitalist presses put out in a year.

One capitalist lackey paper of the Kansas side had an editorial ridiculing and criticizing the meeting in the usual capitalist way. But the big turnout of all oppressed races who showed their solidarity and class conscious awakening of the masses was a suitable answer.

With the comradeship, international spirit and friendship for Soviet Russia as shown by this anti-imperialist, "Hands Off China" meeting, we can see why the god-fear and hell-fear is in the hearts of all capitalists and capitalist lackeys.

Porters Hurt in Wreck

PITTSBURGH, Pa., July 19.—Two Pullman porters were injured slightly and a hundred passengers were shaken when four coaches of passenger train No. 7, of the Pennsylvania line, New York to St. Louis limited, were derailed today at Ingram, a suburb.

All passengers were transferred to another train. Most of the passengers were in their berths when the four coaches split a switch and were dragged 200 feet before the train could be stopped.

San Quentin Hell for Many I. W. W.; Heaven for McCoy

LOS ANGELES, Cal., July 19. —Since the new warden took over the management of San Quentin, Cal., very little is heard from there. And, when something does come out, it is generally thru the underground route. It is reported that, while California's criminal syndicalism prisoners work a year or more in the jute mill, the worst of the prison industries, and are thrown into the hole when they ask for transfer to other work, Kid McCoy, former prize fighter (and married eight times and a half), serving 48 years for the slaying of Mrs. Moors, of Los Angeles, and injuring many others, was after less than a month at San Quentin transfered to the printing shop, one of the easy jobs.

A workingman, doing his own thinking, is considered a more dangerous criminal than a cold-blooded murderer from the ranks of the parasite class.

To Call Pact Conference

LONDON, July 19.—The possibility of a conference between Great Britain, Belgium, France and Germany to discuss the German security pact, was admitted at the foreign office.

IRON HEEL IS USED ON UNITED STATES SOLDIERS

No Justice for Poor Says Young Private

By PAUL CROUCH.

HONOLULU, Hawaii (By Mail.)—Army courts-martial show the same kind of injustice in dealing with minor violations of law as with those guilty of the crime of sympathy for the working class.

A young soldier recently received a sentence of five years at hard labor. His crime was taking part in an illegal raid upon a house of ill-fame in which many soldiers had been robbed.

In a letter to a friend, this young soldier gives his opinion of the "justice" given men in the Hawaiian department. An extract from the letter speaks for itself.

"Is it a wonder that I am full of hatred for my own country? Forced by a jury of seven officers to serve five years of the best of my life, can you wonder at me?

"Justice is supposed to reach from ocean to ocean and to the uttermost parts of our possession. But does it?

"When a young man with no experience, for his first 'crime' goes on the witness stand and is not granted even respect by the court; when a jury gazes out the window while the accused is pleading, yes, praying for justice, consideration and a square deal, what can one think of his country? How can one respect such a sentence? How? I ask you.

"When soldiers are given sentences and dishonorably discharged at the rate of one a day in these islands alone, what shall a man think of his country? Is it our laws or our people? Surely, with our present schools and educational means, the people are growing no worse. The correct answer is—our laws.

"Nothing but injustice; nothing fair. Only crookedness and unfair methods. Shall we call it 'the land of the free and the home of the brave?'"

The writer of the above letter is a victim of the present system of social injustice. Despite his sentence, I would trust him with my life or property a thousand times sooner than Morgan and the other respected parasites of the country.

When Communism is fully realized, crime will exist only in the past. The working class should understand that crime is only one of the evils of capitalism. The cure is not brutal suppression, but the destruction of its source.

PULLMAN PORTERS, FORCED TO WORK OVERTIME ON SMALL WAGES, MUST ORGANIZE INTO THEIR OWN UNION

NEW YORK, July 19.—Unrest among Pullman car porters finds a reflection in the current issue of the Messenger, Negro magazine. Making the point that the Pullman porter will be trampled upon until he organizes in his own union—not a company union—the magazine gives some of the special abuses these workers suffer from:

Wages: Average is $60 a month.

Overtime: No pay for overtime tho the porter often has to work three days and two nights without sleep or without time to bathe and freshen up. Members of the unionized train crafts get time and a half for overtime.

Hours of work: Whatever the boss wants to enforce.

Pensions: Eighteen to twenty dollars a month on retirement as compared with the fifty dollars or more of the Pullman conductor or the hundred dollars or more of the engineer.

The only Pullman porters' organization is a company union formed by the Pullman company for the benefit of the company and of no value to the workers.

:-: The Foreign Policy of the German Capitalist Republic :-:

THE handing over of the new disarmaments demands on the part of the entente to Berlin is causing the greatest embarassement to the big capitalist-junker rulers of Germany. For the past six months there has been a great outcry over the immoral methods of the entente, who, in spite of the expressed terms of the Versailles treaty, refuse to evacuate Cologne, but no mention is made of the reason for this non-evacuation, i. e., the failure of Germany to comply with the disarmament conditions. For months past the national government press has been feigning to raise a storm of protest, against the demands of the entente in order to deceive the nationalist Hindenburg electors, altho they know perfectly well that the national government of Hindenburg will fulfil the demands of the entente.

The disarmament demands are a well-known means of pressure by France upon Germany, and constitute the usual pretexts for the continued occupation of Cologne and the Ruhr area. They have nothing whatever to do with a real "disarmament," if only because they are submitted by the entente powers who are armed to the teeth, to Germany which is at present militarily helpless. Still is it intended that they shall achieve the disarming of the German white guardist civil war forces against the working class. On the contrary, the entente powers are even prepared to supply the German bourgeoisie, provided it behaves itself, with all the necessary war material for holding down the German working class and for war against the Soviet Union.

THE German government hoped to obtain an amelioration of the demands by English imperialism, to whom it renedered various gratuitous services, especially by the well known guarantee pact. Tedious negotiations regarding the formulation of these disarmament demands. The English foreign minister, Chamberlain, never even dreamed of rendering any return service to his faithful servants in the German government. On the contrary he attempted to conclude mutually advantageous business with France at the cost of Germany to maneuver French imperialism out of its own positions, but at the same time to lead the German government by the nose by means of half promises.

The German counter-revolution did not object to this maneuver. It hoped on the contrary, in its helplessness, to obtain some slight advantage from it, and designated the whole thing as real national politics, or skillfully taking advantage of Anglo-French antagonism. The real underlying idea of this real national politics is somewhat as follows: "How can I as a national government, with the heroic Hindenburg as a figure head, adorned with national phrases, continue most easily the policy of submission and render it palatable to the nationally minded masses." In other words, how can a suitable pleasant sounding Hindenburg melody be found for the permanent policy of every bourgeois government, the fulfillment of the Dawes plan?

WHEN the German counter-revolution agreed with English imperialism on the presidency of Hindenburg, it promised the promptest fulfillment of the English desires and only requested to be allowed to make a few harmless nationalist gestures in order to placate the mass of nationalist voters. French imperialism has also shown a touching understanding for this requirement of the Hindenburg government. The French foreign minister, Briand, after the last speech of Stresemann stated that he fully understood that Stresemann must make use of some nationalist phrases in order to please the German masses, but for him it was sufficient to read between the lines what the Hindenburg government wished to say to France. Briand was tolerably satisfied with this essential import of his speech.

The guiding star of the German bourgeoisie is and remains the Dawes pact. The praise of the reparations commission over the faithful fulfilment of all reparations obligations by the monarchist Hindenburg government is a quittance which Hindenburg can hardly pin to his heroic breast alongside of the other imperial decorations on the occasion of monarchist national parades. The second guiding star of the national government is the Versailles treaty. The offer of the guarantee pact and the readiness to enter the league of nations is a declaration of preparedness to confirm with the blood of heroic German nationalists all the clauses of the Versailles treaty, which hitherto have only been signed by the withered hands of the social democrats.

AT the same time the German bourgeoisie would very much like to obtain greater freedom of movement. It makes eyes at France, casts a smile on England, learns from the "successes" of the Bulgarian murder bands, and plays with the idea of receiving "national advantages" from the entente as mercenaries against the Soviet Union. In all this play it does not feel very comfortable. In the first place it is oppressed by the fear that the monarchist masses of electors, intoxicated with nationalist phrases, could see thru the whole swindle, and that the working class could openly rebel. Secondly, it observes that its "real political considerations" avail nothing: it is and remains an "object" of imperialist bargaining; and this becomes all the more the case the more it approaches to the English desire of turning away from the Soviet Union.

Recent history furnishes a glaring example of this: the counter-revolutionary customs tariff measures prevent an economic approachment to the Soviet Union; but are without effect against the competition of entente industry. With loving smiles English imperialism expedites the Anglo-French understanding: this understanding will be directed in all its points against Germany: by the new disarmament demands and the endless prolongation of military control the occupation of Cologne will continue to be "justified," and French imperialism obtains the desired pretext to prolong this occupation as long as it desires. The Anglo-French understanding regarding the German guarantee pact, made on the prompting of England, brings great advantages to English imperialism.

FRANCE also obtains the advantage that the Rhineland is separated from Germany for good and converted into a militarily occupied colony, the German frontiers of which are open on all sides to the French troops. Bourgeois Germany, on the other hand, receives the following "advantages": Hindenburg is allowed to sign the Versailles treaty and enter into the robber league of nations; the German government in order to facilitate the Anglo-French understanding, had to declare categorically that it would never think of raising "in the near future" the question of the Eastern frontiers (Danzig corridor, Upper Silesia) or of being united with Austria. These decress of submission require an appropriate national Hindenburg melody. Thus we have the "thousand year anniversary of the Rhineland" (which is to be given up), the "efforts to be united with Austria," and so forth.

The nationalist Hindenburg government is confronted with new and burdensome measures of fulfillment and submission. It is becoming more and more difficult to render them attractive by setting them to nationalist melodies. It is becoming apprehensive in the face of the awakening of the nationalist masses from their in-counter-revolution is marching in the camp of the entente as a kept vivandiere.

WAR LORDS ARE FLIRTING WITH KANSAS CITY, MO.

To Be an Aircraft and Munition Center

By E. HUGO OEHLER

KANSAS CITY, MO, July 19.— A two million dollar airplane syndicate will locate in this city with Anthony Fokker, manufacturer and inventor of the Fokker plane and a group of American capitalist as it's guiding force. The city is favored as an aircraft center says a local paper because it gives, "Greater security in time of war from enemy aircraft," with, "Exceptionally favorable labor conditions and a good supply of trained woodworking and metal mechanics needed in aircraft production."

The backers of the Fokker project expect to be able to turn out 1000 planes a year in this strategical position for such development in time of peace and more in time of war.

It is well remembered that the Dutch airplane builder's planes were the effective and exclusive weapon of the Germans and in the world war. But Germany is now a disarmed bourgeouise state while the United States is an ever increasing arming state. In times of peace the commercial benefits will be theirs and in time of war, 'the exceptionally favorable labor' will be making planes to be used to gas and bomb workers in other parts of the world, so legal robbery may continue.

But airplanes is not all for it was not so long ago that a K. U. proffesor in discussing the economic development of the territory said that Kansas City is a logical munition center. From our packing plants, fats and oils for our soap industry that in turn yeild a by-product of Glycerin and in the near by districts the roasting of zinc sulfide can yeild large quantities of sulfuric acid. The two combined with nitric acid furnishes a substancial output of nitroglycerine.

In the wars to come it looks as though Kansas City will play a decisive role in the service of the war lords as an inland city that contributes it's labor power for the furtherance of aggressive capitalism. All week in the factories and plants war goods will be turned out by proud slaves and on the sabbath they will praise their God and ask him for support in their bloody wars of imperialism.

The Workers Party in Action

SCOPES TRIAL, RELIGION VERSUS EVOLUTION, FREE MASONRY AND COMMUNIST MEMBERSHIP DISCUSSED

The Scopes' trial and position of Communists on religion and evolution as contrasted with the bourgeois attitude; free masonry and membership of Communists in such organizations, organization of a "stand by Soviet Russia" and "Hands Off China" meeting were among the many matters discussed at the Chicago C. C. C. Wednesday, July 15.

Stand by Russia Meeting July 21.

In accordance with the program laid out by the Central Executive Committee another anti-militarist meeting under the slogan of Stand by Soviet Russia! Hands Off China! Boycott the citizens' military training camps has been arranged jointly by the Workers Party and Young Workers' League for next Tuesday, July 21, at Northwest Hall. (See other columns for details.) 25,000 anti-militarist leaflets and other pluggers are being distributed for the occasion.

Evolution Meeting Planned.

It was decided to organize as soon as possible a mass meeting on the Scopes trial, in order to bring out the attitude of the Communists toward religion and science. The evolution trial in Dayton, Tenn., offers a splendid opportunity for the Communists to explain the origin of the idea of gods, religion, the development of the sciences, the relation of these developments and phenomena in the field of sociology and so on. Announcement of the date of meeting will appear later.

In this connection came up also the matter of membership of freemasons in a Communist organization. This question was a mooted one at the fourth congress of the Comintern in relation to the French and Italian Parties. The Comintern and its sections stand unqualifiedly opposed to Communists being members of such organizations, which are nothing else but organizations of capitalism of a religious, political, economic and social character and Communists have nothing to gain by participation in such bodies. Membership in them is forbidden by the party.

Communist Press Picnic August 2.

In these hot days the tendency to slacken in the drive for the DAILY WORKER must be counteracted. The press picnic on August 2, offers opportunity to raise some needed hundreds of dollars for the benefit of the DAILY WORKER and the rest of the party and league press.

Every party unit is electing its special committee to participate in the gigantic press picnic on August 2, in Riverview Park.

Progress of Labor Defense activity and development of plans for building immediate membership organizations of International Labor Defense were reported upon and all party units are being sent special instructions on how to proceed.

The party will do its utmost to do its share in building a mass non-partisan mass organization.

The Young Workers League

During the month of July concentrating most of their activities in anti-militarist activity. Distributing 25,000 leaflets exposing the C. M. T. C.'s at shops, holding meeting together with the Workers Party on Tuesday, July the 21st at the Northwest Hall. Are in midst of campaign among young workers in printing industry. So far achieving good results. Campaign will continue for six or seven weeks, covering most of the largest printing plants in Chicago. Make big preparations for a sub-drive for the Young Worker, Sunday, July the 19th will be the first day of the drive, when the Y. W. L. members will canvass all readers of radical papers in an effort to get the young people there to subscribe to the Young Worker of the Young Comrade. Prizes are offered to comrades securing the most subs.

The Junior section of the league is establishing a summer camp at Fox Lake. They are raising a fund of $500.00 to equip the camp and to provide meals for the young comrades there. Party branches are urged to assist the Juniors raise the fund by making donations or collections from their branches and forwarding same to the local office of the league, 19 S. Lincoln St.

The trade unions are being regularly covered by speakers from the Negro Trade Union committee to help boost the American Negro Labor Congress. More financial help must be forthcoming for the Negro Champion, the organ of the American Negro Labor Congress and in general to help this organization put over its congress.

Street Meetings

Persecution by the police is now regular, but the party continues its meetings to maintain the right of free speech on the street corners. In Cicero there is now such a battle on and all available comrades should go there every Thursday night at 14th St. and 49th Court.

In the industrial field which could not be reported upon because of the lateness of the hour, the city executive reports the following, T. U. E. L. especially active among machinists locals and resolutions in No. 199, No. 390 and No. 113 condemning scabbery of United Garment Workers in Amalgamated strike.

Metal trades group of T. U. E. L. and Machinists and Metal Polishers' Union in united front to conduct organization campaign in Flexible Shaft company. Leaflets being issued.

In barbers, appeal being taken from decision of the G. E. B. suspended progressive members and demand being made for immediate reinstatement of suspended and further pointing out that progressives had carried on a campaign for building up the union and local union had upheld right of group to organize as they have for that purpose.

DRAWING COLOR IN 'LOS' CAUSES RIOT AND FIRE

LOS ANGELES, Calif.—Recently a big crowd of "angels" started a nice little race riot in this city. And the reason for it was that a white man sold a house and lot to a human being of color by the name Alexander, said to be boss among his own people. This happened in spite of the fact that Mr. Alexander had not moved into the house—and never intended to do so. The former owner—after having sold the property, rented the house and lived there with his family. Therefore in the case the man of a "superior" race got the worst of it. He was roughly handled, furniture thrown into the street, police, and all that. So we not only have a trinity of perils here, Red, yellow and black, but also a trinity of K's.

Blames K. K. K. and Barbers

The Doran street school in Glendale, a suburb of Los Angeles, took fire 5 times inside of a few days. Now a man of color, Jesse Riley, is said to have "confessed" under a grilling (third degree) of the police. He did it in revenge, according to the report, because several barber shops had drawn the color line and refused to cut his hair, adding that he believed the K. K. K. was behind the action of the barbers. Riley is charged with arson.

Summer Army of Idle Encumbers Los Angeles

By FRAPIESA.

LOS ANGELES, July 19.—The midnight mission, haven of destitute men, is surpassing former records. It is filled to capacity every night. As a rule, at this time of the year some relief is felt in the crowding of men in the shelter, but that is not the case in 1925. When the building is emptied of its human contents every morning there is no standing room not occupied on the sidewalk in front.

Real Prosperity.

Practically all the unfortunate men are abled-bodied and in the prime of life. Anxious to work but seeing no employment in prospect, they look blankly about them.

Somehow, the two A. F. of L. papers of this city rejoice over the situation of these indigents. They point to them as proofs that prosperty groks cool with Coolidge and hint that conditions would be better under LaFollette or his successors.

But the fake labor organs fail to note that the growing army of unemployed is a sure sign of improvement in Los Angeles. As the cheapest labor market in the United States unemployment means real prosperity for those who control the city. Coolidge prosperity for Los Angeles employers is just plenty of labor at any price they care to pay for it. It is here to stay for sometime.

Getting a DAILY WORKER sub or two will make a better Communist of you.

PETTY TYRANNY PRACTISED ON RED PRISONERS

U. S. Officers Steal Mail to Get News

By WALTER M. TRUMBULL.

HONOLULU, Hawaii (By Mail.)—Army authorities have, it seems, entered into a conspiracy to learn of the tactics likley to be used by us in our fight in the federal court.

Regulations governing prisoners' mail, provide that a prisoner open his mail in the presence of the prison officers or the provost sergeant. This is to prevent money from being in the possession of the prisoners and to prevent saws, etc., from being sent to him. Receipt is given for money and the prison officer is ready to purchase necessities for him.

These regulations and federal laws are being broken by army officials for the purpose of obtaining "inside" information regarding our defense plans.

On July 2, Lt. Kreuter, the prison officer, opened, read and detained mail regarding our imprisonment from the Labor Defense Council, two copies of the DAILY WORKER and post cards bearing our pictures and a brief summary of our case. He stated that they had to go to the post commander.

After a twenty-four hour delay, the mail was given to us just before dinner. It was left in the cellroom when we went to dinner and on our return the mail was missing. Investigation brot to light the fact that the Sgt. of the guard had taken it by order of the officer of the day.

Complaint was made by us and the return of the stolen mail was promised. Lt. Kreuter, the prison officer, said that we would have to wait until noon the following day when he would become "officer of the day." When the time came and a request for the mail was made, we were informed that the former "officer of the day" had taken our mail with him.

The conduct of army officials in regards to our mail, indicates that they are desirous of making photostatic copies of it.

Reduction in Wages Stirs Melbourne's Packers to Action

MELBOURNE, Australia, July 19—The wages of storemen and packers employed at Melbourne have been reduced by $1.50 per week, with proportionate reductions in the case of those receiving under or over the basic wage of $21.96. There is intense dissatisfaction amongst the storemen and packers because of this reduction.

Teachers Must Undergo "Probation"

WASHINGTON, July 19.—(FP)—Eleven states have enacted teacher tenure laws. These laws generally prescribe a period of probation for teachers before permanent appointment and guarantee security of their positions during "good behavior and efficiency."

STANDARD OIL TRUST COLLECTS 40 MILLION DOLLARS IN 3 MONTHS, MILLIONAIRES GET ALL PROFITS

By LELAND OLDS,

The Standard Oil dynasty, split into 38 companies, collected from the users of petroleum products in the second quarter of 1925 $41,985,728 in cash tributes.

This is the largest amount ever distributed in cash dividends for April, May and June in the history of this giant trust. Only twice before have the cash dividends of any three months exceeded this huge total. Both exceptions include large extra distributions for special purposes.

Millionaires Get All.

Total cash dividends paid to Standard Oil owners since 1911 amount to $1,417,260,987. In addition stock dividends total $1,446,448,870. The combined total of $2,863,709,857 added to the wealth of the owners by oil alone means a return of more than 250 per cent on the par value of their stock as of 1912.

The greater part of this huge gain in wealth has gone to a few multimillionaire families including the Rockefellers, Pratts and Mellons. The Rockefellers alone probably received at least half a billion.

How Cash Rolled In.

How the cash rolled in year by year is shown in the figures compiled by Pforzheimer & Co., Standard Oil specialists:

Standard Oil	Cash Dividends
1912	$ 51,486,634
1913	107,795,361
1914	62,692,884
1915	62,401,204
1916	98,627,875
1918	103,480,916
1919	105,901,477
1920	115,776,793
1922	129,039,865
1923	138,423,295
1924	149,841,122
1925 (6 months)	76,341,346

Three Times Those of 1912.

The exceptional 1913 figure includes $39,335,352 disbursed by Standard Oil of New Jersey from repayment of loans to former subsidiaries following the fake trust dissolution.

Standard Oil dividends today are practically three times those of 1912, the increase amounting to more than 192 per cent. The increase over 1914, the last pre-war year, amounts to more than 137 per cent. Such figures show up big business when it complains because the meager $3.46 prewar daily wage of a contract anthracite miner has been increased 162 per cent.

The enormous funds available to Standard Oil owners every quarter year cannot be profitably invested in America which is already overexpanded industrially. As a result they turn to overseas investment where unlimited exploitation of subject populations is sought. So American imperialism grows with its increasing pressure on labor at home as well as abroad.

U. S. GIVES KLAN PARK, REFUSES SAME TO ANTIS

Coolidge Government Shows Its Leaning

WASHINGTON, July 19.—(FP)—Col. C. O. Sherill has told the leaders of the ku klux klan that he will not retract his decision to let them use the grounds of the Washington monument for their exercises after the parade on Pennsylvania avenue on August 8, but that they cannot stay there after ten o'clock at night, and they must not burn the fiery cross.

President Coolidge has so far declined to make an appointment with a delegation of Negroes who wished to see him at Swampscott to protest against the klan demonstration here. Plans for an anti-klan demonstration to be held here one week after the klan parade were scotched by Col. Sherill who vetoed a request for the monument grounds for the gathering.

The request was made by Rev. George H. Lawson of Keyport, N. J., former anti-klan candidate for governor of that state. Col. Sherill held that the demonstration was "of a political nature and hence forbidden by law."

Musicians and Stage Hands in Baltimore Threaten to Strike

WASHINGTON, July 19.—(FP)—Word has been received from Baltimore of a threatened strike of the Musicians' Union and the Stage Employes' Union there. Unless an agreement for a new wage scale is reached before the theaters reopen in September for the fall season, it is declared, a strike will be called which will tie-up every theater and moving picture house in Baltimore.

Both unions are demanding flat increases in pay of from 20 to 28 per cent. The contract with the musicians expires July 31 and that with the state employes expires September 1.

They have announced they will not sign renewals unless their wage demands are met. The theater managers have offered an increase of 15 per cent to both classes of employes. Their first offer was a 10 per cent advance.

Big Forest Fires on Coast.

PORTLAND, Ore., July 19—Two fires, each out of control, raged thru 900 acres of timber in Wenatchee national forest near Leavenworth, Wash., according to an announcement made at the office of the U. S. district forester.

ANDERSON HITS JOHNSTON'S BIG ELECTION STEAL

Re-opens Fight in the Machinists' Union

careful study of "Brother Leeman's report," any "fair minded person will feel as I do that the election was stolen from me and many other candidates." He asserts that the "mischief" was caused by Davison opening the tally sheets and ballots and he declares that "Davison, Charles Taylor, Johnston's campaign manager, and other insiders saw that Johnston and others of the machine favorites were defeated unless more votes were secured, so a hurry call was made for them."

Affidavits Clinch Charge of Steal

"The three affidavits from members of a committee appointed by Lodge 441 to investigate into the election shows how the voting is done for you," says the letter. "The first affidavit sworn to by Brother Venturini, shows that Davison knew how the vote was running and told Johnston's campaign manager about it and he in turn wired around the country to carefully selected persons for more votes. Later on someone came to Portsmouth, (Va.) with a tally sheet and took it back to Washington to be filled in.

"The second affidavit, sworn to by the entire committee deals in details with what the committee describes as a disgraceful affair which they say originated in Washington. The affidavit shows that the same crooked methods were used in the 1922 election when only 35 legal votes were cast, still Davison credited them with 340 votes so 305 votes were evidently made out in Washington.

"It is interesting to note that the same T. K. Farleigh mentioned in the affidavit is the party who sent out a circular during the last campaign, signing himself secretary-treasurer of the Virginia State district, a district which has been out of existence for years."

Davison Acted Illegally

Continuing his attack, Anderson says: "Had the Johnston votes which were illegal on their face been thrown out I would have been elected by a majority of 1600. Johnston was counted in with a majority of 945 votes. 1174 supporters in 12 lodges were disfranchised because Davison illegally ruled that these 12 lodges sent in more votes than they had members, and offer their lodge books in support of their denials.

"From my experience with Davison I consider the record of these lodges and the words of their officers more reliable than his word. It is bad enough when we hear of local members who in their enthusiasm for a candidate cheat, but when International officers who should set examples of clean, upright conduct stoop so low as to lead in a crooked deal to elect someone, is there any wonder we lose faith in them.

"No honest member will rest while our organization is under this cloud. After these letters have been read to the lodge they should be referred to a special committee. It is a very serious matter and should not be placed on file without consideration. You will hear from me again very soon suggesting a remedy."

Report of Watcher

Leeman in his report says that upon inspecting the ballots and tally sheets he found they had been removed from their original packages and envelopes in which they had been mailed and that they had been made up in new packages by the general secretary-treasurers clerks.

"Noting this I requested the general seretary treasurer to let me see all the ballots and tally sheets that came in after that date in their original packages before they were opened," he says. "This request was complied with a few days but after that they were brought up to the counting and exhibited to me after they had been opened.

"Of the total votes which the general secretary-treasurer submitted to the clerks to be counted, my record shows that William H. Johnston received 18,171 and J. F. Anderson received 18,179."

BUILDERS AT WORK

There Is One Excellent Way to Do It

Take This Tip From Trenton, N. J.

There are many good ways to build the Communist movement. But there is also one sure way that never fails—and a newly chosen Industrial Committee for Trenton, N. J. begins its activity in just this manner.

Read this letter from the Chairman, S. Peter:

Dear Comrades:—

The new Industrial Committee just elected by the C. C. C. held its first meeting and decided that the very best way to spread the principles of Communism among trade union workers would be to go to their meetings, take part in trade union activity, sell and distribute our paper the DAILY WORKER, our pamphlets and our literature.

Acting on this decision please send us at once an order of ten to fifteen copies of the best books and pamphlets suited for distribution and sale among organized workers—we will do the rest.

Fraternally Yours,

S. PETER.
Trenton, N. J.

• • • •

The literature order is now on its way to the new Committee who are making a systematic, intelligent beginning that is sure to bring results.

To help them along, additional literature has been sent for free distribution including a bundle of the DAILY WORKER and another of the Workers Monthly.

If there is another Industrial Committee anywhere that plans to put life in this most necessary Communist work among organized workers—write the DAILY WORKER a letter telling just what you are going to do. The DAILY WORKER and its Publishing Co. are THE MEANS BY WHICH YOU CAN BUILD YOUR LOCAL.

ZANKOV TERROR MURDERS MORE WORKINGCLASS PRISONERS, EVEN SCHOOL CHILDREN ARE ARRESTED

SOFIA, Bulgaria, (By Mail)—Alexander V. Draganov of the Kramolen village, Sevlievsk Uyezd, was shot dead by the convoy on the way to the Examining Magistrate, under the usual pretext—"whilst trying to escape".

Another prisoner was killed in the Burgas prison, whose name the secret police will not divulge. He was a native of the Kotlins Uyezd.

In the same Burgas prison Todor Slatev of the Ichere village was also killed.

New Trials

The trial of 31 Young Communist Leaguers in the Sofia military court has begun. They are charged with adherence to the illegal organization "Leo Trotsky." "The arganization" and "leaders" may either be sentenced to death by hanging, or be sentenced to 15 years imprisonment, or life.

The following trials are forthcoming: in the town of Vratza: (1) of 10 Communists of the Chirensk village headed by Christo Vatchkov; (2) of Communist schoolboys; (3) of the district party committee consisting according to the statement of the public prosecutor, of Ilya Tomov, Angele Goranova, Georgi Katev; (4) of Communist schoolgirls; (5) and the Butulsk case.

In the town of Plevna, the defendants in the trial of Young Communist Leaguers are Ivan Rusinov, Georgi Kuyumdzhiev, Zakhari Bekiarski, Shalon Nessimov.

In Sofia, the case of the lawyer Georgiev has been investigated and he will soon come up for trial. Georgiev is charged with "scouting" for Kosta Yankov.

The case of the Lomsk comrades, who participated in the September rising in 1923 has gone to the court of appeal.

In Sofia, the case of Dr. Koev—brother of the Koev who was hanged, has been investigated and he will soon be tried.

The cases of the Slivensk, Ayabolsk Phillipopol, Huskovsk and Ankhialsk Communists have been investigated. 300 people are being indicted in connection with the Huskovsk case.

Indictment of Political Emigrants

The so-called "conspiracy" case against foreign representatives is to be investigated. Among the accused are: Kosta Todorov, Obov, Nedelko Atanasov, Christo Stoyanov of the Agricultural Union, Gavril Genov, Todor Grudov and other Communists. Thsi case will shortly take place.

Farmers Flock To Cities

WASHINGTON, July 19.—(FP)—Of the 2,075,000 persons who left the farms last year, 13.8 per cent were in mountains states, and the next largest number went from Pacific coast farms, followed by New England, middle Atlantic and east north central states in that order. In the movement from cities to farms the mountain states again led with 9.2 per cent.

MALEVOLENCE SWAYS MOVIES OF CALIFORNIA

paltry $5,000,000 was not worth mentioning. Altogether, $225,000,000 were to be spent in 1925. Some figures! Not figures in round numbers but well rounded figures which, as ought to be known, are always padded.

July 1, 1925, the chamber of commerce of this place publishes the statement that movie production is going on at the rate of $1,000,000 a week or, say, $50,000,000 a year. The exaggeration of the Examiner was just $175,000,000 or 350 per cent over and above the facts. So when it comes to fooling the public everybody must make way for the news boy.

Bitter Dope for the Dupes.

There is method in this mad exaggeration. The heralding of increased production brings thousands of boobs, sapheads and whotnots to Los Angeles. The moving picture magnates paw over the assemblage of cheap humanity, pick out what suits them at their own prices and have the rest dumped, like surplus fish, into the slums.

The disappointment of would-be screen stars is of little interest, but the destitution of the dupes demands attention. Men are forced to work at anything for minimum wages. Young girls become prostitutes, public and private, and starve at the trade.

An example of the bunk sent forth to boost the movies is the following placard of the chamber of commerce: 20,000 actors in Los Angeles! That stuff brings 20,000 tyros to Los Angeles to be broken and sold to employers as junk.

Talent Is Not Wanted.

20,000 actors in Los Angeles! Bless your soul, there hasn't been an actor resident in this city since Frank Keenan quit the movies in disgust three months ago and joined the Orpheum Circuit.

The chamber of commerce evidently calls the thousands of hicks and yaps who hang around the movie studios "actors." It probably does not know any better.

These "actors" are just California boobs who have never been outside their home towns until they came to Los Angeles. They dress like rustics and group by hundreds before the barnlike fronts of the studios, waiting to be called to "act." If there are 20,000 of them, it is safe to estimate that 10,000 do not average one working day, at $7.50, a week, 3,000 others one day every two weeks and that not more than 1,000 earn living wages. But they are just the material the producers want—without talent and without resources.

Pitiless Exploitation.

The dupes are not to be laughed at. They are miserable victims. Many of them have families to support. They plead like beggars for work and are told by the movie bureaucrats: "We have hundreds of worse cases than yours."

Even after they realize they are dupes these unfortunates beguile themselves with such talk as this: "If the director sees you can act he will boost you." The director, as a rule, is a San Francisco or Los Angeles four-flusher whose knowledge of acting is 20 degrees below zero. He holds his job because of his ability to bunco, for that is what is wanted in the movie business.

The Deportation Menace

Tony Stafford, former international board member of the United Mine Workers of America, was framed up by the coal operators and sent to prison for five years for his participation in a coal miners' strike in West Virginia in 1917. The employers charged him with having dynamited the property of the coal company. The legal apparatus of the state being owned and controlled by the operators carried out the wishes of the coal barons.

Immediately after Stafford was released from jail, steps were taken by the department of labor to have him deported to Italy, his native land. He is now on his way unless he can be saved from the further persecution of Mussolini's murderers by last minute efforts.

The deportation weapon is one of the many clubs held by the ruling class over the heads of foreign-born workers who refuse to bow the knee in submission to the bosses. Threat of its enforcement helps the capitalists to intimidate the workers who are not yet under the influence of revolutionary ideology. As the basic industries of this country, particularly the unskilled classification in those industries are composed mainly of foreign-born workers it is quite evident that the deportation club is a very real danger, not only to the foreign-born but also to the native born.

Why? Because a foreign-born worker can be deported for participating in a strike against a reduction in wages, for the closed shop or for any other effort to improve the standard of living of the workers or improve their working conditions. Every worker knows that only thru collective action can labor's status be improved. It therefore follows, if the capitalists succeed in intimidating the foreign-born workers from joining a union, or participating in the activities of the union, even to striking, which is the only effective weapon of the union to enforce its demands, that the effectiveness of the union is seriously impaired.

Tony Stafford is one of the many workers whose loyalty to his class brought down upon his head the heavy hand of capitalist "justice." Every effort must be made to prevent his deportation to the fascist hell of Italy. He leaves a wife and little children in Pittsburgh, Pa. The International Defense is fighting for him and for his dependents. It is up to every class conscious worker in America to step in and help in this fight. We must battle the deportation menace every inch of the way.

What Are the Causes of War?

Barney Baruch, millionaire stock gambler and chairman of the war industries board during the world war, has contributed $250,000 to the international relations division of the John Hopkins University for the purpose of making an investigation of the causes of war.

If Baruch instead of spending a quarter of a million dollars on purchasable professors and professional investigators, bought five cents worth of Communist literature he would learn the causes of all wars under the present order of society. The answer can be condensed into one word and that is: capitalism.

The Herald-Examiner, the slimy Hearst sheet that fouls the morning air in Chicago, ventures to predict that the investigation will prove that while wars make some rich men richer it makes others poor and that rich men gladly make financial sacrifices for their country in times of war. No doubt the investigation will prove that very fact, but in proving that it proves nothing. Who should make financial sacrificse for the country except those who own it?

An editorial writer in the Boston Globe, a bourgeois sheet, said that all modern wars "are gigantic industrial enterprises." He made this observation after the armistice was signed. Others who said the same thing during the war found themselves in jail with sentences ranging from ten to twenty years hanging around their necks.

All modern wars are caused by the conflicts between capitalist powers over the spoils of the earth. We do not expect the hired men of Barney Baruch's dollars to bring out this fact. Like the socialist writer they may blame the fecundity of Chinese women for the war in China. They may blame the Riffian war on lack of bibles. They may discover that the late world war resulted from the poisons of syphilus in the Kaiser's system, which in turn poisoned his mind against his British relatives. They will most likely tell everything but the truth.

The Hearst rag believes that war is inevitable and that the first duty of the American people should be preparation for war. It quotes General Pershing approvingly when that "blackshirt" said: "I sincerely believe that complete preparation of this sort (for war) would be the greatest possible safeguard against jingoism at home and aggression from abroad."

We also believe that war is inevitable under capitalism and much tho we detest war, we believe that only a war of the producing classes, the workers and farmers, against the parasites, will bring everlasting peace to the human race. So long as a small group is permitted to exploit and rob the many there will be wars at home and abroad. There will be a constant war at home between the workers and their exploiters over the division of the product of the workers' toil and the various capitalist powers will quarrel over territories to exploit and "ports to export prunes."

The victory of the workers of the world over their masters and the establishment of the rule of labor in all lands will end war and outlaw poverty. The millions of Barney Baruch, John D. Rockefeller and other philanthropic rogues will only breed an army of sychophantic parasites who will praise the system that fills their yellow bellies.

Another "American" has been "shot" in Mexico. This will no doubt be made the occasion of more Coolidge-Kellogg notes against the workers and farmers of the republic across the Rio Grande.

The Prince of Wales is being urged in South Africa to join a movement to "save the elephants." No move is made to get him to fight for the protection of British workers, either at home or in the colonies. That would be Bolshevism, feared thruout the whole of the British empire as well as the rest of the world.

GREEN UPHOLDS UNION SCABS AGAINST A. C. W.

Fitzpatrick Supports Class Solidairty

organizations or seceeding groups."

"In the Ruhr, thanks to the Dawes plan and with the aid of American finance capital, the miners are working 12 hours a day. The 8-hour day has been abolished. And the International Workers' Relief aided these unemployed and striking workers of the Ruhr.

"The Irish famine left thousands starving. Jim Larkin, member of the executive committee of the International Workers' Relief, told me in Ireland not long ago that that organization was the only one which rallied to the aid of the starving Irish. That is the kind of an organization which you are condemning, an organization which is not composed entirely of Communists, but of millions of workers all over the world."

Speaking of the fact that the United Garment Workers are scabbing on the striking members of the Amalgamated, Overgaard said: "This is an example of organized scabbery, of one organization scabbing on another."

Overgaard showed how amalgamation in the trade unions is necessary to prevent such scabbery. He also urged the delegates to support the American Negro Labor Congress as a means of getting the Negroes and whites organized together.

Delegate Shusster showed how the attacks of the federation officials had gone so far that they considered that good comes only from themselves. He declared that month after month the federation meetings are taken up with trivial matters and discussion of vital subjects is waved aside. Both left wing delegates received hearty applause.

Fitz Defends A. C. W. As Dual Union.

"Green makes two errors in his letter," said Fitzpatrick. "The Amalgamated clothing workers is not a dual or seceeding organization." Fitzpatrick then went into the history of the struggle to organize the clothing industry and declared that the United Garment workers "Hasn't taken part in the activities of this organization for the past fifteen years and has done nothing but prevent and hinder union organization."

He told how the United Garment Workers' officials, headed by Tom Rickert, president of the United Garment Workers and member of the executive council of the A. F. of L., had driven the real workers out of the A. F. of L. and forced them to preserve their organization as the Amalgamated.

Green's Second "Error."

"The second error of Green," said Fitzpatrick, "is in advising us to keep out of wage disputes. We never tried to enter this wage dispute, but referred it to Green for action. Green was wasting his time and wasting his paper in telling us that."

Andrew Overgaard, left wing delegate from the machinists' union, made a stirring defense of the International Workers' Relief. Under the report of the executive board, it was brot out that a letter had been sent to all affiliated bodies, telling them that the Irish Famine Relief "did not represent the labor movement."

Overgaard Speaks for International Workers' Relief.

"This is an attack on an international organization that has aided the workers all over the world," said Overgaard. "I passed thru Germany recently, and in the Ruhr, I found striking miners being aided by the International Workers' Relief."

Ed Nockels made the remarkable statement that he didn't blame Rickert for taking the stand against the Amalgamated. "If I had been in Rickert's place, I would have done exactly the same thing," Nockels said. "As soon as the Amalgamated is allowed to come in those fellows will lose their jobs and I would have done the same thing. Self preservation is the first law of nature."

Delegate Wise, the Gompersite Communist baiter, sided with Rickert and the United Garment Workers' scab haters, and bandied words with Nockels, who told him, "You're a wise guy, but you don't know it all yet."

"If you want to be hand maiden for an organization that never puts in an appearance here to defend itself, go ahead," Fitzpatrick told Wise.

"What the United Garment Workers is doing is scabbery and traiterism and not unionism," Fitzpatrick said in his speech, and no honest union man can stand up for them."

Nockles Gives Remarkable Views.

"You haven't done a thing Tom Rickert that I wouldn't have done myself. You built up your organization and I wouldn't let anyone take my organization away from me." Nockels seemed to be shielding Rickert and at the same time denouncing the scabbery of his organization. He admitted that they have no organization except in the shirt and overall trade."

The label selling, scabbing, disruptive tactics of the United Garment workers was fully exposee.

"If I belonged to the Communist group I would do some tall speaking today," said delegate Flory. "I would have a legitimate right to do so. I would want to talk all day. We are just giving the Communists material, we are feeding them with legitimate causes to criticize."

THE workers should look with a suspicious eye on all articles about Russia or the working class movement, appearing in the capitalist press. Even when the owners of those publications are willing to publish the truth, which is very rarely, their writers are subject to temptations to color the news. In the Moroccan war for instance, the French government pays good money to the foreign correspondents covering the Riffian hositilities. Correspondents working or capitalist newspapers usually write what they are paid to write.

HOW many people notice that the United States government is trying to regain the prestige in China which it lost to the Soviet government? There was a time when the United States was looked upon as the "big brother" of the Chinese people. But that day is gone by. Soviet Russia is the real and only friend of China today and the Chinese people recognize that fact. While all the capitalist governments were devising new tricks to rob China the Soviet government turned around and treated that country like an equal. The result is that the workers and peasants of that potentially mighty republic of the Eeast have faith in the Soviet government while they look with a jaundiced eye at all the movements and professions of friendship emanating from the capitalist powers.

IF the bible is the divine word of the christian god, it must all stay as it is written. If it cannot be accepted in its entirity, it carries no more weight than a fairy tale. Some of the defenders of evolution claim that the bible and science can be reconciled. Yes, by leaving the supernatural out of it and placing it in the same category as the mythical tales of other countries. The chirstian will excuse his god for an atrocity imputed to him by the bible. He will admit that no Chicago gangster would escape the gallows for such crimes if committed today. But Jehovah had a reason.

WHEN he told his favorite children of Israel, fighting the Carnanites to kill all the male prisoners and the old women and to keep the virgins as compensation for the risks they ran in serving him, Jehovah's aim was to add to the low population of the world, the true christian will say in defense of such indelicate conduct. Even the kaiser would not dare issue such orders to his troops in "poor little Belgium," tho all the gods in the universe, with the exception of a few anti-British gods, were against him. Religion and science have always been at war. They cannot be reconciled.

SUPREME KNIGHT FLAHERTY of the Knights of Columbus was signally honorered by the pope recently. The honor did not cost his holiness much, it is true, but it means a good deal to Flaherty. The pope gave the supreme knight a medal, given only to bishops, because Flaherty was the bishop of the K. of C. The reason is that Flaherty is at the head of a powerful religious organization, which rivals the Masonic order in the United States. As the chief executive of this order he wields great power and the Vatican coffers will benefit by any honor which may add to the material and moral prestige of the supreme knight. It is a neat stroke of business.

AUTO BOSSES IN DETROIT HIDING THEIR PLUNDER

Conceal Big Profits in Wage Cut Drive

definite demands to line up all workers in the Fisher Body Plants to the end that the demands of the workers shall be achieved.

Shock Troops.

Owens told of the progress of the organization drive and pointed out that the first meeting was held before plant 18 during the month of March. Since then the campaign has been broadened till now it includes practically all body plants in Detroit.

"You are the shock troops in this struggle to retain your present living standards," said Owens. "The manner in which you conduct the fight must have a decisive bearing on the wage slashing campaign the bosses are determined to put across. If General Motors can put it over against the workers in plant 18 it is merely a question of time until the same vicious cuts will be instituted in the other plants they control. Organization offers the only effective means of resistance."

How About That $45,000,000 Profit?

Brother Collins, chairman of the strike committee, gave a report of the conference with the Fisher brothers. He told how the management continually sought to evade the real issue of the wage cuts by pleading poverty and that unless the cuts were allowed to stand the company would have to go out of business. The management was conveniently silent about the $45,000,000 mellon that General Motors had cut for their stockholders last year. They propose to increase dividends at the expense of the workers' living standards. "They cannot get away with it," said Collins, "if we put up an organized resitance."

Brother Logan told of the history of past struggles with the auto manufacturers in Detroit, and the need of drawing on the experience of past victories and defeats for the proper conduct of the present controversy. He offered a number of concrete suggestions which the strike committee will utilize.

Build Local 127.

The meeting adjourned with the men in splendid spirit and they left the hall with the determination of building up Local 127 so that it will be an effective weapon in the arsenal of the auto workers of Detroit.

This is the leading center of the auto industry thruout the world. Millions of dollars are invested in buildings and equipment. Upwards to 300,000 auto workers are employed here, all of which places the auto workers in an extremely strategic position. Properly organized they can compel almost any demand they see fit to present.

The spirit of Friday's meeting indicates that Local No. 127 will soon occupy its proper place in the world of labor and will become the most powerful union in Detroit.

are seen sticking out their tongues at a scab, or holding their noses (their own) or spitting on the sidewalk,—then they lay themselves open to an injunction.

A picket-line, according to the Springel bill, is to be sort of a Lovers' Lane affair, with the strikers strolling along, two by two, with each couple paying no attention to any one else but to each other respectively, and with no side-glances at strangers allowed.

However, no benches are provided in this innocent strolling. A gray-haired picket, who has been in every union fight since the Amalgamated was formed and who prides herself that she is on the line every day alongside the younger workers, was poked in the ribs by a policeman's club and Saturday and told to "move on" when she was caught resting on a box in a hidden corner.

This Violence Never Unlawful.

She is only one of a hundred of gray-haired, toil-worn women who doggedly pace round the block, hour in and hour out, every day in the week, while the policemen lean against the building or set in their cars when they get tired of jailing workers.

What particular form of "force and violence" the strikers will be accused of, is, of course, known only to the company gunmen; but it is expected that this legal trap will be set for the striking defendants. The company sleuths have nothing to do but to manufacture false evidence and to escort the scabs home at night. As there are usually no more than two or three scabs, this means that most of their time is spent hatching deviltry.

Besides their own dicks, the company has at its disposal the regular services of two city detectives besides a police sergeant and as many cops as the sergeant wants to haul out, the number ranging from 25 to 100, daily and nightly.

It is rumoured that this is the sergeant's last year of active duty before being retired on a $1,300 yearly pension. Fear lest he fail to please the powers that grant pensions keeps this fat politician on the jump ordering his men to make arrests. On Saturday, it is reported that six arrests were made of workers not on the picket line, but employed by a neighboring firm. They were unceremoniously pounced upon and hauled into the wagon because they happened to be in the crowd attracted by the arrest of three of the pickets.

Cops Oughta's Strike, Too!

The rank and file police, however have no such cause for making a showing as has the time brutalized sergeant for their possible pension is many years off; and they get no more pay for gaping at the picket line than for gaping somewhere else. In fact most of them get considerably less as they are often forced to work as many as two and three hours over-time, with no overtime pay.

It is a common illusion among the strikers that the police are paid for by the boss. Many think that the boss is forced to pay the city $10.00 daily, at least, for patrol service. Such is emphatically not the case, the cops report, saying that their duty, as policemen, consists in "protecting private property" and that when any boss calls up over the phone and says that his property is in danger, then the squad must turn out and must stay on the job as long as there is the "danger."

"So the city provides the tailoring company with 50 or 100 police, it matters not how many, for as long as the strike lasts, and throws in a couple of detectives, to boot, to help out the company thugs when they are hard up for "frame-ups."

But the united front of boss, police and injunction judges looks pretty sick when compared to the united front of the eight hundred clothing workers, backed by hundreds of thousands of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers Union, and not one of whom has deserted the picket line during the entire three weeks of the strike.

Strike Benefits Due

Strike benefits will begin to be paid this Monday, according to the announcement of Manager Levin of the joint board. Single workers will receive $8.00 weekly, while those married or widowed will get $12.00.

Besides fighting the entire Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, the bosses are faced with a struggle with the A. F. of L., following the recommendation of the executive board of the Chicago Federation of Labor to President Green that the United Gorment Workers be condemned for their part as a "scab" union and that their be an investigation of their measure of the A. F. of L.'s name in trying to break the strike.

The Trade Union Educational League in local unions is leading the fight in the central labor council against the scabbing "labor" organization.

WILLIMANTIC STRIKERS IN GOOD SPIRITS

Scorn Evictions and Strikebreakers

WILLIMANTIC, Conn., July 19.—Two deputy sheriffs and six assistants are forcibly evicting those of the 35 thread mill strikers' families that have not yet abandoned the stuffy little company houses. Court judgement has been given against only 35 out of the 2,500 American Thread Mill strikers.

The United Textile Workers Union has set up a colony of 18 large tents and a community kitchen for evicted strikers just beyond town limits on the grassy field above a stream. Children of the strikers, those over 14 relieved temporarily from mill work, enjoy swimming and paddling in the stream these warm summer days.

Company tenements are mostly one and a half story colonial houses, five small rooms to a family, two families to a house. Each room has only one window. About 180 houses, some larger and more congested, are owned by the thread mill and rented to workers. When two families with five or more children each occupy almost every house, there is real crowding.

Some strike breakers are housed in one of the houses at present and are taken to and from the huge mill in a light truck, guarded by state police. Company agent Don H. Curtis claims that 700 persons are working. Actually there are not 70 strike breakers in the whole mill and these are out of town girls and boys for the most part.

Deportations Dropped.

Deportation warrants issued against Industrial Workers of the World members, William Horan, Herbert Mahler, Pietro Nigra and Joseph Oates by the department of labor have finally been cancelled. The United States supreme court had previously declared the deportations illegal but had given the department the privilege of holding the men to perfect a case against them. The department continued to press the case and a presidential pardon was secured. This too was ignored and the defendants called into court to surrender. The judge in the case decided against the department of labor.

"WHY AMERICA WANTS TO CONQUER EUROPE."

By EUGENE PAUL.

(Jay Lovestone: "Why America Wants to Conquer Europe," published in German by Carl Hoym Nachf.)

THIS pamphlet, made exceedingly comprehensive by its short paragraphs, deals with the most important and most fundamental of all present international questions,—the question of peaceful conquest of Europe by the United States of America.

The author points out that the aggressive policies of the Yankee, since the end of the war, have reached their climax in the Dawes plan. This is not an improvization, but the clearest expression of systematic maneuvers of the best heads of the ruling class of America; the results of the development of American imperialism itself, which proceeds on a very distinct road, and toward very distinct goal.

He pictures, in a general outline, the progress "from Pershing to Dawes" and illuminated, with lightning-like clearness, the Monroe Doctrine, the Hay Doctrine, and the Dawes plan as "three stages of the imperialist development of America," and also the circumstances which, on the one hand, forced the American capitalists, and on the other hand, made it possible for them to gradually make out of Europe and American colony. How the dollar has flooded Europe, aod has subjugated Europe, is described in a gripping manner.

Lovestone then investigates the effects of this peaceful war for conquest of American capital upon the position and development of the American working class, and proves that the Dawes plan, "this most monstrous enslavement plan which has ever been conceived" means not only the lowering of wages, unemployment, and thus increased misery for the German people, and the other peoples of Europe but also for the American proletariat. Politically the Dawes plan must result in driving together the social traitors of the labor aristocracy, and imperialism must thus forge the slave chains stronger and more formidably.

But this triumphant march of the American dollar must also be fatal to world peace. "The capitalist investments of the Yankee groups are the seed of a new war"—states Lovestone very correctly. Far from lessening or reconciling the imperialist antagonisms, they are sharpened and thus the coming of the new war is inevitable. Besides this, the class struggles in the Dawesified states of Europe are becoming more sharp, and gradually even the insistence of the capitalists in these countries against the receivership and against the unlimited dictatorship of America will develop.

Finally, the author draws a lightning picture of the relationship of American capital in Europe to France, to Germany, to England, and to Soviet Russia, and consequently to the conclusion that only the united revolutionary struggle of the proletariat of all countries will succeed in averting the dangers of American imperialism, advancing under the guise of the Dawes plan.

Jay Lovestone succeeds extremely well in making up the essentials of such a far reaching theme as the one dealt with, and in making it clear without long winded explanations.

It is too bad that this little work has, comparatively speaking, many typographical errors. Such, as for instance, on page 54, where the title reads "America and Russia" instead of "America and England" should not have been tolerated by any means.

FINK'S SHOT FAILS TO GET WRIT AGAINST A.C.W. STRIKERS; START FOURTH WEEK WITH BENEFITS

The striking members of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers' Union, employes of the International Tailoring Company, found when they arrived on the picket line yesterday, that a revolver shot had been fired thru a plate glass window of the company's building, thus fulfilling the prediction of the DAILY WORKER that provocative methods would be used as a last desperate effort to hurry thru an injunction against the pickets.

The Amalgamated members began the fourth week of their strike with mass picketing, and only a handful of professional scabs, amply protected by police, slipped inside the plant. The union paid strike benefits yesterday, $12 to the married strikers and $8 to single workers.

Despite the fact that the plate glass window on the Peoria St. side of the company's building was damaged by the revolver shot—which significantly enough was fired from the inside—the injunction procedings were again postponed, this time until this morning, when a new judge, Hugo Pam, will hear the injunction bill.

Foell Runs Away.

Judge Foell, faced with the insistent demand of the employers for an injunction to restrain the clothing workers from picketing, and the fact that the issuance of such an injunction is illegal, slipped out of the dilemma by announcing he is going on his vacation.

Judge Foell passed the buck to Judge Pam, who is a Zionist and is expected to favor the clothing bosses, who are also Zionists. Foell learned the vacation trick from Judge Sullivan, who last year sentenced scores of striking members of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union to large fines and jail sentences. Sullivan, in the face of hostile criticism of the entire labor movement, passed the cases on to Judge Foell and went out of town to recuperate.

Rules Bill Improper.

Before leaving, Judge Foell was forced to make a technical ruling for the strikers. William A. Cunnea, their lawyer, had objected to the bill for an injunction, on the ground that it was made by two separate corporations. Cunnea pointed out that it is against the law for two companies to apply for an injunction in the same bill. Foell upheld Cunnea, and the gangsters of the company immediately went on a hunt for new "violence" evidence to put in the new bills.

The J. L. Taylor company, the second corporation whose employes are on strike, is owned by the same

AS WE SEE IT.

THE Union Labor Journal of Bakersfield, California, devotes a long editorial in a recent issue to an attack on the radicals in the ranks of the oil workers. The fake sheet purports to be a representative organ of the oil workers. Like most of its type which peddles class collaboration in return for the crumbs which fall from the employers' table. In order to insure the steady dropping of those crumbs, the fake labor sheets carry on a continuous campaign of slander against the radicals, thus earning the contempt of honest workers as well as the shekels of the capitalists.

NINETY times out of a hundred, these self-styled nuggets of 100 per cent Americansm are stoolpigeons, employed by the capitalists ot prevent the militants from organizing the workers. In several cities thruout this country, it has been proven time and time again that these rats work themselves into positions of influence in order to sap the foundations from underneath the movement and rob it of its backbone—the radical element. Akron, Ohio and Pittsburgh, Pa. are two examples, but many more could be given.

THE slimy creature who edits the Union Labor Journal makes it quite clear that he is not out to organize the oil workers. He upbraids the capitalists of California for not arresting 3,000 I. W. W.'s in the oil district of Taft under the criminal syndicalism laws who were carrying on propaganda there for industrial unionism. He says: "It is a lamentable fact that following the strike, the wobblies not only entered the west side fields in great strength but openly held their meetings in a rented hall in Taft. They circulated their literature in Taft and with rubber stamps advertised their place and hour of meetings."

IF the brutal capitalists of California do not throw a few more thousand radicals into their already crowded jails, it will not be the fault of the editor of the Union Labor News. Those leeches, who suck the blood out of the workers, in return for serving as a ball and chain on their limbs, know that the radicals will ultimately drive them out of the labor movement, which they now pollute with their presence. In order to hold on to the flesh pots as long as possible they make an alliance with the capitalists and act as felon setters against honest and militant workers.

Fisher Body Plant 18 Strike Ties Up Works

DETROIT, Mich., July 20.—The strike at the Fisher Body Plant 18 is now in full blast. The departments that have come out since the strike began, have struck to a man. This morning every one with the exception of some of the cushion makers and the men in the wood mill who so far have not been affected by the wage cutting campaign of the bosses, were outside the shop and no work was being done, with the exception of the departments mentioned above.

The men who were hired early in the week to fill the places of the strikers have left the shop, as they, too, found it impossible to earn enough at the reduced rate. Committees have

'Better Americans' Are Getting Worse

By FRAPIESA.

(Worker Correspondent)

LOS ANGELES, July 20. — The week end for the Better America Federation was an exclamation point. From its Los Angeles headquarters the organization (employers' union) let out a shriek of despair, the most piercing sent forth in this year of slump.

Literature issued by the ku klux klan's holy office might lead some reds to come forth and take charge of the United States. The literary wails sound like unconditional surrender of the country to Communism.

Shrill Lament is Hollow.

But let none be decived. The hysterics of the leaders of the Better America Federation are purely theatrical. They are resorted to for the purpose of getting funds.

All that should interest reds in this is the fact that the B. A. F. needs money. That is good news for them.

Los Angeles during the past year had a building slump, followed by a business slump and now it has an earthquake, business and building slump combined. That hurts the B. A. F. What is worse, the chief of police refuses to frame-up I. W. W.'s. So, the wrought-up grief over the country going to the Reds.

NEW YORK, N. Y., July 18.—(By Mail)—At Madison Square in the shadow of the Metropolitan Tower, the second great mass demonstration of 25,000 cloak makers took place today. All along the East side of the park a mighty number of cloak makers listened to speakers from three separate platforms scattered at intervals truout the great crowd.

This demonstration was arranged with but one short day's notice, the handbills announcing it only being distributed on Friday. Following on the heels of the great gathering at the Yankee Stadium last week, it is a fitting answer to Sigman and the handful of dupes he has left. It finally

CONTEMPT WRIT AGAINST DARROW IS WITHDRAWN

Raulston Says He Acts "Even as Christ"

(Special to The Daily Worker)

DAYTON, Tenn., July 20.— Judge John Raulston, declaring he acted "even as Christ," forgave Clarence Darrow for his "insulting" remarks, and withdrew the citation for contempt of court, which he had earlier placed against the Chicago lawyer, ordering him to appear Tuesday morning under $5,000.00 bond.

Raulston Poses as Christ.

Darrow told the court that he regretted his words from the moment that he read them in the stenographic record.

The judge replied to Darrow by saying he would forgive even as Christ forgave his critics. The great crowd, jamming every inch of space, burst into applause, first at Darrow's remarks and then at the judge's reply. The incident was ended when Darrow and Raulston shook hands in open court.

Court House Cracks.

Because of the great crowd, Judge Raulston then adjourned his court to the court house yard, where a speaking stand and benches were erected at the opening of the trial for a series of open air prayer meetings. Before taking this extraordinary action, the court announced that the tremendous crowds in the courtroom had cracked the first floor ceiling, causing the building to become unsafe.

The contempt decision was based on a colloquoy held with the court by Darrow during Friday's session. In the exchange of remarks, Raulston said Darrow had treated him with "contempt and insult."

The court held Darrow in $5,000 bond for appearance at 9 o'clock Tuesday morning.

After the judge read the citation, Darrow arose solemnly thumbing his

DARROW CALLS BRYAN AS WITNESS IN APE TRIAL; BRYAN TO CALL DARROW

(Special to The Daily Worker.)

DAYTON, Tenn., July 20—The Scopes anti-evolution trial took a sensational turn this afternoon, when William Jennings Bryan, outstanding fundamentalist, was called as a witness for the defense of John Thomas Scopes.

This maneuver was taken by Clarence Darrow to prove that the bible was not believed literally even by the best known fundamentalist American.

Before he took the witness chair, Bryan obtained permission from the court to put Darrow and Dudley Field Malone on the stand, too.

The Commoner took the stand with a declaration that he was ready to defend the bible against every attack of science.

PROOF OF EVOLUTION IS WRITTEN INTO SCOPES TRIAL RECORDS BY SCIENTISTS; CASE NEARING END

DAYTON, Tenn., July 20.—In one of the most amazing legal documents of history, eight professors bared the heart of science here today in a tremendous effort to prove evolution, altho they tried to reconcile it with divine creation. The document was a series of affidavits written into the record of the Scopes trial.

The men of science, all voluntary defenders of John Thomas Scopes, produced one of the most comprehensive cases for evolution ever conceived. It carried a mass attack upon the fundamentalists of religion and their literal interpretation of the bible. The apostles of learning described the bible as a human, historical document passed down the ages by tradition as a text book for religion.

Placed In Records

The scientific data totalling about 65,000 words and based on the experiments of hundreds of experts, was placed in the trials record by affidavits because presiding Judge John T. Raulston refused to let the scientists testify in open court. As a result the defense will use the record of their revelations in appealing the anticipated conviction of Scopes to higher courts.

Every branch of science entered the arena for Scopes. There were Dr. Winterton C. Curtis, zoologist of the University of Missouri; Prof. Horatic H. Newman, zoologist, of the University of Chicago; Dr. Maynard M. Metcalf, research biologist of John Hopkins University; Wilbur A. Nelson, state geologist of Tennessee; Dr. Fay Cooper Cole, anthropologist, University of Chicago; Dr. Charles H. Judd, educational director, University of Chicago; Dr. Jacob G. Lipman, dean of agriculture, New Jersey state University and Dr. Kirtley F. Mather, professor of geology at Harvard University.

"First Law of Life"

The scientists defended evolution as the "first law of life," to eliminate it from the curriculums of schools, colleges and universities would bring chaos to education, they said, a di-

FEDERATION OF LABOR SCORES STRIKEBREAKING

Nockels Condones Tom Rickert's Scabbery

Despite an attempt on the part of Mr. Joseph Wise, cub reporter for a publicity service gotten out by William Green, to defend the scabbery of the United Garment Workers in the strike of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers against the International Tailoring company and the J. L. Tailor company, the delegates to last Sunday's meeting of the Chicago Federation of Labor went on record strongly protesting against the action of the U. G. W.

This action was taken in opposition to the command of William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, that the local body should keeps its hands off the situation.

During the discussion some interesting speeches were made but none excited more interest than the effort of Edward Nockels, secretary of the Federation. Nockels, made the astounding statement that he did not blame the United Garment Workers for their scabbery, that he did not blame Tom Rickert, president of the U. G. W. for what he had done, that he would do the same thing himself, that self preservation was the first law of nature and if he saw another organization coming in to capture something he built up, he would hold on to his organization at all costs.

Nockels talked rather incoherently, almost as stupidly as when he was slamming the Communists. It was quite evident that Nockels considers the unions the personal property of the officials and not organizations of the rank and file. Why he signed a report protesting against the scabbery of the U. M. G. was not clear, as he proved conclusively that he condoned the scabbery. Perhaps as Grape Nuts would say "there is a reason."

Took Slam at Green

On the other hand Fitzpatrick made quite a militant speech against the United Garment Workers and for the Amalgamated. Referring to that part of William Green's letter which branded the Amalgamated Clothing Workers as a seceding organization, Fitzpatrick said the president of the A. F. of L. was wasting his time. Altogether his speech on this particular question was good, and reminded one of the kind of speeches Fitzpatrick used to make before he vomited up his pro-

FISHER BODY STRIKE TIES UP THE WORKS

Workers in Detroit Are Solid Against Cuts

now been elected for every department and are effectively functioning together. The committees are receiving the enthusiastic and united support of the strikers.

Superintendent Barefoot told the men that he would never go after them again. "From now on you got to come to us" he told them. About 8:30 the next morning he was out again looking for the committee.

"The Fisher boys are coming down to speak to you fellows," he told the committee, "and you want to have good boys on the committee to see him or else you'll get nothing. Don't put any radicals or smart guys on the committee and don't try and get smart or sassy because you can't get away with it, with the Fisher boys."

Barefoot Hotfoots It In Reverse.

Barefoot repeated that over and over again. His anxiety lest the strikers injure their cause by any indiscreet statement to the "Fisher boys" left the men cold. It must be that these "Fisher boys" are not used to talking to workingmen who have the gumption to talk back and who have their own opinions on matters pertaining to their conditions and wages.

Barefoot proceeded to advise the committee how to organise themselves. He told them to get three trimmers, three sanders, three sprayers and three metal panelers. "How about the spot polishers?" the committee demanded. "Aw, to hell with the spot polishers," said Barefoot. "We can break in all the spot polishers we want in a couple of hours." If this was an attempt to break the solidarity of the strikers it fell flat.

A committee was promptly formed to go and wait upon the "Fisher boys" and they had a long wait. After being kept waiting for more than two hours they were finally admitted to the august presence of the "Fisher boys" and a few of the other company officials.

Try Soft Soaping Leaders.

The members of the committee and especially the leaders were patted on the back by the bosses and told what a fine level-headed lot they were, but when this failed of its obvious purpose the management cut the nonsense and got down to business.

They confronted the committee first with a lot of figures about average pay. According to the management the average pay of all men in the plant was 93 cents per hour and they even had the gall to tell the committee that the average for the higher priced men was $1.07. However, these figures were so obviously false and ridiculous that the committee had no difficulty in refuting them. It was clearly a case of figures don't lie, but liars will figure.

"Nothing Doing."

The committee then proceeded to lay the demands of the men before the officials and after a lot of silly arguments, as well as continuous interruptions from the company officials whenever the committee tried to argue their case, they were finally told "that the men could come back and try it all over again at the reduced wage rates." In short, there was nothing doing.

While the committee was in conference, the men were out on a sandlot being addressed by a number of speakers from the Auto Workers' Union, among whom was William Logan, general president of the union. When the speakers got thru the committee returned and reported that there was nothing doing except at the conditions stated above and recommended that the strike be continued until the demands were granted and the wage cuts removed. The strikers voted unanimously for this recommendation with great enthusiasm.

War to the Knife.

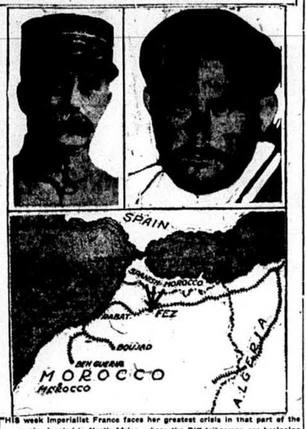
The strike is now assuming broader proportions. It is no longer a departmental strike and the men who are determined that all the rest including the cushion makers and mill hands come out also and make the strike 100 per cent at plant 18. The committee is on the job and will see to it that the men at the other Fisher plants will refuse to do any work from plant 18.

Painters of Frisco Like Communist Talk

By NORMAN BURSLEV.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., July 20.—Tom Lewis, district organiser of the Workers Party, spoke recently before Painters' Union, Local No. 19, on "Organization." Comrade Lewis pointed out the need for a more cohesive organization and the necessity for a political party to represent their interests. The men were enthused by his talk. After he finished, they said: "He didn't speak long enough. We've got to have that fellow again."

Imperialist France Trying to Stave Off Disaster in Africa



THIS week Imperialist France faces her greatest crisis in that part of the empire located in North Africa, where the Riff tribesmen are besieging the ancient city of Fez. This is evidenced by the rushing of the master killer, Marshal Petain (left), who was on the French side of the slaughter at Verdun, to Morocco by plane. The regiments most loyal to French capitalism, some of them being withdrawn from the Ruhr, are being rushed to the battle zone. The map indicates the location of Fez. The arrow shows how the natives are directing their attack against the city. Abd-el-Krim, leader of the Riffs, is seen at right.

saster to the nation and human progress to a standstill. One denounced teachers who omitted it as committing criminal malpractice. Another charged the biblical literatists were "insulting god." All were agreed that a dozen educational courses could not be taught without it.

Life Changes Thru Time

Back in the dim dark ages of the past, long before the first dawn of civilization they said, a pre-historic being dwelled, whose offspring evolved thru millions of years into men, animals, birds and fish. They knew not the secret of life; they only knew how life had changed thru time. Man, monkey, whale and reptile, they asserted, had a common ancestor.

Give Lie To Bible

In their defense of evolution, the men of science laughed at the claim of the bible literalists that the world began on Oct. 23, 4004 B. C. on the contrary they said, the world was formed 1,000,000,000 years ago at least, with life upon the earth's surface from 50,000,000 to 500,000,000 years old. The earth once was molten, they added, and before that probably gaseous.

The sun above us, they continued, once had an earlier system of planets, destroyed millions of years ago by an upheaval amid the stars, but later to develop the existing planetary system.

To prove the earth's age, the scientists pointed to potash deposits in Europe as 20,000,000 years old; to the upheaval of the Rocky Mountains as 20,000,000 years ago; to Green Sand formation in New Jersey as 10,000,000 years old and to phosphate deposits in Tennessee at 50,000,000 years old. It took a million years, they said, for water to corrode the Grand Canyon of the Colorado and the same time for the mouth of the Mississippi river to move south from Cairo, Ill., to New Orleans.

Earth Millions of Years

Why, they added, it took four thousand years merely for the great continental glacier to melt after it once covered new England from Hartford, Conn., to St. Johnsburg, Vermont.

The present human race, said science, instead of being born in 4004 B. C., has lived on the earth for 25,000 years. Before that, extinct tribes of men have been tracked back 100,000 years by fossils. and before that the ancestor of man, ape, whale and python.

Man Descended From Animals

The man of today, they said, is a walking museum of antiquities, which prove his prehistoric relationships. He has 180 vetigial (obsolete) structures in his body, all organisms now used by animals, birds or fish. Man now has an atrophied tail while the human embryo has a free tail before birth.

Blood tests show that man's blood today is closely akin to that of the ape, they added, while some whales have atrophied vestigial limb bones in the pelvin region, which indicate this mammoth fish once walked. And even the snake, the Python, has small but clearly defined hind limbs, hidden beneath its skin. So the kinship shows today.

Once the scientists said man was the head of the genological tree but now they give this distinction to the whale as showing the greatest organic development while mumans roots half way down.

It was Curtis, zoologist at Missouri University, who said, "Science and common sense alike inquire regarding the nature and sources of the special creation, as found in Genesis. Science faces the matter squarely, desiring only the right to investigate and draw unprejudiced conclusions. The result of such investigations are not in doubt. It appears that the races about the Eastern Mediterranean, like other primitive peoples, had their traditions of the origin of the world.

"The story in Genesis apparently descended to the early Hebrews and to their neighbors in Mesopotamia from a source far antedating the appearance of the Jews as a people and their sacred writings. Archeology and ethnology most reasonably indicate that in its origin this Hebrew-Babylonian tradition may be compared with the stories of many other primitive peoples.

"We take the story in Genesis seriously as an account of pre-historical facts. It has been woven into the thot of Western culture for almost two thousand years and has intrinsic literary qualities.

"But the past history of events, whether of human or animal origins, is subject matter for scientific inquiry and the answer of science is evolution. It is not that men came from monkeys, but that, men, monkeys and apes all came from a common mammalian ancestry millions of years in the past."

As for man's similarity to the animal kingdom, Curtis said: "The flipper of a whale, the wing of a bird, the forefoot of a horse and the arm of a man, all show the same plan of structure. The biological explanation of this anatomical resemblance is that the present vertebrates (fishes, reptiles, birds and mammals) have all descended from a primite race. All vertebrates are now alike because they have never lost the underlying plan of structure inherited from their common ancestor."

Delving into the antiquity of the world and man, and the latter's relation to the apes, Professor Newman, one of the nation's greatest zoologists, said: "The earliest fossil evidence of the existence of our own species date back to about 25,000 years ago. At that time there lived a remarkable race, known to us as cromagnons, a race said to be the most perfect physically of which we have any knowledge. Five essentially complete skeletons form the basis of the type description.

This tall, strong, obviously intelligent, and artistic race, was different in several important particulars from any modern race. A detailed description of his characteristics would take us too far afield. Our chief interest in this race is that it serves to emphasize the antiquity of our own species.

"Anatomically, the genus homo bears a striking resemblance to the anthropoid apes. Bone for bone, muscle for muscle, nerve for nerve and in many special details, man and the anthropoid apes are similar.

RIFFIANS TAKE 3 BLOCKHOUSES FROM INVADERS

French Morale Low as Natives Gain Ground

PARIS, France, July 20—The Riffian forces are driving a wedge between the Spanish and French forces facing them in Morocco. Abd-el-Krim's men have captured the French fortified posts of Rihana, Bab Hoferne and Oued Hamrive, north of Teroual. They are driving between the French and Spanish which have contact along the Loukos river.

The first of the Moroccan troops withdrawn from the Rhineland have arrived at the French front. Marshal Petain is endeavoring to restore the waning morale of the French invaders, whose strength has been sapped by the terrific mid-summer African heat and the Riffian successes.

The cabinet is meeting here almost constantly on the Moroccan invasion. Premier Painleve announced that the French imperialists have given Abd-el-Krim the choice of either accepting the French "peace" terms, which include a Spanish protectorate for the Riff, or of a war to a finish. The Riffians have already stated they will not accept such a degrading peace.

Americans and French Imperialism.

The sultan of Morocco accepted the offer of a dozen American soldiers of fortune to organize a new LaFayette escadrille to fight against the Riffian natives.

Coy. Charles Sweeney said the volunteers will have the same rank they held in the American and French armies during the world war.

"Present plans are for seven of us to fly to Rabat, via Toulouse, next Friday," said Sweeney, "and at least six more will follow by the first boat leaving Marseilles."

MINNEAPOLIS CENTRAL BODY AGAIN STIRRED

Roseland Denied Seat by Red Baiters

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., July 20.—When Louis Roseland presented his credentials as a duly elected delegate from the Carpenters' local, to the Central Labor Union last meeting, he was denied a seat on objections from Leslie Sinton of the cooks and original red baiter of the local labor movement.

Sinton was assisted by Franklin Hynes of the Typos, who professed being a "socialist" for many years, and who was even arrested during the Palmer raids and spent one whole night in jail.

Since that episode, however, he has joined the ranks of the red baiters.

Arthur Axsen of the Plumbers, made the third objection, which three objections, under the Paul J. Smith constitution, cause the Roseland delegatships to be referred to an "investigation committee." It is to report back on Roseland next Wednesday.

The objections to Roseland were based on the ground that he is a Communist.

Had Roseland belonged to the ku klux klan, the republican party, or, in fact, any capitalist organization, the objectors would have gladly seated him.

Nevertheless, it is a highly significant fact, that the big proletarian unions of this city, contain a rank and file that wants to be represented by left wingers. This rank and file cannot be denied.

Explosion Laid to Carelessness by Report of Fire Commissioner

An ordinance imposing stricter regulations upon craft which tie up to the banks of the Chicago River inside the city limits is necessary to safeguard the lives of the people of Chicago and to prevent a repetition of the explosion of 90,000 gallons of gasoline aboard a barge. This was the recommendation made by Fire Commissioner Joseph Connery.

The peril in Sunday's explosion he said was not merely from the spectacular fire itself. The greater danger was from the huge stores of other explosives on either shore—great tanks of naphtha for soap manufacture, tanks containing millions of cubic feet of illuminating gas and an underground reservoir of oil.

Fear the Government and Lose Or War Against the Government and Win

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

TODAY, every avenue of capitalist propaganda is busily engaged in telling the American working class that, "President Coolidge is determined to prevent a coal strike."

That is a challenge, not only to the coal miners, but to the whole American working class. Especially is it a threat to the organized workers.

Coolidge, "the strikebreaker president," will not prevent the threatened coal strike, by insisting that the very meager demands of the coal diggers be granted. He is not the workers' president.

It is said that when the deadlock develops in the negotiations, then Coolidge will summon both sides to White Court, at Swampscott, Mass., and listen to the contending arguments. Coolidge is a good listener, but with one ear only. "Silent Cal" will listen well with the ear into which the mine owners pour their story. The ear turned to the appeal of the mine workers' representatives will be stone deaf. "Silent Cal" will dance to the tune ordered by the coal profiteers.

• • • •

Thus the coal miners are again being given a lesson in the nature of the organized capitalist power they are compelled the fight.

Coolidge heads the republican regime at Washington, servant of the American money power, that flew the American flag from the mine tipples during the last coal strike, sounded the bugle of the army, and with the usual scowl upon its military face, expected the workers in great fear to crawl back to their jobs.

But the coal diggers refused to crawl. They stood erect. They knew that bayonets could not dig the coal that they refused to bring to the surface under the wages, hours and conditions the mine owners demanded, and which they rejected.

But the officials of the coal miners crawled. President John L. Lewis openly declared he "could not fight the government," Wall Street's government, just as he declared during the Nova Scotia, Canada, strike that he could not fight the government, the king's government of the British capitalists.

It is well for the coal miners to remember that this is the Lewis who was heralded as a possible candidate for vice-president on the Coolidge ticket selected at last year's republican convention, when the democrats in New York were dangling Berry, the president of the pressmen's union who broke the strike of his own organization in New York City, before the eyes of labor for second place on their donkey ticket. But these sops were withdrawn. Later Lewis was mentioned for the place of secretary of labor, but neither has this materialized.

This same Lewis is the man who will go to Swampscott to speak for the coal miners. But he will be thinking more of some official plum that Coolidge may hand him than he will be thinking of the interests of the coal miners. Lewis, the crawler, is part of the same capitalist regime that made Coolidge president, and may lift him to a place in Wall Street's sun.

• • • •

Anything that the coal miner's win will come to them because of their class power, and in spite of the betrayal of that power by such officials as Lewis, Berry and other agents of the profiteers within their ranks.

The coal miners will win, not because they take the position that, "We cannot fight the government," but because they rally to the fight against the government, the agent of the mine owners.

Coolidge will try to win for the coal barons by making war upon the miners' union with the full strength of the state militia, the regular army, the courts and other weapons of the capitalist dictatorship. The militancy of the miners' assault against this dictatorship today determines the nature of their immediate victories, until they can develop sufficient class power to establish their Proletarian Dictatorship to end capitalist rule forever.

Hyman Calls for Action Against Betrayal

establishes the fact in an incontrovertible manner that the left wingers are the real leaders of the cloak makers; that they can at a moments notice call out the masses in the streets and they come, laughing and enthusiastic.

Fight Governor's Commission

The keynote that struck home thruout the vast crowd was: We will fight the decision of the governors commission! Prepare for action! These slogans uttered by Louis Hyman and repeated by the other speakers evoked prolonged and wild applause. Listening to the talk of the workers one could easily gather that they are in a fighting mood.

They are not alone anxious to repudiate Sigman and his gang but, they also want to repudiate the decision of the governor's commission which takes the bread out of the mouths of their children.

The workers have been out of work and half starved for months. The past seasons have been bad. Now on the eve of a new season they are in an ugly mood. Sigman and his gang are fool politicians, if one is to judge by the conversation of the workers in the streets.

Refuse to Recognize Sigman Activities

The whole drift of the talk is: We refuse to any longer recognize the authority stolen by Sigman, Perlstein and Feinberg. Let them leave our union we will have nothing further to do with them.

Wave after wave of applause from the sea of workers greeted the speeches of the leaders of the joint committe of action. Some of the speakers are: Sasha Zimmerman, Louis Hyman, Joseph Boruchowitz, Rose Wortis, Mershe Rubin, etc.

All the speakers flailed the Sigman crowd for its many crimes against the workers and denounced the decision of the governor's commission. Boruchowitz, quoted from a sheaf of letters being sent out in envelopes containing the return address of the joint board and obviously addressed on the machine at the international office.

Machine Cooks Up Letters

These letters are a bitter attack upon the Communists; the Yankee Stadium meeting and the leadership of the left wing generally. They are signed by an alleged group of Local 2.

Another "letter" he quoted was one of many sent to a number of cloak makers summoning them to a meeting at the Rand School, at which preparations would be made for the Beethoven Hall meeting, called by the joint board to discuss and prepare for the acceptance of the decision of the governor's commission.

Hyman Point to New Betrayal by Sigman

The speech of Louis Hyman detailed the betrayal of workers by the joint board and the Sigman gang. Hyman was loudly applauded when he pointed out the stupid inconsistency of the Sigman gang and the joint board, when they at first declared that they would send out in all languages the decision of the governr's commission for referendum, without any recommendation.

Whereas, now, they are telling the workers that the decision must be accepted.

The left wing leadership on the contrary has fought consistently against even in the first place submitting the workers grievances to the governor's commission.

Prepare for Action

Hyman declared in closing: "We are preparing for action. You should know that this struggle that is going on here is a fight to the life or death. You Cloakmakers must not allow a band of parasites to bind you to such decisions. We are going to take action as soon as the season starts."

UNITY OF MINE WORKERS ASKED OF U. S. MINERS

Must Not Scab Upon British Strikers

By ALEX REID.
(Secretary Progressive Miners' Committee)

At no stage in history of the labor movement thruout the world has international trade union unity been more necessary than at the present time. From all over the world come reports that the labor unions are being attacked, and in many places destroyed by intense desperate onslaughts of national and international capitalists.

British Miners Fight.

The miners of England, Scotland and Wales are standing with their back to the wall in what appears to be the most desperate struggle in their history. The first skirmish has taken place in Wales between the police and the strikers, with the strikers being successful to the extent of pulling out every man on the job, that was in the care of the uniformed thugs.

Trouble is reported also from the Douglas colliery in Lanarkshire, Scotland, with the Scotchmen standing ready and determined to protect themselves and their working conditions and fight for an increase in their wages.

Introduce Scab Coal.

The impending general strike in Britain has caused consternation in the capitalist ranks and steps are being taken to keep the industries in England running with power supplied by the introduction of American and German coal. The American union miners will again be asked to dig coal, to be shipped by the railroad union men and transport workers to defeat their starving brothers across the sea and the American miners and railroad workers must realise that the impending fight in Britain is their fight, just as much as it is the fight of the toilers across the pond, and must notify the operators that the day has gone by that they can be used to scab against their brothers in Britain or anywhere else.

Triple Alliance.

The miners, with the transport workers and railroad men are meeting ot determine upon a concerted plan of action to govern their relations, during the strike and prevent a similar betrayal to that which took place on memorable "Black Friday," by Thomas of the railroaders' union.

This meeting is arranged by A. J. Cook, the militant secretary of the British miners, with the support of the left wing of the British workers, in spite of the opposition of the English labor bureaucracy. The fact that the left wing is successful in bringing about this meeting proves that the minority power in the British unions has reached a stage where it cannot any longer be ignored, and is practically the directing force in the labor movement in the isle across the sea.

Expect No Trouble.

The situation of our brothers in Germany, where they have been reduced to the verge of slavery under the Dawes plan, is being duplicated in England, as it is on the American continent, (West Virginia, Alberta and Nova Scotia), and other places in the mining regions of this country where the workers are in starvation and despair.

The capitalists feel the workers are so far reduced that they will be unable to resist the offer to work (even if it is to produce coal to be used against the miners in Britain) and no trouble is expectde from the slaves in America by the capitalists.

No Bourgeois Allianse.

We must meet this intense international offensive of the capitalist class with an organization of the workers on a policy based on the class struggle, and freedom from all alliances with the bourgeoisie.

International trade union unity is of the utmost importance and has arisen from the dire need of the working class to protect themselves against the encroachment of international capitalism, and prepare themselves to take over the industries of the world.

Pledge Support.

The progressive miners thruout America stand ready to aid in every way at their command their brother miners in Britain and pledge ourselves to that end. Sympathetic strikes are contemplated in Germany, Belgium, France and in America and Canada.

"Nationalization of the coal mines with workers' control," is the slogan of the miners thruout the world and the Britsih miners are leading the fight.

Bankrupt Commits Suicide

Emil W. Wagner, head of the E. W. Wagner and Co., grain, bond and stock commission firm which failed in 1921 with $10,000,000 involved, crashed to his death from a fifteenth floor window of the Westminister building in the loop today. Death was instantaneous. Evidence indicated Wagner, who was about 61, had committed suicide.

SIGMAN GANG EXPULSIONS ROUSE HOSTILITY IN TWO MORE LOCALS; ACCUSE FEINBERG OF SCABBING

NEW YORK CITY, July 20.—With 85 votes against 12, the meeting of Local 38, I. L. G. W. U., adopted a resolution to condemn the pogrom leaders of the Sigman machine for their acts against the cloak and dress makers. The resolution demands the immediate reinstatement of Locals 2, 9 and 22, and that the pogrom should immediately be stopped.

The resloution had been previously adopted in the executive committee by a vote of 13 against 3, and then recommended to the local union meeting at yesterday's gathering, and was there adopted by the vote above stated.

Pressers Are Congratulated.

As reported a few days ago, the section meetings of pressers in Bronx, rejected the actions of the joint board. It now seems that two sections of the pressers held on the same evening acted in the same manner.

This fact has called forth congratulations from the cloak operators and finishers. It has also called forth congratulations from all honest workers from the other trades. And the progressive membership of Local 35 has issued a special leaflet congratulating their brothers which reads as follows:

Brother Pressers of Local 35.

"Courageously have our members acted at the last section meeting. The crown of the czar Breslau is in danger. Mr. Breslau, feeling the anger of protest of our members, who demanded his resignation, yelled that he is ready to resign.

"We challenge him. Let him call a general membership meeting for that purpose. We have no more patience with the gangsterism in our local which is a shame upon us.

"Brothers, we want to have a union for the members, and not for this everfed gangsters who attack our sisters and brothers on the picket line.

"Do not participate in their fake referendum. At first they excluded the brave leaders of the three powerful locals, and now the same Feinberg, Breslau & Co. is approving the recommendation of the governors and bankers' commission, which reduces to nothing all our justified demands.

"Without our knowledge these pogrom leaders have delivered our fate into the hands of our enemies. Now they desire that we should approve of their treachery.

"Brother pressers: We must answer to this fake call of the pogrom leaders who have the audacity to speak in our name. No, a thousand times, no! We demand the resignation of the Sigman, Feinberg, Breslau machine.

"A union for all of us, for the great membership, and not for the Feinbergs who betray us. The pogrom leaders of the International and the joint board have put to shame our strong powerful organization of the cloak and dressmakers.

"'Resign!' must be our answer.

"They have robbed and betrayed us enough.

"None of us should answer this fake call for referendum.

"Let us all be united in the shops.

"Unity, unity, with all our strength. We must seek to eliminate these pogrom leaders with their strong-arm work.

"We must make a decent living in our trade, won thru struggle of our members.

"To the struggle, against the gang of Breslau & Co.

Group of Progressive Pressers."

In addition, a group of Progressive Cutters in Local 10, of the I. L. G. W. have issued a circular calling on the membership of much the same nature as the Pressers of Local 35, attacking the reactionary Lubinsky gang at the head of Local 10, which the Progressive declare "uses thousands of our hard-earned dollars to pay gangsters to beat and cripple the girls of Local 22, on the picket line!"

The circular asserts that the international joint board do not represent the union and have sold the workers out to the banker controlled governor's commission. "Dubinsky's gangsters help the gang of the joint board," the progressives state. "You must help your brothers and sisters of the three great Locals—Sigman, Perlstein and Feinberg must resign!"

In the Jewish Daily Freiheit, a leading article is given exposing Feinberg as a scab in the strike of 1916. It says:

Feinberg's Scabbing in 1916.

"Israel Feinberg, the manager of the joint board machine of the International Ladies' Garment Workers, and at present one of the chiefs leading the pogrom against the cloak and dressmakers, says that he wishes to save the union from the Communist danger, and says that the lefts are scabs, etc.

"We do not desire to discuss Communism with Feinberg. That would be like discussing mysticism with a peasant.

"But let Feinberg attempt to disprove the following fact:

"At the time of the cloakmaker's general strike in 1916, Feinberg worked for the Royal Coat Co. on 25th street. The company manufactured cloaks and raincoats, and at that time employed a great number of workers.

"When the strike of the cloakmakers was called, this firm had received a great order for long coats of a checked goods. But the boss of the firm was afraid to be 'caught'. Perhaps the committees of the union would come and stop the work.

"Then Feinberg advised the boss that in view of the fact that it was permitted to work on raincoats and other waterproof garments, the boss should stamp his checked goods on the left side with the stamp "cravenette," and if committees of the union will come, to say that this is waterproof garments and it will be 'kosher.'

"The firm accepted Feinberg's advice and for quite a few weeks they were busy at cloaks at a time when the cloakmakers were on strike, at a time when fifty thousand families carried on a bitter struggle for better working conditions.

"We are prepared to establish these facts with witnesses who at that time worked with Feinberg.

"Was Feinberg's scabbing in 1916 also in favor of the union? We challenge him to answer."

ECLIPSE PLANT WORKERS FIGHT OVER WAGE CUT

Eclipse May Leave Boss in the Dark

By MURPHY

(Worker Correspondent)

PITTSBURGH Pa.—The victory won by the workers in the Eclipse Plant of the United Laundry company is aiding the propaganda for organization of shop committees. Three weeks ago these workers pulled off a strike on the job and forced the bosses to postpone their contemplated 10 per cent reduction in wages for a couple of weeks.

During this period the boss used all possible means of propaganda to get the workers to break ranks by telling them how they could easily avert the cut. Some of them fell for this bunk. Enough delunded workers fell for it to make possible for the boss to organize a spy system. After this had been accomplished he was ready for battle.

On June 22nd the boss hired a few hands and cut wages. Great pains were taken to place these new hands directly besides the most intelligent workers in an effort to check those who were feared the most.

Even tho the bosses have their spies on the job the militant elements of the shop are determined to start a shop committee. There are some among them that are manifesting their willingness to sacrifice in order to get their shop committee on foot. They have already begun a series of discussions of the proper form of organization. Soon actual work will be started which in time will develop into a real shop committee.

In my next article I will deal with ways and methods these unorganized workers are using to reach their object despite the dangers of the spy system.

DISTRICT 5 IS PROGRESSIVE MINERS' PROOF

Jacksonville Pact Is Now Proven Fake

By W. F. B.

Worker Correspondent

PITTSBURGH, Pa.—The thousands of unemployed miners, who at one time perhaps were deluded into believing the official lauding of the "Jacksonville Agreement" as a "great achievement" which would stabilize the mining industry, are now learning a bitter lesson.

How do they look upon the activities and efforts of the officials, which are not following the track of formulating fighting policies and prepairing for action, but rather weakening the union by expelling its best elements. When their children cry out for bread they know it is a serious situation demanding their attention.

Busy Expelling Members

Here, in District 5, our officials have done nothing, and are so absorbed in the policy of expelling the progressives that they fail to hear the cry for bread that is prevalent in almost every section. Also in their policy of expulsion, their time is spent in going around, circulating petty personal castigation, and consequently side tracking the men away from the progressive program.

The delegates to the last District 5 convention will recall, how Green, Murray et al lauded the "Jacksonville agreement" as a "great achievement" and how it was going to stabilize the mining industry.

Progressives Were Right

The progressive miners at that time critized the agreement and pointed out the effects of same, but the prosperous conditions at that time suited these officials and drunk with power, they were successful in getting a resolutions passed, that would expel every miner who attends meetings, other than officially sanctioned. However the march of economic forces has proven that the progressives were correct, when they advocated a shorter working day.

We can see that we are faced with one of the most serious crisis that has ever confronted the United Mine Workers. Altho it is quite apparent that the present deplorable conditions, has been made possible by the policy which the officials pursued. So we are now confronted with the question, how are we going to get out of it?

Organize!

To get out of this deplorable conditions we must organize our progressive committees. We must energetically give all the resources at our disposal to get the DAILY WORKER circulating amongst the miners, which will chase away the smoke screen of officialdom, from before the eyes of the miners and in giving all the energy we possess to support the progressive miners program we will ultimately destroy for all time the flesh pots where the vultures continually hover around.

American Consul in Mexico Unpopular

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 20.—The American vice consul at Aguascallentes, Mexico, Harold G. Bretherton, has been shot, it is claimed at the state department here. The American government has demanded an investigation. The assailant is unknown. The consul was not seriously hurt.

PHOTOGRAPHS NOW BEAR THE UNION LABEL

Photographic Worker's Union in the Ring

NEW YORK, July 20.—(FP)—Trades unionists should look for the union label on all photographs as well as on photo-engravings from now on, the Photographic Workers' Union of America announces.

A big campaign is being waged, Louis A. Baum, business representative of the new federal local 17830 of the American Federation of Labor, declares, with great success. Many photographic studious are responding to the workers' demand for use of the union label and union sign in the shop.

Photoengravers are being urged by chapel chairman to get all photographers working in photo-engraving plants into the photographic workers' union. Actors Equity Association is being listed in the organization drive of the photographic workers to encourage all theatrical performers to insist upon union label photographs. Actors and actresses are required to have many professional portraits and their aid is especially solicited by the photographic workers' union.

Photographic reproductions of advertisements in newspapers for photographic workers at $10, $15 and $20 a week are being circulated by the photographic workers union among other labor organizations to prove the need for assisting the union in every way.

"Help Us Abolish Sweatshop Photography and Child Labor" is the slogan of the union at present. Organization work among the young boys and girls who do summer snapshot finishing is being pushed during the busy season.

'B. & O.' BILL JOHNSTON RAVES AT OPPOSITION

Hints Vengeance on J. F. Anderson

(By Federated Press.)

WASHINGTON, July 20.—Characterizing every charge and allegation in the circular issued by J. F. Anderson as a "lie," William H. Johnston, president of the International Association of Machinists said today that he and General Secretary-Treasurer E. C. Davison would answer them in a circular to the membership of the organization. Both Johnston and Davison declared that Anderson would be "dealt with" under the constitution.

"It is against our policy and contrary to the constitution to conduct an organization controversy in the public press, said Mr. Johnston. "We shall not do so. In the meantime, we shall have nothing to say beyond what I have just said. Mr. Anderson will be dealt with under the constitution."

Other officials of the organization here followed the lead of President Johnston and refused to comment upon the circular. All, however, appeared to be angry over its issuance. No one was willing to say what action would be taken against Anderson, but it was strongly intimated that he would be severely disciplined.

Getting Over His Scare

GREEN REFUSES REAL AID TO RELEASE SACCO AND VANZETTI; DODGES GENERAL STRIKE ISSUE

BOSTON, Mass., July 20.—Empty promises and a refusal to take any form of action that will even stir the membership of organized labor into militant activity, such as a general strike, to force the release of the frame-up victims, Sacco and Vanzetti, whose legal murder in an electric chair may result from denial of a new trial, is the keynote of a letter sent the Sacco-Vanzetti Defense committee by William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor.

Two conventions of the A. F. of L. and many state federations and international unions have gone on record by resolution for a new trial and protested the cases as the frame ups they are. The last big union convention to add its protest to the list was the recent Tri-District convention of anthracite miners.

State Federation Official Proves Case Framed.

A vice-president of the Massachusetts state federation of labor, John Van Vaerenwyck, himself interviewed one of the supposed eye-witnesses who was the chief reliance of the prosecution, and obtained from her a confession that she had lied when she testified at the trial that she had seen Sacco at the murder scene, and that she had so testified falsely under pressure from the district attorney who had, like a coward and poltroon, threatened to expose some irregular conduct of her life in years past.

This compulsory perjury by blackmail is told of in the woman's affidavit obtained by Van Vaerenwyck, and the head of the American Federation of Labor not only knows that the case is a frame up, but knows also that if the workers organized in the A. F. of L. would demonstrate all over the country in a militant fashion, and prepare for a general strike if Sacco and Vanzetti are finally ordered into the death chamber—the two victims would soon be released and restored to their families.

Empty Words—No Action.

But in place of such effective activity, Green prefers to waste time and the lives of two men, presenting resolutions (and even these were pushed thru by Communist influence) to governors and presidents and soft pedalling down those "avenues which appeal to him" and other fakers. Instead of militant action, Green offers the following fine words:

"The American Federation of Labor has given its assistance to the Sacco-Vanzetti Defense Committee, and as directed by the last annual convention of the American Federation of Labor I submitted to the president of the United States and to the governor of Massachusetts the resolution, number 42, of the El Paso convention of the A. F. of L., together with the action of the convention thereon, and bespoke their earnest consideration.

"Our Own Way" To Do Nothing.

"Whatever the officers of the A. F. of L. may be able to do further in this matter you can rest assured will be done, but we must work in our own way and thru the avenues which appeal to us as being the most effective way to secure the results desired."

MOBILE POLICE NAB 5 MEMBERS OF I. W. W. FOR ORGANIZING WORKERS

NEW ORLEANS, July 20.— The activity of the marine transport section of the I. W. W. among the marine workers of the gulf coast has called forth the usual repression. A raid on the I. W. W. hall in Mobile netted the police five members of the organization, several signs and a lot of books and literature. The arrested unionists, so far as can be learned, are held merely for being members of the I. W. W.

FAKER FAGAN AND HIS CREW FIGHT AGAINST MINERS

Line Up with Bosses in Pennsylvania

By IRWIN

(Worker Correspondent)

PITTSBURGH, Pa.—For more than two months miners at Cuddy, Pa. at the National Mine No. 2 have been employed fixing the shafts for $4.00 a day despite the fact that the miners scale calls for $6.60 for outside labor. The president of the Local at this mine, Walcott, who is also a district organizer knew what the scale called for but made no attempt to have conditions changed.

A couple of weeks ago one progressive miner was laid off when put to work at this shaft because he refused to work below the scale and stated that working for the price offered by the operators would be equal to scabbing on the union. He was off for about a week when the company was compelled to take him back for regular wages. He received no compensation for the time he was off and when returning the pit boss told him "that ought to be a good lesson for you."

The National Coal company owns four mines located closely together National No. 1, 2, 3 and 4. On April 1st the locals for the first three mentioned mines which are completely under the thumb of District President Fagan, celebrated the establishment of the eight hour day jointly with the corporation. Superintendents and pit bosses were on the committee with Walcott, the lieutenant of Pat Fagan. District officers spoke at this celebration threatening to expell all of the left wingers from the union before a month was over.

The miners from National No. 4 belonging to Local 280 at New Eagle, Pa., refused to participate in any such celebration jointly with the bosses. This local was formerly also under the control of the district officials but at their last election the militants took complete leadership electing the left wing slate into office and while miners of the other locals in return for the hobnobbing of their officers with the coal operators are "enjoying" the privilege of working below the established scale the members of 280 with its left wing administration are maintaining full union conditions.

Getting a DAILY WORKER sub or two will make a better Communist of you.

LOCAL 22 HOLDS THE FORT WITH REBEL COURAGE

Rank and File Stand Guard Day and Night

(By a Picket at Local 22.)

NEW YORK CITY.—It is two a. m. The night watch is on duty. The strains of a guitar which some member has brought with her, rise and fall plaintively upon the still night air. Suddenly the guitar will strike up a popular tune like Dubinishka, The Volga Boat Song, or the International. Immediately will be heard a chorus of voices joining in with zest and enthusiasm.

Then the song will die down. Tired faces will again become strained; weary forms cease to relax and become rigid and alert, as the night watch goes on. And thus the night is spent—the long, weary hours of the night, interspersed with song, with stories and jokes, waiting and hoping for the first faint streaks of dawn to come, when we will be relieved by those who have spent the night at home, and are ready to take up the watch in the early hours of the morning and stand guard all through the long, long day.

The Spirit of a Rebel.

Relieved—to go home and rest?

No, to get out on the picket line—to march back and forth the interminable day, trying to convince hungry and needy workers, that they must not scab on their fellow workmen. For weeks now, with untiring effort, with indomitable courage, the men and women in the needle trades have carried on the struggle.

What are we fighting for?

Simply to maintain the rank and file control of our locals, for which we have fought so bitterly for many years past, to keep at bay the Feinbergs, the Sigmans and the Persteins, who have sought to throttle us and deprive us of power, ever since we have become victorious in the struggle against class collaboration and corrupt officialdom, which dominates the joint board of the International Ladies' Garment Workers.

Fellow workers, if you believe in rank and file control of industry; if you are progressive working men and working women, opposed to the dirty tactics of the machine in power, if you have but an ounce of revolutionary fighting blood in your veins, we appeal to you! Help us in our struggle.

We are sacrificing our time and our money and our energy: our days' wages, and our nights' sleep: we are giving all that it is humanly possible for us to give to win this fight.

We need your help—moral and financial support—to win. Will you stand aside, or will you rise to the occasion and make the sacrifice?

Our Fight is Your Fight.

Remember, our fight is your fight, for, once the corrupt officialdom of our union succeeds in ousting the executive board elected by the rank and file simply because they act contrary to the machine, this tactic will spread thruout all the unions in the United States; no radical, no progressive in any union will be immune from persecution and expulsion.

We must pull together in this fight. Our victory is your victory; and likewise our defeat will be your defeat. Let solidarity be your watchword. On to victory, fellow workers.

DEATH LIST OF MINERS IS DUE TO PROFIT HOGS

2,000 Killed Yearly by Companies' Greed

By ALEX REID.

(Secy. Progressive Miners' Committee.)

The slaughter of the coal miners goes on unabated in the coal mines of the country, and another increase over May of last year in fatal accidents is recorded in the latest government reports. One hundred and eighty-one miners gave up their lives to the capitalist system for the month of May. Approximately 2,000 miners are killed yearly in the mining industry, from various causes, and most of those causes are preventable by the expenditure of a few dollars by the coal companies.

It is a well known fact that 75 per cent of the mine accidents are a direct result of negligence of the coal companies, or rather the refusal of the coal barons to make any effort to protect the lives of the miners, because it means a slight reduction in their profits. Profits first is their motto and the miners' safety is a minor and secondary consideration.

Death Consuming "Surplus."

There is no need to worry about the loss of human labor power, as represented in the appalling slaughter of the miners, as a surplus amount of coal diggers are today glutting the labor market to the extent of 200,000 men.

No figures can prepresent the awful suffering of the widows and families as a result of the accidents, and no mention is made of the 20,000 major and minor injuries occurring each year in the industry and the attendant suffering arising therefrom.

Take Your Choice, Coal Diggers!

The miners meet death in many ways in the mines, such as falls from roofs, and coal, from the rib sides, crushed by coal trips on the main haulage ways, suffocated and poisoned by foul gases, electrocuted by imperfect insulation on trolley wires and machines, blown to pieces by explosions and burned by resulting fires.

The following facts are taken from reports made by the various state mine inspectors to the U. S. bureau of commerce for the month of May, 1925:

The death rate for the month was 4.15 per million tons of coal produced, as compared with 3.33 for May, 1924. The increased fatality rate was due mainly to an explosion at Sanford, N. C., on May 27, in which 53 lives were lost, and to an explosion at Piper, Ala., on May 31, which killed six men. Without these two disasters the death rate for the month would have been 2.80 per million tons of coal mined.

For bituminous mines alone the reports showed 143 fatalities, including the two explosions mentioned. As the production of bituminous coal in May was 35,474,000 tons, the fatality rate was 4.03, as compared with 2.98 for May, 1924, and 3.20 for the month of May during the ten years 1915-1924. For anthracite mines alone the death rate from accidents in May was 4.67 per million tons, based on a production of 8,134,000 tons, as compared with a death rate of 4.78 for May last year and a ten-year average rate of 5.56.

Records compiled by the bureau for the first five months of 1925 show that 930 men lost their lives in accidents at the mines. The total production of coal during the period was 234,978,000 tons, making the fatality rate 3.96 per million tons. For the corresponding months last year the rate was 4.82. The five-month rate for bituminous mines alone was 3.59 in 1925 and 4.73 in 1924, while for anthracite mines alone it was 5.90, as compared with 5.29 in 1924 Production records show an output of 37,259,000 tons of anthracite and 197,719,000 tons of bituminous coal during the first five months of the present year.

Major Disasters.

Six major disasters with a total loss of 154 lives occurred during the first five months of the present year, as compared with five disasters and a loss of 384 lives for the corresponding months of 1924. A "major" disaster is defined as an accident causing five or more deaths. The fatality rate per million tons based exclusively on major disasters was 0.66 for the months of January to May, 1925, and 1.59 for the same period last year.

An examination of the causes of accidents that have occurred thus far in 1925 shows a substantial reduction in the death rate per million tons caused by explosions of gas or coal dust, a slight increase in haulage accidents, and no material change for accidents due to explosives, electricity and falls of roof and coal.

Nationalization With Workers' Control.

Added to this already keen suffering, is the present attempt all over America to cut the miners' starvation wages, reduce their working conditions, and destroy their union.

There is only one remedy for this situation, and that is the nationalization of the coal mines with workers' control to the end that the industry will be run for the benefit of the workers, with safety and service the first consideration.

PRISONERS OF CLASS JUSTICE WRITE TO I. L. D.

Labor Defense Body Finds Many Friends

International Labor Defense, the new non-partisan workers' defense organization founded in Chicago on June 28 last, received many letters from prisoners in all parts of the country. These letters disclose a number of workers being persecuted for their labor activities that before had not been generally known. Among them are four members of the Seamen's Union who have been in prison at Thomaston, Maine, since the Seamen's strike of 1921.

Other letters tell of workers being framed up. One prisoner for instance, who is at McNeil's Island, Wash., writes that copper plates were planted in his room and that in consequence he is now serving a long term for counterfeiting, all because of his working class activity.

Reports similar to this have come from state and federal prisoners in California, Minnesota, Iowa and Kansas. International Labor Defense is investigating all such cases to ascertain their true nature. A complete list of all class-war prisoners is being compiled by the organization.

Its national committee recently decided to raise a fund to send at least $5.00 every month to all working class prisoners confined for their activity or their opinions.

SEATTLE TURNS OUT TO DEMAND CHINA FREEDOM

Tsang Says New Motto Is "China for Workers"

(Special to The Daily Worker)

SEATTLE, Wash, July 20—Cheering for Soviet Russia, for the mass movement of China, the Kuomintang and the Communist movement, more than fifteen hundred workers assembled last night at Washington and Occidental Avenues at an open air protest meeting and demonstration against war with Soviet Russia and against imperialist war on China.

The meeting was held under the auspices of Seattle City central committee of the Workers Party. The speakers were Paul K. Mohr, secretary Bakers' Local Union, Jean Stovel, a well known woman in the local labor movement, Y. Y. Tsang, president of Chinese student club and Norman H. Tallentire, district organizer of the Workers Party.

The Kuomintang participated by a special delegation and gave its endorsement of the meeting and its aims.

Morris Hansen of Painters' Local Union, and well known trade unionist in the local labor movement, presided and opened the meeting by telling of its aims and purpose.

Unionist Speaks for Labor

Paul K. Mohr, veteran in the local labor movement, approving of the aims of the meeting, spoke at length on the situation and events now taking place said that labor is determinedly against imperialism and capitalist war and aggression on China and Soviet Russia, and expressed the sympathies of labor with Chinese strike and the workers Soviet Republic.

Jean Stovel spoke against imperialism and invasion of China and against capitalist war on Soviet Russia.

Y. Y. Tsang gave an elaborate address on the Chinese situation, stating that the movement in China was not a movement against other nations but a struggle for independence and self determination of the Chinese people.

"China for the Workers" Say Tsang

He said that the slogan China for Chinese, employed for about thirty years, is now being substituted by the slogan of "China for the workers."

He said that the capitalists and imperialists of the world call Bolshevism bad because Bolshevism stands and figths for humanity.

Tallentire Speaks

Norman Tallentire gave an eloquent speech on the situation in China, the aggression and preparation of capitalism for another war and its desire and provocation of Soviet Russia to war, ending by urging the audience to rally to the standard of Communism by joining the Workers Party and to be prepared to resist capitalism.

A collection of $27.50 was taken up. Resolutions setting forth the continuous crossing of Soviet Russia borders by bandit bands and gangs of murderers from Poland and other neighboring capitalist nations with intent to provoke Soviet Russia to war and pledging support to the Workers Soviet republic were adopted by unanimous raising of hands.

Resolutions expressing sympathy with the strike in China, and pledging support were also adopted unanimously, the meeting adjourned with three rousing cheers for Soviet Russia, three rousing cheers for the Chinese mass movement, the Kuomintang and three more cheers for the Communist movement.

Workers Defense Expensive.

More than $6,500.00 was paid out during the months of June and July by the International Labor Defense to defray legal expenses in ten cases of working class persecutions. Most of these were deportation cases against foreign born radical workers but the biggest item is the Pittsburgh trial of Fred Herrick and nine other Communists for which $4,000.00 has been advanced.

POLICE BREAK UP 'HANDS OFF CHINA' MEETING

Shanghai or New York All the Same

American worker in its danger of a new war and the greater exploitation of the American workers.

Police Interferes.

Manley was speaking for not more than 10 minutes when the police sergeant informed the chairman, Krumbein, that the language of the speaker would have to be modified "because he was speaking against the constitution." Manley concluded his speech pointing out the friendly relations of Soviet Russia to China in contrast to the imperialists and told of the renunciation by Russia of any territory robbed from China by the old czaristic regime

Because of this, the imperialists were opposed to Russia as the leader against the oppressors of the subjected nations The demand of "Stand by Soviet Russia" was roundly applauded by the workers. Manley's demand of "Hands Off China" was enthusiastically applauded by the audience.

Throws Speaker Off Platform.

William Weinstone was the second speaker. He told of the killing of more than 70 workers, and the wounding of 300 in Shanghai, of the bitter exploitation of the Chinese workers who were sweated more than 12 hours a day. He also pointed out the long oppression of China by the Great powers, the policing by foreign troops, the limitation of customs duty, the draining of the treasury and continual fomenting of civil war as a pretext for interference.

Weinstone had hardly spoken 15 minutes, when again the police sergeant informed the chairman that the meeting could not go on as the speaker was "talking against the U. S."

Krumbein advised the sergeant that the police had been informed of the meeting by letter and telephone and he had received the usual "alright" from the police captain to hold the meeting. The sergeant then threatened that Weinstone would have to be the last speaker or otherwise he would arrest the chairman and break up the meeting immediately.

When he received no assurance from Krumbein that this would be done, he proceeded to the platform and ordered Weinstone to stop speaking. Weinstone asked the police sergeant upon what authority. Whereupon the sergeant brandishing his club and followed by his policemen, exercised his "authority" of force and violently pushed the platform over, throwing off the speaker.

The audience which had grown larger and larger during the meeting and which numbered several thousand, indicated their protest against this arbitrary conduct of the police by loudly booing the sergeant and closed in about the platform in protection of the speaker. The police reserves then followed and dispersed the audience with their clubs, arresting two comrades who did not instantly comply with the orders to move on.

Workers (Communist) Party Denounces Police Action.

In a written statement issued tonight, the district office of the Workers (Communist) Party denounced the arbitrary and high handed action of the police in breaking up the meeting.

"The Workers Party," the statement declares, "exercised the right of free speech granted by the constitution in holding this meeting against the violence in China and the campaign against Soviet Russia. It is quite fitting and glaringly shows up the real significance of events in the Orient, that a meeting against the shooting down of workers in China should be forcefully broken up by police action in the United States.

"The American imperialists are behind the plunder and suppression of the Chinese people and they are interested in having the action go unnoticed. The Workers Party will continue fighting the imperialism in China and elsewhere which is leading the world to a new war and will go on speaking on the streets of New York laudly demanding the freedom of China from the imperialist yoke despite the cossack action and violence of the New York police."

trail of the night shirt prowlers. One is from Mt. Pleasant, N. J.; the other from Middletown, Ohio. One carries the caption: "Pastor Faces Charge." The other reads: "Girl sues man for attentions shown her." The pastor who faces the charge, is a Presbyterian minister, and he is accused of paying suspicious attentions to a woman not his wife, with the use of profanity and activities in the ku klux klan.

THE second culprit is not a minister, strange to say, but he is a member of the ku klux klan. His offense is forcing his attentions on a young girl in a way "not becoming a married man who is the father of seven children." It goes without saying that neither of those two kluxers believes that man ascended from a monkey or even from a gorilla. It is more likely that they accept the bible, hook, line and sinker as the divinely inspired word of god. It is more than likely that they are champions of William Jennings Bryan and foes of science. But they don't seem to be able to keep out of harm's way, despite their piety.

THE Metropolitan Insurance Company has printed a neat little folder to be sent to each of its 22,000,000 policyholders, containing an attack on the movement for the public ownership of private utilities. This question has nothing to do with life insurance, but it has a good deal ot do with the business of the officials and stockholders of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company. That company has grown immensely wealthy in the pursuit of one of the easiest "grafts" in the United States.

THE insurance companies are among the biggest holders of bonds in privately owned public utilities, such as railway, gas and electric companies. Together with the banks, the insurance companies dominate the transportation industry. How do they get the money to do this? By the most contemptible form of panhandling. The insurance companies particularly those that write industrial, or weekly payment policies, which is the principal field of the Metropolitan, get millions every year from poor people, who are compelled to let their policies lapse because they cannot keep up payments.

THE insurance agent who induces a worker to take out a policy, on which he pays a premium of, let us say, twenty-five cents a week, receives as a commission for writing the policy, fifteen times the weekly premium. In order to insure that the company does not pay this commission out of its existing funds, the agent's commission is spread out over a thirteen week period. Should the policy holder drop the policy for any reason, the agent loses his commission, even tho the policy is in force for ten years, and some other agent, than the one who wrote it, is carrying the business on his books, that unfortunate agent is charged with that $3.75 that his predecessor drew ten years previously.

DURING this time the policy holder pays in about $130. But after paying in all that money, there is no return unless the policy holder is wise enuf to take advantage of the paid-up feature of the policy which the companies were forced to adopt after a long fight. The insurance companies cannot lose. Their rates are so "loaded" that only epidemics like the influenza plague of a few years ago, cause them any loss. They use their poorly paid agents as propagandists of prosperity bunk and hocus pocus patriotism.

ANOTHER device of the Metropolitan to fleece their agents out is to refuse payment of commissions on policies written on colored people, on a weekly payment basis. The excuse is given they don't want colored business, but can't very well reject it. However in order to discourage the agents from writing it, they penalize them by refusing to pay the usual commissions. They claim their refusal to accept colored business is due to the alleged high mortality rate among negroes. Insurance agents who have spent many years working in colored districts say that this a lame excuse. The grafting Metropolitan sees a chance to get the money of the Negroes without any cost except the small fee the doctor receives for making the physical examination.

THE insurance agents in several cities made several efforts to organize a few years ago. In Boston, the agents in the biggest offices were ready and held meetings at which officials of the company were hooted out of the halls. The American Federation of Labor, however, refused to grant them a charter on the ground that they were not workers or producers. They were let down just as the Boston policemen were let down by Gompers and company. There are more than fifty thousand insurance agents working for the so-called industrial or weekly payment companies. They visit the homes of the working class. If they were members of the trade union movement, they would make splendid propagandists for the organization of the workers into unions. If for no other reason efforts should be made to get them inside the ranks of organized labor.

NORTHERN OHIO WORKERS PARTY HOLD ANTI-IMPERIALIST MEETING NEAR CLEVELAND ON SUN. JULY 26

CLEVELAND, Ohio, July 20.—The biggest mass outing of the season is to take place at Willough Beach Park (east of Cleveland, near Willoughby) on Sunday, July 26th. It is to be a district picnic and all locals and branches of the party in northern Ohio will co-operate to make it a red mile stone in the progress of the party in District 6.

The prize athletic events will be under the direction of the Young Workers League. Bathing, dancing and other amusements will be provided for all who want to spend a day of rest and fun upon the shore of Lake Erie.

Mass Meeting in P. M.

The major event of the day will be the afternoon mass meeting. No comrade and worker in northern Ohio will want to miss hearing Wm. F. Dunne and Ella Reeve Bloor speak upon Chinese-Soviet Russia incidents, news of which has recently filled the capitalist papers of the entire world. The threat of war against Soviet Russia because of her growing power among the revolutionary nationalists of the Far East, and the meaning of events in China, which will be the subject of all speeches,—will, it is hoped, bring more comrades into active party work. There will be many other speakers, for a most complete discussion has been arranged for.

How to Get There.

Willough Beach Park is reached by interurban electric cars from the Cleveland Public Square at the post office. Cars leave every hour at ten minutes to the hour, and can be boarded at any car stop going east on St. Clair Ave. Admission at the park will be 25 cents. A special round trip and admission ticket can be secured for 75 cents at the district and local office, 5927 Euclid Ave., Cleveland.

RUSSIA TODAY

The Official Report of the British Trade Union Delegation to Soviet Russia

THE DELEGATION

(FROM THE INTRODUCTION)

was cmoposed of men whose political tradition tended to make them critical of the Communist philosophy and policy, and who had each an expert knowledge of, at least, one of the branches of industry under inspection. Further, the advisory Delegates were men who had long official training in inquiring into and reporting foreign countries, and who had a thorough knowledge of the language and of Russia under previous conditions.

HOW THE DELEGATION WORKED

(FROM THE INTRODUCTION)

There was no difficulty in getting contact with opinion of every shade. Each member of hte Delegation had an authorization which enabled him to enter into any Government building, factory, club, hospital, police court, prison, or private house without any guide and without any previous notice. These authorizations were made full use of by those members who spoke the language and knew the country. The Delegation came well provided with means of getting in touch with opposition opinion and was kept continuously in contact with it.

WHY THE DELEGATION REPORTED

(FROM THE INTRODUCTION)

We have placed on record the results of our labors in the hope that what we have to say will be of interest and use to those who desire to understand Russia and who are prepared without bias to examine the consequences which arise from the control of this great country by the workers who reside in it and who have secured this control by facing indescribable dangers and going thru suffering unparalleled in the history of world conflicts between race and race, class and class, and one form of civilization and another.

MINER RUSHED FROM COUNTRY BY GOVERNMENT

Class Prisoner Leaves Wife and 4 Children

NEW YORK CITY, July 20—The quick deportation of Tony Stafford, union miner of Italian birth who was taken from Moundville prison, forestalled efforts made by International Labor Defense in New York to stay the government's action. Stafford had served five years in Moundsville on charges growing out of a frame-up during a coal strike in West Virginia.

He was an official of the United Mine Workers' Union. He was taken from prison by government agents, lodged in Pittsburgh County jail until last Monday from where he was rushed to Ellis Island and shipped aboard the "Guiseppe Verdi" which sailed on Wednesday for Naples.

He leaves a wife in West Virginia and four children who had not seen him for six years. The International Labor Defense acted in the case as soon as it got word, but the reocrd-breaking time in which the deportation was effected prevented its being stopped.

OFTEN HARD TO TELL 'FRIENDS' FROM ENEMIES

Minnesota Federation Bemoans Indorsements

ST. PAUL, July 19.—(FP)—"Legislators elected with the indorsement and active support of the organized labor movement should at least cooperate in the efforts to secure labor legislation and to prevent adverse legislation being enacted," complains the legislative committee, Minnesota State Federation of Labor, in reporting on the 1925 session.

"Unfortunately this has not uniformly been the case. In some instances even members from strong labor districts not only failed to cooperate but openly opposed and criticized the action of labor's committee in carrying out the instructions of conventions.

"Frankly speaking we cannot say that labor received much in the way of legislation from this session. The program of legislation which we were instructed to prepare and present, as well as those bills which we were instructed to cooperate in having enacted into law met with very little response."

The 1925 Minnesota legislature was predominantly republican with a farmer-labor minority.

SOVIET ELECTRICAL EXPERTS NOW IN AMERICA TO BUY EQUIPMENT; PRE-WAR CAPACITY IS DOUBLED

NEW YORK, July 19.—An expenditure of 160,000,000 rubles or upward of $80,000,000 for electrification purposes in the Soviet Union is to be provided for the federal Soviet budget for the fiscal year 1925-1926, according to a statement made by the chairman of the Moscow Combination of State Electrical Stations Kazimir P. Lovin who arrived here last week for the purpose of studying the electric power plants and the electrical industry of the United States which the Soviet Union intends to take as a model in its own electrification plans.

Accompanying Lovin is the manager of the technical department of the Moscow combination of state electrical stations, known for short as "MOGES," Boris A. Barsukov. During their stay in this country the representatives of the Soviet electrical industries will have their headquarters in the offices of the Amtorg Trading corporation, at 165 Broadway, New York, which is handling the bulk of the trade between America and the Soviet Union and thru which eventual orders for electrical equipment which may be placed in this country will be effected.

Electric Capacity Doubles

In his statement Lovin pointed out that, while the electrical industries in the Soviet Union are still in their infancy, plans for electrification have been pushed ahead at a rapid pace during recent years and the capacity of the electrical stations, though amounting in 1925 to only 512,000 kilowatt, was already double the pre-war capacity. The electrification plans now in execution provide for the construction of new electrical stations and the reequipment and enlargement of existing stations in 100 localities in the Soviet Union as a first step in the work of electrifying the country.

Of these 30 stations with a total capacity of 1,750,000 kwt. are to be of the large regional type feeding electricity over extensive areas. Two of these stations, those of Balakhna in the province of Nizhni Novgorod and Kisel in the Urals have already been completed. Nearing completion and partly in operation are the stations Volkhovstroy and Red October in the province of Leningrad, Kashira and Shatura in the province of Moscow, and Shterovka in the Donetz Basin. The total capacity of these seven stations is 194,000 kwt.

Cost One Fourth of Pre-War

Beside these stations which are being constructed at the expense and under the control of the central organizations created by the Soviet government for the purpose of electrification, local initiative is making itself manifest in many districts where smaller electrical stations are being built by the local communal authorities or by stock companies with the participation of the local authorities.

Owing to this extensive electrical construction it has already become possible to reduce the price to consumers on an average about one-fourth of the pre-war price.

Will Study American Plants

In Moscow where the stations are combined under the management of the "MOGES" of which Lovin is chairman the capacity by the end of this year is to be brought up to 155,000 kilowatt as against 78,000 kwt. in December 1924. The earnings of the "MOGES" in the fiscal year ending September 30, 1924, amounted to 21,000,000 rubles, and the expenses, including amortization and the sum of 3,200,000 rubles set aside for reequipment of the plants, amounted to 30,000,000 rubles.

Lovin and Barsukov, who are both electrical engineers, expect to stay in this country about three months. They intend to visit the larger electrical plants and electrical construction works in the United States.

IMMIGRATION ACT SOMETHING LIKE TENNESSEE LAW

Changes Citizen Into Alien and Vice Versa

WASHINGTON, D. C. July 20.—Mrs. Elizabeth Newns of Baltimore was denied a passport by the state department on the ground that she was a British subject, and she may not be able to return to her home and four children without experiencing the rigors of Ellis Island.

Her husband, Leonard Newns was born in London, Eng., and married his wife in 1912 in Baltimore where she was born of American parents. He was not naturalized then but since has taken out his final papers and going abroad with his wife was furnished an American passport.

But because he was not naturalized until 1923, one year after the passage of the Cabell act, the state department held that his wife was a British subject, and therefore not entitled to a passport.

She was given the necessary papers by the British authorities, but the immigration authorities have informed her that she may have difficulty in getting back into this country unless the necessary documents are forwarded to her in time.

All T. U. E. L. Groups Are Asked to Do the Same As Frisco

By TOM FLEMING.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal.—The T. U. E. L. held an entertainment and dance on Saturday, July 11 at 225 Valencia St.

Brother Dobkin earned quite a reputation as a play director with his presentation of a two act comedy entitled "Suppressed Desires."

Brother Harris, who is one of the elected delegates from Painters' Local 1158 to the Painters' National Convention at Montreal, made the speech of the evening, in the course of his remarks he outlined the history of the T. U. E. L. since its inception, and also emphasized the fact, that the league was growing in numbers and influence.

The dance was well attended, and every one present had a ripping good time. Fifty per cent of the net proceeds will go to the national office of the T. U. E. L. to help in organizational work.

PANIC SEIZES RED BAITERS' SACRED OFFICE

take up the entire ninth floor. When a visitor steps out of the elevator he is right in the midst of the B. A. F. There is no ante-room. The federation takes no chances.

When the country is to be turned over to them the reds should know the address to go to.

The offices are used principally for work that ought to be investigated. They are headquarters for spies and chronic exploiters of the working class. From them runners go forth to all parts of Los Angeles to receive reports from hotels, apartment houses etc., etc.

For some months the runners have looked worried. Business has been bad and there is danger that they may lose their jobs. They are probably paid as much as $6 a day and that is big wages for cow-town ku kluxers. To hold the jobs they race with each other. That suits the bosses. The more each runner does the fewer will be required. So, the runners are just running themselves out of jobs. The more scared they get the faster they run and the faster they run the more scared they get.

California House Snakes.

The runners deal principally with hotel clerks and apartment house landladies and manageresses. They get reports from these persons at regular periods. The reports are on I. W. W.'s, Communists, socialists, etc.

Hotel clerks, landladies, etc., are paid $1 to $5 a month for watching, spying, snooping on the marked victims. The clerks that serve are employed at starvation wages by hotels and are often cocaine and morphine fiends, ready to do a great deal for a dollar.

Favorites of the runners (and of the B. A. F.) are the "house snakes." This name should be defined. In Australia snakes are made pets in homes. They are lazy, worthless reptiles that find dwellings of human beings comfortable to lay around in. But they are not poisonous and do no harm. Far different are California house snakes. These are landladies, manageresses, chambermaids, housekeepers, etc., etc. They are poisonous and do all the harm they can do.

Reds Wanted to Watch—See House Snakes.

The B. A. F. pays $1 to $5 a month to the house snakes for spotting Reds. Runners call upon the snakes weekly for reports. They find that the snakes are never without Reds. If a Red moves away the house snake discovers another to take his place. She needs the $1 to $5 per month. That helps the runners. It gives them work. Also, it helps the B. A. F. because it enables it to show subscribers a big list of Reds who are being watched. That means money for the federation. Hence, the house snakes are the favorite spotters.

Slimy Work.

Hotel clerks sometimes have scruples, house snakes, never. The snakes receive mail for Reds, open it, take notes, reseal it. They are assured that the law cannot touch them. When there is an opportunity they purloin money, checks, etc., destined for the Reds. As they are patriots, larceny is a duty with them. All movements of the Reds are reported by them. The more they report the better for them.

Every Red is individually dealt with by the B. A. F. Agents of the federation are experienced in driving the marked victims out of business or employment. Help is given by officers of the American Federation of Labor when necessary. There can be no question but that thousands of Reds have been crushed, driven to suicide, perjured to prison, hounded from city to city, etc., subjected to malpractice by physicians, dentists, etc., etc.

Game is Played Out.

But the devil's game is up. Election of Coolidge ended it. The B. A. F. worked for Coolidge. The big majority rolled up was a boomerang for the organization. Subscribers, believing it would be extravagant to support the B. A. F. in the face of the election returns, are keeping their good money.

In its Weekly News Letter this week the federation plainly says that democracy is a failure in this country. Next week it may recommend that steps be taken to establish a monarchy. All of which means that the order is on its deathbed.

Reds can from now on with satisfaction observe the movements of the most truculent and unscrupulous enemy they have in the United States. Convulsion after convulsion will shake the dying wreaker of evil until it is as dead as other wretches of its kind.

Young Prisoner at Leavenworth Claims Government Frame-Up

KANSAS CITY, Mo., July 20.—A representative of International Labor Defense visited Alexander Kahn, military prisoner in Leavenworth penitentiary serving a 20-year sentence. Kahn is twenty-six years old and has been in prison eight years. He was one of the seventeen who were tried by court martial in 1918 and found guilty of the murder of another prisoner in the disciplinary barracks at Leavenworth, where all of them were serving short sentences for slight military infractions.

Kahn claims that the murder was an accident that grew out of a fist fight between two prisoners. The one who was killed was a stool-pigeon who had been discovered by the others. The seventeen were tried and found guilty, Kahn said, as an example to the rest of those held in the barracks, many of whom were C. O.'s.

The record of the court martial, which Kahn can produce, is filled with irregularities of a nature not tolerated in the civil courts. The orginal sentence was death, but was later commuted to life and then to twenty years. Nine of the seventeen have been released.

ARMY OFFICERS IGNORE COURT'S, CROUCH ORDER

Judge Obeys Masters, Withdraws Writ

HONOLULU, T. H. (By Mail).—The writs of habeas corpus issued by Judge De Bolt in the Crouch-Trumbull case were made returnable the 25th of June. On that date Counsel Patterson who had been retained by the International Labor Defense, for the imprisoned soldiers appeared in court ready to take up the case. The army authorities failed to appear or to produce the bodies of Crouch and Trumbull as ordered by the court. The judge hastily ordered a continuance to July 2 and transferred the case to another judge's calendar.

In view of the failure of the army authorities to obey the writ, Patterson moved that they be made permanent and that the soldiers be released from Fort Shafter guard house. The judge denied the motion. Later the judge withdrew the writs and served an order on the commanding general to show cause, and the cause again continued.

Patterson is carrying on a fight to show that the soldiers are held illegally.

DAKOTA FARMERS HEAR OF LIFE IN SOVIET RUSSIA

FREDERICK, S. D., July 20.—Comrade Alfred Knutson, who has recently returned from Russia where he made a thoro investigation in industrial and farming conditions, is traveling in South Dakota on a speaking tour.

Comrade Knutson's lectures furnish a desirable change to the continuous stream of slanderous lies about Russia, that the kept press of South Dakota has been pouring out ever since the Soviet government began to function.

Speaking at Frederick, he explained the great educational campaign that is now going on in Russia, proved by figures of the rapid gain that is taking place in both industrial and agricultural production. He told interesting facts about the Red army; and explained the functions and purpose of the farmers international which is naturally to organize the farmers to fight the capitalist exploiters in their respective countries and internationally to unite to fight world capitalism.

The Communists Score

The action of the Chicago Federation of Labor in condemning the scabbery of the United Garment Workers' Union officials in the strike of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers' Union against two Chicago clothing firms, is none the less welcome because it was accompanied by a tirade against the Communists. The DAILY WORKER is glad to record that it was first to call the attention of the workers of Chicago, and particularly to the organized workers affiliated to the A. F. of L. to the disgrace of having a set of labor fakers set themselves up as scab recruiters to break the strike conducted by a genuine labor organization.

This was a challenge to every honest trade unionist in Chicago, and tho the officials of the Chicago Federation of Labor were at first inclined to remain "neutral" as shown by John Fitzpatrick's interview to the Federated Press, in which he expressed the hope that the central body would not become involved in the controversy, there was evidence that the local unions would take action on their own accord, so the federation officials decided that valor was at this time the better part of discretion and did what the DAILY WORKER suggested.

The DAILY WORKER called on the federation officials and the Federation News to join with it in condemning scabbery masquerading under the cloak of trade unionism. Had we failed to make constructive proposals, had we confined ourselves to making general attacks on the officials of the Chicago Federation of Labor, those worthies would be pleased. They could go before the rank and file of the unions and say: "Those Communists have no program, their only policy is one of indiscriminate criticism." And they would have an argument against the Communists.

But unfortunately for the reactionaries, the Communists in this case as in every other case had a program. And what made Fitzpatrick and and his corps of red-baiters mad was that they were obliged to adopt the very policy advocated by the DAILY WORKER and by the militants in the local unions. Of course, there are other contributory causes to this madness. There is the fear of William Green's wrath. The Amalgamated is listed in the A. F. of L. dictionary as a "dual union." Therefore it was hazardous for Fitzpatrick to defend the Amalgamated against the scabby United Garment Workers' Union, without standing in real danger of being branded as a Communist. When any labor leader acts like a real honest trade unionist, his action is likely to be branded as "Communist." And the reason is obvious. The Communists and the militants who follow their lead are today the only elements in the trade unions that have a program and a policy that coincides with the interests of the workers. Even Fitzpatrick himself in a lucid moment had to admit this, substantially.

The slanderous and stupid attack on the Communists serves as an alibi for Fitzpatrick and Nockles in case their even more reactionary opponents, locally should make an issue of the United Garment Workers' Union scabbery before the executive council of the A. F. of L. Fitzpatrick and Nockels can present this letter to Green as proof that they are real enemies of the Communists.

If Communism is to be discredited before the working class, it will not be done by charging the Communists of being in favor of amalgamation, the defense of class war prisoners, Irish famine relief, defense of the Negro workers against race discrimination and other issues that touch the heart of the working class. The Communists alone take up those issues because they are fighting issues that make for the greater solidarity of the workers of all races and colors, nationally and internationally. The labor fakers, either too lazy to do anything or too corrupt, indulge in slander of those who step in to help, whether it be to defend class war prisoners in America or raise funds for starving peasants in Ireland.

The employing class and their organs, the yellow socialists, and the labor aristocracy will take comfort from the official attack of the Chicago Federation of Labor on the Communists. They are welcome to the luxury. This policy was tried out by the labor fakers, acting under the instructions of the open shop employers in Minneapolis and Seattle, with disastrous results to the trade union movement. The stock of the Communists have not gone down in those cities. They have gone up, but the same cannot be said for the labor fakers.

In the struggle in the trade unions between those who want to substitute class collaboration for the class struggle, such incidents will grow more common as the fight becomes more intense. But as the British trade union leader Bromley said in his reply to the cabinet minister who asked for the co-operation of the trade union leaders in fighting the Communists: "The Communists are always on the side of the workers against the employing class." This fact the rank and file of the American workers are learning fast. The falsehoods of the labor skates will not prevent the spread of this knowledge.

The DAILY WORKER, in forcing the officials of the Chicago Federation of Labor to come out against trade union scabbery has rendered another service to the trade union movement.

The French and Spanish troops are still "defeating" the Riffians, but the latter are advancing and capturing new territory. No doubt Abd-el-Krim will pray to Allah for a regular catastrophe.

General Dawes is going west to train with some bronchos before tackling the senate when it reconvenes. By the way, what happened to the "minute men of the constitution"?

Anti-Semitic riots are taking place in Vienna, a city entirely in the control of socialists. There are no anti-Semitic riots in Soviet Russia. How can the yellow socialists explain this?

Another struggle in Portugal between rival wings of the bourgeoisie passed without bloodshed. Indeed, it is not reported that even a single combatant had his bunions trodden on.

FEDERATION OF LABOR SCORES STRIKEBREAKING

gressive views and went back to the reactionary crib.

Joseph Wise, recently on the payroll of the DAILY WORKER Publishing company as linotype operator, but now a champion red baiter, took the floor to defend the United Garment Workers in their scabbery. He thought the scabs did not have their day in court. He wanted to know if the officials of the U. G. W. were invited before the executive board of the Federation and why a communication from an organization not affiliated to the A. F. of L. should receive such consideration. He was referring to the letter of the joint board of the Amalgamated calling the attention of the C. F. of L. to the situation created by the strikebreaking tactics of the U. G. W.

Fitzpatrick and Nockels stepped pretty hard on Mr. Wise. "If you want to act as a handmaiden and defender for scabbery, go ahead" declared Fitzpatrick. Nockels exchanged left handed compliments with Wise, punning on his cognomen. "You are a pretty wise guy" said Nockels "but you don't know everything yet." The delegates laughed at Mr. Wise's discomfiture, and that worthy pulled in his horns until the tirade against the Communists began. On this point he was on all fours with Fitzpatrick and Nockels and all got along famously.

The executive committee's report contained two important recommendations. One was the statement on the garment workers; the other was a broadside against the Communists. Several delegates remarked privately that the action taken by the executive committee of the federation was first suggested by the DAILY WORKER editorially and also raised in local unions by Communists. In an interview to the Federated Press, Fitzpatrick, while expressing friendliness to the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, hoped that the central body would not be drawn into the controversy. The DAILY WORKER made this interview the basis of a strong editorial pointing out that expressions of friendship on the part of Fitzpatrick would be of no use to the striking clothing workers unless this friendship was translated into action and that there could not be any compromise with scabbery.

Forced To Act

There was nothing else for Fitzpatrick to do except denounce the scabbery of the United Garment Workers or stand convincted as a frothy windbag, and an artful dodger of important issues. Fitzpatrick therefore decided to change his tactics and the condemnation of the U. G. scabbers was the result. But this policy was bound to draw fire from the reactionary "Bill" Green, who sits at the same table with Tom Rickert president of the United Garment Workers.

As Fitzpatrick explained to the delegates, it's a game of trade and barter on the executive committee of the A. F. of L. "You scratch my back and I'll scratch yours" is the way the thing works, so when Rickert's back became infected with the hives of scabbery, it was only natural that he should call for William Green's scrub brush. Green came down on the Chicago Federation of Labor for "injecting" itself into the situation, in fact he made the same charge against Fitzpatrick that Fitz is so fond of making against the Communists.

Fitzpatrick and Nockels got a stomach of fighting the executive council of the A. F. of L. in the old days. Evidently they prefer some other kind of ballast nowadays. They prefer to fight the Communists. In order to ward off a charge that the Federation had again come under the control of the Communists the broadside against the radicals was turned loose.

It is significant that no mention of the attack on the United Garment Workers got into the capitalist press, but the Herald Examiner carried a long story telling of the attack on the Communists Were the reporters acting under the instructions of Fitzpatrick in ignoring the action against scabbery, one of the biggest pieces of news that broke on the floor of the Federation in many months?

This letter which winds up with the melodramatic "beware" common to dime novel conspiracies is a splendid proof of intellectual bankruptcy and political depravity and obviously written by the semi-literate who now edits the champion ridicule butt of labor journalism, The Federation News.

Fitz Aided British Empire

During the discussion that followed reading of this work of art, Fitzpatrick explained that he had no objection to Communists appealing to local unions for funds provided they came to the doors of the locals under their own names. He appeared to be particularly angry because Communists with Irish names, and they happen to be genuine, sponsored an appeal for funds to help the stricken peasants on the west coast of Ireland. The letter refers to those Irish radicals are "renegade Irishmen." Those "renegade Irishmen" were working for the freedom of Ireland from Great Britain when Fitzpatrick was on Woodrow Wilson's band wagon, howling for war against Germany and lining up the workers of this country to save the millions of the House of Morgan and the fortunes of the British Empire.

Irishmen active in the movement for Irish freedom cannot remember any notable contribution made to the cause of Irish independence from England by Fitzpatrick unless his support of the war and of Woodrow Wilson can be considered in that light. Fitzpatrick also pretends to favor an Irish republic yet, he worshipped the leader of the Free State traitors Michael Collins, who was as much responsible as anybody else for betraying the republic. This is a sample of Fitzpatrick's consistency.

One delegate feared that the Communists were going to turn the craft unions into industrial unions. Delegate Walt of the iron workers raved and ranted, but it was difficult to catch his words. What he wanted to say was, that he was tired of the Communists and did not want them in the local unions or on the floor of the Federation. He had no word of censure for the scabbery of the United Garment Workers.

Delegate Wise protested that "secrets" of the local unions found their way into the DAILY WORKER. This gentleman with the Masonic Order conception of trades unionism, was sore because some insanity that came out of his befuddled brain, was exposed to the rank and file.

Put Them Wise To Wise

Delegate Overgaard of the Machinists Union, told another secret and that was that Mr. Wise, the anti-Communist, had no objection to accepting Communist money on the payroll of this same DAILY WORKER. "If I hated an organization as much as Wise hates the Communists I would not accept their money" said Overgaard. Several delegates who knew Wise, thot he got sore on the Communists because they jerked him loose from the payroll. He has another reason, which is stronger than that. Wise is a congenital faker, and a mountain of ignorance, while possessing at the same time a badly inflated ego. A man with such accomplishments is a natural enemy of Communism.

Kipling said that the "female of the species is more deadly than the male." Whether she is or not, Mollie Freedman, who claims to represent the officialdom of the strangulated International Ladies' Gorment Workers' Union, proved that she was just as stupid and as unscrupulous as the "wise Mr. Wise," when she took the floor. Mollie uses her eyes as well as her lips when orating. She is a product of Brookwood College, that home of Greenwich Village radicalism and class-collaboration bunk.

She took a position close to Fitzpatrick and proceeded to lay the Communists low. She quoted her "beloved leader Samuel Gompers, attacked William Z. Foster who was once my friend and yours" shifting her optics towards Fitzpatrick, with an air of martyrdom. She told of going to New York for her vacation and finding a big rebellion there against her paymester Sigman, Perlstein and Feinberg. Bad work Mollie, to get fresh with the payroll! Local garment workers wonder what Mollie wanted a vacation for. They say she has done nothing heavier than drawing her salary since she came to Chicago. They say she is incompetent. She has not organizedd any garment workers, but she is willing to place her spouting ability at the disposal of the payroll gang.

Brookwood Intellectual

Mollie Freedman was not in Chicago when Dora Lifshitz, I. Davidson and other garment workers that she accused of cowardice were on the picket line fighting against the thugs of the employers and of the city police department. We remember that Dora Lifshitz was given a position of importance during the strike by Pearlstein, even tho that creature had her expelled from the union, for being a radical. When the shoddy Brookwood intellectual was learning how to cooperate with the bosses and maintain her respectability, the Communist girls in the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union were busy organizing the workers. Mollie Freedman, thinks the unions are the private monopolies of the officials and "outsiders" should not butt in. "We have quarrels in the family, but it's nobody else's business," chirped this faker. She also accused the 71 elected officers of locals 2, 9 and 22 of having misappropriated funds. No doubt the thousands of garment workers in New York who are solidly behind the suspended officials will be interested to hear this.

Charley Wills, took the floor after Morris Siskind whispered in his ear. Charley gets his money, by acting as business manager of the Federation News. He is a strong supporter of "B. and O Bill" Johnston president of the International Association of Machinists, who stole the recent election from Anderson his opponent. Charley's pink hair almost stood on end with well-feigned indignation as he recalled the attacks made on his leader Johnston in the DAILY WORKER. He was sore because the Communists were trying to fix up Ireland and China and thereby trying to gain the sympathy of those people. It was a great day for the Communists as Delegate Flora said. They got a lot of publicity.

Pink Haired Charley

Charley Wills, told of some imaginary delegate from the south who came "three hundred miles" to attend the International Labor Defense conference. Seeing so many "foreigners" there, he came to the 100 per cent American Charley, for consolation. Charley, like a real big fellow professed complete ignorance of the conference but told this alleged delegate what he thot of the Communists. It might be well for Charley to understand that a large number of the membership of the local labor movement are "foreigners" and it is those "foreigners" who make motions in their local unions to subscribe to the Federation News, thus helping Charley's paurch to keep extending, making it possible for him to admire the buckle on his belt while reclining restfully in his arm chair. Of course as one of the delegates said to the DAILY WORKER reporter, "Charley would talk tomorrow in defense of the Communists if those two pay him his salary gave him instructions to do so."

The American Negro Labor Congress came in for severe handling from Fitzpatrick and Nockels. The latter said that out of 150 international unions affiliated to the American Federation of Labor, only three had clauses in their constitutions forbidding membership to Negroes. He did not dwell on the unwritten law which keeps Negroes off jobs simply because of their color. This is one of the greviances that the Negro workers are going to fight against.

Calf Remains Unkilled

Delegate Shussler of the Photo Engravers' Union tried hard to get the floor but the chair did not recognize him until some supporter of the official family moved the previous question. Under the heading of "reports of local unions" Schussler said that while he disagreed with Fitzpatrick on many issues, he was with him in his action against the scabbery of the United Garment Workers. This was pleasing to the ears of the reactionaries. Fitz expanded and told Schussler that the fatted calf was waiting to be slaughtered whenever the prodigal son was willing to return and become a bootlicker of the reactionaries. Charley Wills applauded. But Schussler spoiled the picture by immediately afterwards criticizing Fitzpatrick for his habit of refusing the floor to delegates who have been slandered on the floor. Fitz got mad and so did Nockels and the fatted calf has a new lease of life.

For Protection.

Andrew Overgaard, delegate from a machinists' local, stated to the DAILY WORKER, that in his opinion the attack on the Communists was a shield to protect the officials of the Chicago Federation of Labor from the fury of William Green's wrath, for their action in taking the side of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers against the scabby Rickert outfit.

Overgaard also wished to have a statement that appeared in yesterday's DAILY WORKER corrected, which said that he met Jim Larkin in Dublin. The interview between Larkin and Overgaard took place in Moscow and not in Ireland.

Last Sunday's meeting of the Chicago Federation of Labor was entertaining and instructive. It proved the complete bankruptcy of the reactionaries. It showed that the DAILY WORKER is a powerful weapon in the hands of the workers, by exposing the reactionaries, labor fakers as well as by fighting the bosses. There is no doubt but that for the DAILY WORKER's campaign against the U. M. G. W. scabbery, the officials of the Chicago Federation of Labor would take refuge in "neutrality."

Many delegates are still wondering whether Nockels was himself when he condoned Tom Rickert's scabbery by pleading the law of self-preservation. They were strange words in deed.

persons as the International Tailoring company, but is a separate concern.

The revolver shot was the result of the attempt to create evidence of "violence," strikers said, and the sluggers of the International were standing on the street corners yesterday with a satisfied smile on their faces. However, they probably smiled too soon, as the company will have difficulty in getting around the newly passed state anti-injunction law. In addition, the revolver shot was plainly from inside the building, and only company officials and scabs and their protectors were inside.

New Judge a Zionist.

Copies of the DAILY WORKER sold to the strikers as usual. The Hod Carriers' Hall at Harrison and Green Sts. was packed with the strikers. No speeches were made, the morning being devoted to paying the strike benefits. A regular meeting will be held this morning.

Judge Pam will be forced to issue a discussion this morning on the demurrer filed by the strikers' attorney under the Cuthbertson anti-injunction law, which states that the picketing activities which are sought to be forbidden by injunction "are legal acts and not subject to injunction or restraining order, and are permitted under the statuets of the state of Illinois." It is possible he may postpone the hearing, which has already been put off four times.

International Tailors Call in Police.

NEW YORK, July 20—The International Tailoring company of New York, under the management of the owners of the firm of the same name in Chicago, whose 500 employes are on strike, obtained a court order against the leaders of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, commanding them to show cause why they should not be enjoined by injunction from picketing.

J. L. Reiss, president of the struck Chicago and New York firms, says in an affidavit that his concern does a business of $2,000,000 a year. He makes the usual charges of "violence, threats, lawlessness and direct action." but admits that the company has nine policemen "watching the union strikers." He charges that "at least six of the company's employes are unable to work now on account of injuries sustained in encounters with union men."

Maurice Deiches, lawyer for the clothing bosses, said that "The International Tailoring company refused to renew their agreement with the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, and has arranged an agreement with the United Garment Workers of America, which is affiliated with the American Federation of Labor."

Ask For Injunction.

The International Tailoring company of New York, Deiches said, had only a "gentlemen's agreement" with the Amalgamated, and that was broken.

The International Tailoring company is using the police, and now the courts to attempt to break up unionism, and has called in the A. F. of L. officials to help them complete the job. Supreme court justice McGoldrick has been asked to issue an injunction.

BRITISH STILL SHOOT CHINESE AT SHANGHAI

Merchants Betraying National Interest

SHANGHAI, China, July 20—The strike pickets at British wharves here today were dispersed by British marines firing five volleys over the heads of a great crowd who came to the wharf to demand the release of coolies held by the British and forced to work.

Firing also broke out at Chengtufu, where the British warship Teal opened fire on Chinese troops after rescuing some beleaguered missionaries and business people.

A Whitewash Party Coming.

Reports from London indicate that British interests are going to get their desire for another inquiry to offset the first one's report on Shanghai massacres and will be able to whitewash the municipal council and its British police troops. Strangely enuf, the new proposed board of inquiry is to contain an American, and Englishman and a Chinese of bribeable nature, but is not to contain any Japanese.

Separate negotiations are proceeding between committees of the imperialists' foreign chamber of commerce and the Chinese chamber of commerce. This is not looked upon with any pleasure by the strikers, as they rightly feel that the Chinese capitalists are too much interested in profits to be free from suspicion of trading off the liberation movement for their own gain, or to avoid their present continuous losses.

Chinese Merchants Play Traitor Game.

Evidence of this is that the chief stumbling block is not the demand of the Chinese merchants for all foreign exploiters to get out, but the very contrary. They are willing to let the foreign imperialists stay if only the Chinese business men and property owners who pay 80 per cent of the taxes raised by the municipal council, are allowed nine representatives on the council. The foreigners, true to their habit of granting as little as possible, are to allow only two representatives of Chinese capital on the council. Where the workers come in is not mentioned.

The amusing and even ridiculous situation in which Shanghai now is as a result of the denial that either China or the diplomatic corps have any power over the municipal council, continues.

Meanwhile the strike goes on, even more bitterly. Two Chinese papeprs, who were caught by the workers printing the lying publicity put out by the municipal council, were compelled to pay the strike relief fund $100,000.

Swindler of Millions Says He's Broke.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., July 20.—Morton S. Hawkins, facing 15 years' imprisonment following his conviction in federal court here on charges of using the mails to defraud, today filed a petition asking the government to finance his appeal to the United States circuit court of appeals at Chicago.

Hawkins declared he was a pauper and unable to bear the necessary costs of transferring the case to the higher court.

DARROW CITED FOR CONTEMPT BY TENN. JUDGE

Bond Set at $5,000.00; Raulston Insulted famous suspenders and drawled: "When do I give bond?"

"As soon as the sheriff serves papers on you," the judge replied.

Scientists a Poor Lot.

Turning toward a group of defense scientists, Darrow asked: "Is there anybody here, who will go my bond?"

There was no answer. Darrow smiled and told the court "I don't know whether I can get the bond."

"I guess you can," the judge retorted.

The citation came as soon as court convened, the judge delaying the opening to let stenographers typewrite his remarks.

Judge Feels Insulted.

Raulston referred to the session of Friday, when "this court was treated with contempt and insult," by Darrow.

Raulston read a copy of the colloquy he had with Darrow, in which Darrow said the defense didn't expect the judge to rule in favor of their motion and that their only purpose in the local court was to complete the record so they might "find justice in another court."

The colloquy follows:

"I hope the attorney doesn't mean to reflect upon this court," the judge had said, hesitatingly.

"The court has the right to that hope," Darrow retorted.

"The court has the right to do something else," the judge added, his face turning deep red.

Darrow shrugged his shoulders, hitched his suspenders and said: "Oh, all right."

Judge Sheepish; Darrow Unconcerned

In referring to the conversation, the judge said there had been "insults and outrages in court and insults against my state."

"The court has withheld action until passion is subdued before taking action," Raulston said.

"Mr. Darrow has shown disrespect not only for my court but for my state."

"I feel that further forbearance will cease to be a virtue and in an effort to protect the dignity of my court and the dignity of my state, I hereby order an instanter citation against Clarence Darrow for contempt."

Thruout the contempt proceeding the judge looked worried and embarrassed. While Darrow questioned him about the bond, he faced away from the Chicago attorney. Meanwhile, Darrow acted as tho some one had told him of a grammatical error in a last year's speech.

The contempt proceeding fell upon the mountain audience like a bomb shell. There was a gasp of surprise and when the judge set bond at $5,000, a second audible gasp ran around the room.

Largest Bond Ever Asked.

Lawyers in the courtroom said the $5,000 bond was the largest amount of bail ever asked for contempt in the annals of American jurisprudence. It shocked the defense attorneys.

The contempt proceeding passed like a thunderstorm and attorneys immediately began an argument over the reading of the statements from defense scientists.

Attorney General A. Thomas Stewart opposed the move, declaring the defense attorneys were only seeking to get publicity.

"There can be no possible reason for this action," said Stewart, "except for furthering this educational campaign or spreading propaganda as I call it. It will take three days to read these statements."

Afraid of Contamination.

This provoked Arthur Garfield Hays, of defense counsel.

"Justice is more important than time," Hays retorted.

"I don't want to see the court turned into a chautauqua or summer school," Stewart countered.

"Are you afraid we'll contaminate anybody?" asked Hays. "It costs us more to stay here than it does you, and it never harmed anybody to hear new thot."

This brot William Jennings Bryan into the argument. He contended the state ought to be permitted to present an argument in reply to the scientific statements if they were entered in the record.

"We ought to be allowed to present our side," said Bryan.

"Can I Speak?" Asks Darrow.

Clarence Darrow arose. He first asked the court whether he could speak. The judge nodded.

"There isn't any dispute between the lawyers in this case," said Darrow, slouching against counsel table, "even tho Bryan seems to think so."

Hays Reads Evolution Evidence.

The court finally ruled the defense had a right to read what they wanted from the statements and permitted them one hour in which to do it. Hays did the reading, his great voice booming thru the court room while spectators leaned forward in their seats.

Then Darrow and Raulston shook hands and made up

ANTHRACITE MINERS FIGHT TRAITORS

SCOPES FOUND GUILTY, FINED $100, NEW TRIAL DENIED; DARROW IN APPEAL TO HIGHER COURT

(Special to The Daily Worker)

DAYTON, Tenn., July 21.—The Tennessee anti-evolution case with its violent conflict between religion and science came to an abrupt end today when a jury convicted John Thomas Scopes of violating the law prohibiting the teaching of evolution in the public schools.

The jury deliberated only five minutes to convict Scopes, after having been in the court room only three hours since the trial began July 10. The conviction followed a request by defense counsel that their client be found guilty.

Attorneys for Scopes immediately filed a motion for a new trial which was denied. Then the 24-year-old high school professor was called before the bar of justice and sentenced to pay a fine of $100.

Defense counsel at once entered a bill of exceptions, their formal move appealing the conviction to the appellate court of Tennessee.

Rich Landowner Brings in Verdict.

The verdict was returned after the jury had been out only five minutes, to take a single ballot on the court house lawn. The conviction was announced by Captain Jack Thompson, white goateed and the wealthiest landowner in the county.

"We find the defendant guilty as charged in the indictment," were his only words.

The court then called Scopes before him and asked the young defendant, "Have you anything to say?"

"Your honor," said Scopes, in a nervous tone, but with simple dignity, "I feel I have been convicted for violating an unjust statute. I shall continue to do all in my power to oppose any law which doesn't permit the teaching of truth."

Bryan's Testimony Expunged.

The trial collapsed when presiding Judge John T. Raulston barred the defense from presenting any religious or scientific testimony. These two

NOT since Henry Ford, the multi-millionaire flivver manufacturer, made an ass of himself on the witness stand in the Ford-Tribune libel trial, when he referred to history as "bunk" has a man prominent in public life showed up in so unfavorable a light as the notorious mountebank William Jennings Bryan before the grilling examination of Clarence Darrow in the Scopes trial at Dayton, Tennessee. The DAILY WORKER declared that this trial would deal a deadly blow to the church, and this goes for all denominations. If it stopped right now, after William Jennings Bryan exhibited his colossal ignorance under Darrow's grilling, it is hard to see how any self-respecting person can defend the hocus pocus any longer.

BRYAN swallowed everything that the bible contains with much greater ease than the biblical whale could have swallowed Jonah. The members of the snake family crawl on their bellies because one of them was used by the devil to tempt Adam, incidentally making a man out of him. God must have also cursed the working class—they have crawled on their bellies for centuries and have eaten dust. Perhaps a worker produced the apple that sent Adam and Eve hunting for loin cloths! However, the workers are beginining to stand on their pins, tho they have no reason to be thankful to the bible for their access of manhood.

PERHAPS a Jesuit might have made a better showing on the witness stand than Bryan. Of course, a Jesuit is too clever to go on the witness stand, but if he did, Darrow would not have such an easy job. The Jesuit god is brought up to date. If the British empire learned a trick or two in the art of managing colonies thru the loss of the United States, the catholic church learned a good deal from its experience in burning heretics. Galileo was persecuted and Bruno burned at the stake because they gave expression to their disagreement with the catholic dogma that the earth was flat and stood still while the sun and the other planets moved around it. This was god's word according to the church. They admit now that god was all wet, in that respect, yet they still expect us to believe in their specially created deity—specially created to frighten us in giving up our own money.

ONE crazy preacher in New York—he rants in one of the most stylish religious daffy houses—declared that William Jennings Bryan's dial reminded him of Christ while the rugged physiognimy of Clarence Dar-

FIGHT ON ANTI-DARWIN LAW TO GO ON; VERDICT EXPECTED, SAYS SCOPES

By JOHN THOMAS SCOPES.

DAYTON, Tenn., July 21.—I was not surprised at being convicted in this court.

I had hoped that the fight would be won as early as possible, but it was beyond all my hopes to gain a victory in the lower court. With the exclusion of scientific evidence and the decision of the presiding judge declaring the anti-evolution law to be constitutional, there was not the least chance of my acquittal. The cause has not been daunted, but on the contrary, there is more of a determination to carry on to a successful conclusion in the higher courts.

The jury in this court heard only the evidence of two school boys, who were put on the stand by the prosecution. The expert testimony of scientists, which the jury was not allowed to hear, will be in the records that will be taken before the upper courts, and will enable us to overthrow this verdict.

If the higher courts of Tennessee decide against us, the fight will be taken to the supreme court of the United States. Defeat will not be admitted unless the highest court of the land goes against us. We will stay by the ship and every point will be fought out bitterly. Success is ultimately with us.

HSIO HSI LOU, AT WASHINGTON, D. C., "HANDS OFF CHINA" MEET, TELLS OF NATION'S SUFFERING

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 21.—The following is the text of the speech delivered by Hsio Hsi Lou, the first speaker at the "Hands Off China" meeting held at the initiative of the Workers (Communist) Party last Friday in the capital city of American imperialism. Mr. Lou was formerly the editor of the "Hsin-Wen," a newspaper of Peking. His speech was as follows:

Like Fall of Bastile.

"Ladies and Gentlemen:—I feel it is a great privilege to me to speak before this audience on the problems of China. The present movement in China has often been misunderstood, misrepresented by those who have a preconception or who have their own interests to promote.

"Perhaps you have heard much about the so-called agitation in China at present. The movement started with the strike of the Chinese workers in a Japanese cotton mill in Shanghai, the arbitrary arrest of some strikers by the foreign authori-

BRYAN'S GOD SEEMS TO HAVE TAKEN THE SIDE OF 'HEATHEN' CHINESE

MANILA, P. I., July 21.—Typhoons and the Chinese anti-imperialist strike have been playing special havoc with China sea shipping the last few days.

The big Canadian Pacific liner Empress of Russia arrived here today three days late after a voyage from Seattle featured by two cases of small pox, a walkout of her entire Chinese crew at Hong Kong, and an encounter with a typhoon between Hong Kong and Manila.

Yesterday the Roosevelt motorship Silverpore arrived here after a terrific battle with a typhoon in the China sea. At the height of the storm the Silverpore's engines stopped and the ship drifted helplessly for four days while her engineers, frantically and without sleep, sought to repair the damage.

The Silverpore's captain reported that in Hong Kong Chinese thugs demanded more than a hundred thousand gold dollars be donated to the strike fund for towage requested. The service was strongly refused.

NEW WAR ON SOVIETS IS GENEVA PLOT

Terrorism and War to Overthrow Workers

MOSCOW, July 3.—(By Mail.)—The leading article of the Pravda discloses upon the basis of authentic communications, the work of the so-called league "O. B. R." which, in its conference which took place in Geneva in the end of May, worked out a new plan for the struggle against the Comintern and the Soviet Union.

This plan consists of terrorist activities on the one hand and the exercise of the required pressure upon the capitalist governments coupled with an anti-Soviet press campaign.

On July 1, the league was to have presented all bourgeois governments with a memorandum in which an international conference for the discussion of measures in the fight against the Soviet Union was proposed.

Depended on British Government.

It is worthy of remark that the English and Finnish delegates to this conference relied with particular confidence upon the support of the English government.

These disclosures prove that the League "O. B. R.," the falsification of documents, the anti-Soviet campaign, the official and un-official attacks upon the Soviet Union, the journey of the organization consul members to Moscow, the press campaign, the visit of the English fleet to the Baltic Sea, etc., are all links in the same chain.

All Evidences of New Attack.

Simultaneous with the imperialist acts of violence in China and Morocco, the imperialists are preparing an anti-Soviet crusade. In a time when the English people are suffering from industrial crises and growing unemployment, the English ministers make war-like speeches.

However, they do not understand that it is no longer so simple to deceive the working class today, which has experienced very much in the world war and in the post-war period. The working class will recognize in time the danger the symptoms of which showed themselves in the Moscow consul process and the Geneva conference of the League "O. B. R."

Chinese Refuse to Feed Yankee Strike Breaking Gunboat

PEKING, China, July 21.—Advices from Canton say that food supplies have been cut off from the American gunboat stationed in Wuchow, as well as from the British residences. It is added that the British consul at Wuchow has advised all British subjects to leave because of the strict boycott against them.

HINDENBURG TO TURN ON SOVIET IN ALLIED PACT

Reply to France Is Conciliatory

PARIS, France, July 21—Germany's reply to the allied proposal for a European treaty, which has been handed to foreign Minister Briand but has not been made officially public, bears a conciliatory tone which shows that the German state, under the monarchist president Hindenburg is willing to form an alliance against the Soviet Union.

The British and American financiers, whose governments are attempting an anti-Soviet agreement, have forced Germany to come to these terms by refusing to make loans which German capitalists solicited from them, unless the alliance is pushed thru.

This is the interpretation placed here on the contents of the German note. The German government agrees to enter the league of nations, which has taken several measures against the Soviet government, and names conditions to her entry which are not insurmountable.

One of the demands of the French note to Germany on the proposed "security" pact was that France be permitted to rush troops thru Germany to Poland in case that country, dominated by France, goes to war on the Soviet Union.

If Germany agrees to the new alliance the Rapello treaty with the Soviet Union will be broken.

Ford Gets the Boats

WASHINGTON, D. C. July 21.—The Emergency Fleet corporation has recommended acceptance of the $1,706,000 offer of Henry Ford for the 200 old ships which the government has placed on sale, it was announced today.

BARBAROUS SHANGHAI COUNCIL, RESPONSIBLE TO NOBODY, RAIDS SOVIET CONSULATE'S AUTHORITY

SHANGHAI, China, July 21.—That the secret decision of the great imperialist powers to ignore the first report of the Peking diplomatic corps on the Shanghai massacres on the public excuse that the diplomatic corps has no jurisdiction over the Shanghai foreign settlement, added to the fact that the foreign settlement's municipal council is traditionally free from the jurisdiction of China, has given rise to the assumption by the Shanghai municipal council that it is a sovereignity and power in itself apparently.

Only such a theory can account for the open and flagrant violation of international law by the Shanghai imperialists who, acting on the authority of the municipal council, ordered the telephone company to disconnect and remove all telephone from the consulate of Soviet Russia and put a horde of detectives to watch all visitors to the consulate.

Defy law and Invade Soviet Authority

In the opinion of Chinese authorities, this is a defiance of international law, an insult to China and a trespass on the sovereignty of Soviet Russia equal to an invasion of her soil.

It is pointed out that if the Shanghai municipal council continues to reject the authority of either China or the diplomatic corps, and acting as if it were an independent nation toward China and toward the citizens of Soviet Russia, it has need of finding allies, because such affronts as it is carrying on now against Chinese and Soviet citizens may be replied to with

20,000 SIBERIANS SEND GREETINGS TO CHINA WITH SOVIET AVIATORS

MOSCOW, June 20.—(By Mail.)—The aerial Moscow-Mongolia-China expedition is reported to have safely reached Omsk, western Siberia, where a welcome meeting was arranged in honor of the Soviet flyers. Over 20,000 people took part. A resolution was unanimously passed emphasizing the technical importance of the expedition and sending greetings to the friendly Chinese people.

Similar manifestations are reported from lal the places where the aviators stopped on their way.

RIFFIANS SMASH FRENCH FRONT AS TROOPS POUR IN

Krim Will Not Accept Fake 'Peace' Terms

PARIS, France, July 21.—The successes of the Riffians in Morocco continue, in spite of the fact that French troops are steadily pouring into North Africa. There are now 130,000 French soldiers opposing the Moroccans, and the number will be increased to 200,000 before the end of the month, the war office announces.

The sultan, puppet of the French, has enforced obligatory conscription, and the French are now taking Moroccans into their army at the point of the bayonet.

In desperate hand to hand fighting with the bayonet, 1,500 Riffians wiped out more than half the forces of the French garrison, near Teroual.

The railway into Fez has been cut and the French are now forced to use the motor highway to maintain communication.

Two French aviators, Capt. Volokoff and Lieut. France, were shot down by the Riffians. They were seriously hurt.

Abd-el-Krim has not yet replied to the Spanish-French "peace" terms, but it is felt he will not accept them, as he is ordered to accept a Spanish protectorate, which he has already refused to do.

Rumors persist that Marshal Lyautey is to be removed as military governor. It was said he opposed giving Marshal Petain command of the troops.

STORMY CONVENTION OF DISTRICT ONE, U. M. W. OF A., BEGINS WITH PROGRESSIVES UNITED FOR FIGHT

By AUGUST VALENTINO, Worker Correspondent.

WILKES-BARRE, Penn., July 19—(By Mail.)—What promises to be one of the most stormiest district conventions in the history of District 1, U. M. W. of A., will open in Wilkes-Barre, tomorrow. With the remnants of the Cappellini pre-election opposition going to the convention organized, instructed by the local unions and the various general grievance committees to flatly oppose the administration, appearances indicate anything but a harmonious gathering, insofar as "Rino" Cappellini is concerned.

Speaking before the Miners' Assembly in Wilkes-Barre last night, Pat Toohey laid down a definite and clear cut policy which should be followed by the anti-administration forces at the convention. The assembly is composed of all general grievance committees of the various coal companies in the lower Wilkes-Barre field, claiming jurisdiction over 30,000 miners of the local unions in this territory.

Must Organize the Fight.

Speaking on the absolute necessity of being organized to effectively fight the Cappelli machine, Toohey emphasized that in order to do this a committee selected from the assembly should lead the fight on every important matter arising before the convention, take advantage of every technicality of the law, be so organized that a fight on every important issue be assured.

Speaking on the issues which would undoubtedly come up for decisive action, which should be supported by the anti-administration delegation, it was pointed out that the fight to retain he general grievance committees, which Lewis and Cappellini jointly are attempting to dissolve, should be the chief issue of the convention.

Issues on Which to Fight.

The speaker was applauded when he stated a fundamental and necessary reform was the question of electing the organizer by the rank and file of the union and eliminating the present system of being appointed by the district president. The fight for

REPUBLICAN PARTY PAYS FARRINGTON'S MACHINE FOR HELP

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., July 21.—A. W. Kerr of Springfield, counsel for the United Mine Workers of Illinois has been named assistant attorney general, it became known today. Kerr will probably continue as head of the miners' legal staff.

Prior to the last primary election, Farrington, the labor leader at present the president of the Illinois Miners' Union, broadcasted circulars urging the re-election of the republican, Len Small for governor.

FARRINGTON'S FAT EXPENSE BILL PROVES HYPOCRISY OF ATTACKS MADE ON PROGRESSIVE MINERS

By ALEX REID.

(Secretary Progressive Miners' Committee)

ARTICLE I

Frank Farrington again gives vent to his customary vomit against the Illinois Progressive Miners. His latest attack is against President Freeman Thompson, John J. Watt, Secretary-Treasurer, and Tom Parry, Vice-President, all duly elected officers of Sub District Four, District Twelve, and all unconstitutionally removed from office by Farrington.

Right to Earn Living Illegally Denied.

Brothers Thompson, Watt and Parry are men with large families and their means of making a living being mainly cut off by Farrington, found it impossible to comply with the request from miners all over the state, that they visit the locals and expose the illegal work of Farrington, not only his illegal expulsions, but also his treason in the many other ways.

Threatens Expulsions.

Realizing that without some source of income, the miners' request would have to be dropped for the present at least, Joe Tumulty, another well known progressive miner of Springfield, sent out a curcular letter authorized by the Springfield Educational League calling for financial aid to Watt and Thompson, to enable them to respond to the miners' request.

In a circular letter, Farrington slightingly refers to Thompson, Watt and Parry as martyrs of the ruthless Farrington machine and well he may, as the miners are learning fast that their greatest enemy in the state is Farrington himself, and any miner is liable to be a martyr of his corrupt machine at any moment. Farrington's fear of the awakened coal miners is seen in his desperate effort to stop Thompson, Watt and Parry from ex-

COOLIDGE MUST HAVE ASKED JOHN L. LEWIS ABOUT COAL SITUATION

(Special to The Daily Worker)

SWAMPSCOTT, Mass., July 21.—President Coolidge, it was stated officially here today, does not believe there is particularly danger of a coal strike on September 1.

This impression, it was understood here, was given the president by Secretary of Labor Davis during his recent conference with the chief executive at White Court.

Commenting on the situation in the anthracite field, a presidential spokesman today asserted that a special session of congress to deal with any contingency that may arise is not likely.

ARREST 4 A. C. W. STRIKERS; WRIT TO BOSS BALKED

Postpone the Injunction Hearing Until Thurs.

Unable to rush thru an injunction against the striking members of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers' Union, the International Tailoring company yesterday again brot in the police, who arrested four of the pickets, three of whom were women strikers.

The hearing on the application of the clothing bosses for an injunction which came up yesterday before Judge Hugo Pam, room 941 County building, continued until Thursday. Attorney William A. Cunnea told the judge that the new bill drawn up by attorneys for the company was not properly filed, and could not be pleaded.

Judge Pam was forced to make the postponement, the fifth one since the company asked court aid, when it was learned the new bill for an injunction did not have the stamp of the city clerk upon it.

Strikers Show Enthusiasm.

Great enthusiasm was shown at the strike meeting at the Hod Carriers Hall, 814 West Harrison, yesterday. The strikers frequently applauded the speakers. One of the officers of the union told how one of the strikers received a letter from an out of town agent who had been buying suits from the International Tailoring company.

This agent sent in an order for one suit before the strike broke out, and it was only delivered last Friday, a month after the order was sent in. A second order sent in after the strike started was not filled, the company declaring they were "in no position to fill orders."

Call Picketing "Assault."

Rose Cicola, 230 Alexander St., was held on $1,000 bond charged with "assault and battery." The three other pickets arrested, charged with "disorderly conduct," were Encetti Oddi, 1338 Edgemont Ave., Sarah Mondello, 6205 S. Hermitage Ave., and Frank Fjogert, 1121 S. Wabash Ave. They were released on $400.00 bond.

Frank Fojert was taken to the bureau of identification, where his fingerprints were taken. The cases will come before Judge William Fetzer this morning.

Speakers at the strike meeting included Isadore Rothbart, business agent for the pantsmakers. Brother Spitzer and Brother Babrofski of Local Union No. 38.

To Argue Constitutionality.

The original bill for an injunction filed by the International Tailoring company was ruled out when Cunnea showed Judge Foell that contrary to law two corporations, the J. L. Taylor company, and the International, had asked an injunction in an identical bill. Foell then went on his vacation and the clothing bosses drew up new bills, which have not yet been filed properly.

Thursday the demurrer of the defense, branding the issuance of an injunction against picketing as a violation of the newly passed state anti-injunction bill, will be argued before Judge Pam.

CHINESE BOYCOTT TO BE AIR-TIGHT ON AUGUST FIRST

Consternation Seizes British and Japs

SHANGHAI, China, July 21—The Chinese general chamber of commerce exploded a bombshell here yesterday when it met and decided to start an active anti-British boycott commencing Aug. 1, with complete cessation of business relations with two countries.

The boycott is to apply to every phase of business and the Chinese members of the chamber agree to heavy fines and confiscation of goods if any merchant is cought acting contrary to the decision.

For the Thirteen Demands.

The meeting sanctioned these proposals offered by the vice-president of the chamber, Fang Hsia-pah, and decided to extend the boycott one year in order to compel the British and Japanese to agree to the thirteen demands of the Shanghai Chinese.

Both British and Japanese have already lost heavily from the present boycott, but their losses are expected to be greater from the more systematic boycott ordered by the chamber.

Halts Collaboration.

The conference of the foreign chambers of commerce which was to have been held yesterday to discuss the question of a strike settlement and negotiations with the Chinese general chamber was not held owing to the reversal of the Chinese attitude.

The foreign chambers are willing to recommend Chinese representation on the municipal council and rendition of the mixed court to Chinese control.

acts of war. If such measures were taken, the council would probably discover that it was a British-American protectorate, with Japan expressing a friendly "neutrality."

More American Strike Breaker

The "boss" of the council is Stirling Fessenden, an American, and the troops have been British for the most part, as were these who started the massacre on May 30. More American naval units, consisting of sailors, were landed yesterday to break the strike at the wharves. There are few scabs.

The Chinese chamber of commerce vacillating as do all petty bourgeois in a revolutionary crisis, though not demanding complete withdrawal of all imperialist jurisdiction and limiting this political demand to a mere sharing in representation on the municipal council, asserts that it has backing enough to enforce the boycott against the British for a whole year if need be.

Coolidge Would Put Navy on War Footing, Appoints Senator

SWAMPSCOTT, Mass., July 21.—President Coolidge has commissioned Senator Hale, republican of Maine, chairman of the senate naval committee, to make an extensive study of the navy before the assembling of congress in December to determine whether there are any useless activities that may be abolished, it was announced at White Court today.

The executive is most anxious to effect every possibly saving in the naval budget in order that the cost of the navy building program authorized in the last session from congress may be at least partially offset.

Senator Hale conferred with the President yesterday and urged that a new naval base be constructed at Almeda, Calif.

SUN YAT SEN'S WIDOW DECLARES FOR STRUGGLE "BY ALL MEANS"; NO FEAR OF BOLSHEVIST CHARGE

(By Rosta News Agency.)

SHANGHAI, China, June 16—(By Mail.)—In an interview granted to the Ming Kuo Chi-pao, an organ of the Kuomintang, Mrs. Sun Yat Sen, widow of the great Chinese national leader, observed that the Shanghai events formed the first step made by the Chinese people in the struggle against foreign oppression. She also voiced her regret that as yet this national revolutionary movement was poorly organized.

"We need not fear that foreigners accuse us of Bolshevism; we must struggle for our country's national freedom with all available means." Mrs. Sun Yat Sen is further quoted to say, "What we must carefully avoid is dispensions in our own ranks. We must be against any compromising decisions and demand the abolition of unequal treaties. That, in my opinion, is the only way to free China from foreign oppression and prevent the recurrence in future of events similar to the recent Shanghai outrages."

rulings wiped out the defense's case and Scopes' attorneys immediately agreed to have the jury instructed to bring in a verdict of guilty.

The last straw was a ruling by Raulston this morning expunging the testimony of William Jennings Bryan, placed on the witness stand yesterday by Scopes' attorneys to prove that the greatest fundamentalist of them all did not believe in a literal translation of the bible story of divine creation. With their scientists and bible students barred the defense surrendered.

Bryan's Speech Bottled Up

The sudden wind up excluded Bryan from making the closing speech to the jury, which he was said to have prepared in Florida two months ago. This address was to have been an epochal defense of christianity. Reports indicated Bryan would make a speech on the court house lawn tonight.

Scopes to Go to University

It also brought an offer from Prof. Kirtley F. Mather, Harvard scientist to raise $5,000 to finances Scopes for a course in high Universities. This was said to be the defendant's sole wish, as a result of his role in the anti-evolution trial.

Scopes took the verdict with slight emotion.

State Had Four Witnesses

The verdict was based on the testimony of four state witnesses, who said Scopes had taught the theory of evolution from Hunter's biology. They were Harry Shelton and Howard Morgan, two of the pupil in' Scopes school, Walter White, the county superintendent of schools, and F. Earl Robinson, chairman of the county board of education.

Robinson added that Scopes had admitted to him his teaching of the Hunter's version of biology was a violation of the state law.

That was the state's case but the defense attorney's could not break it down. In order to get an appeal case, they had to admit Scopes taught evolution and the court overruled their motion to quash the indictment on constitutional grounds. With this ruling, the defense based all its efforts on writing into the records of the trial the foundation for an appeal to higher courts.

Professors Attempted Reconciliation

Only two defense witnesses were summoned, Dr. Maynard M. Metcalf, a scientist, and William Jennings Bryan, but the jury heard none of their testimony and only the scientists testimony went into the record.

The defense, however, inserted a 65,000 word brief from eight nationally known scientists, all of whom attempted to reconcile evolution to the biblical story of the divine creation..

Get 30 Days to File Appeal

Announcement was made that a Baltimore newspaper had agreed to go on Scopes' bond under the appeal.

Then Dudley Field Malone, of defense counsel, arose and thanked the "state of Tennessee and its hospitable people for permitting us to try these great issues here."

The court then gave the defense thirty days in which to prepare their appeal and the trial was ended.

Judge Says He's Guilty

A chance remark by the Judge signalled the collapse of the trial. In commenting on the exclusion of religious witnesses, the judge said the only question before him was whether Scopes taught evolution and he thot the professor had.

"Well, if he's guilty," drawled the imperturbable Darrow, "There's nothing left but to bring in the verdict."

With that, Darrow approached the Judge's stand, called the state's attorneys to his side and said, "I'll enter into an agreement right now to have my client found guilty and we'll end the trial."

"That suits me," said Attorney General A. Thomas Stewart, chief of prosecution.

"We'll All Go Home"

"All right, it's all over now," Darrow said with a snap of his suspenders. "Let the clerk enter it on the record and we'll all go home."

"Let's have it regular," retorted Stewart. "The Judge should instruct the jury. We can waive closing arguments, but you can't waive the verdict and expect to appeal the case."

"Well, I'll leave that to you Tennessee lawyers," Darrow replied.

"Will you help me arrange our appeal?" Darrow asked Stewart.

"Yes sir, we'll do all we can."

The attorneys then told the judge they wanted him to instruct the jury without hearing closing arguments or any further testimony. The judge agreed, recessing court to prepare his charge.

Bryan Still Thunders

Bryan charged the defense with "hiding behind a screen of the law."

"I object to that," Darrow shouted.

"We are willing to meet Mr. Bryan for further discussion of this subject in any forum that he chooses," shouted Dudley Field Malone.

Announcing that he would expunge Bryan's testimony, the judge said:

"Since the beginning of this trial, the judge has had many big problems to act upon. If I have made a mistake, we shall find out when the higher courts pass upon this case. If I did err, it was an error of the heart and not of the mind.

Judge Again Reverses Himself

"As I see it, there are two ways by which the court might commit error, first, by passion of the mind, and second, by an overzeal to be fair. Only yesterday the court feels he showed an overzeal in permitting Mr. Bryan to testify.

"I feel that the testimony of Mr. Bryan can shed no light upon any issue before a higher court. The issue is whether Mr. Scopes taught that man came from a lower order of animals. It is not a question whether god created man all at once or whether god created him by a slow process.

"As I see it after due deliberation, Mr. Bryan's testimony can not aid the higher courts in determining that issue. Therefore I am pleased to expunge the testimony of Mr. Bryan from the record."

French Scientists Indignant

PARIS, July 21.—French intellectuals and scientists, including Mme. Irene Curie, whose research work with radium has been of monumental service to medicine, took up the cudgel against Tennessee's anti-evolution law today.

Professors of the university of Paris and members of the French academy of science were signers of the resolution circulated decrying the Dayton trial. It read:

"The undersigned energetically protest the Dayton trial as a violation of the freedom of thought.

"Neither religious nor political powers can assume the right to forbid any form of human thought. Our indignant protests against the Dayton trial are not only a defense of a fecund scientific theory but also of the right of freedom of thought, which hitherto never has been ignored by the great American nation."

Appeal in September.

Scopes filed his $500 bond with the clerk of the circuit court. It was signed by N. S. Sloan, attorney for a Maryland surety company. It was made returnable at the December term of Judge Raulston's court, altho the appeal to the Tennessee supreme court will be made in September.

"We declare that we shall not pledge ourselves to the so-called 'agreements' that the Joint Board will make with the cloak manufacturers. The only body that represents at present the interests of the cloak makers is the Joint Action Committee.

"We pledge ourselves to aid and support with all our strength the Joint Action Committee and to stand by them as long as our struggle for control of the union by its members will be crowned by success."

District 1, U. M. W. A. Convention Stirred by Fistic Battling

WILKESBARRE, Pa., July 21—The biennial convention of the hard coal miners of District One opened yesterday, with a fist fight among some of the delegates. The fight that was raging here today will be lost sight of in the more important fight to come between the reactionary and progressive elements, commencing probably tomorrow.

President Cappellini, the present incumbent is being challenged by his brother faker (Brennan) on the election returns, claiming that the returns, claiming that the returns were fraudulent, and that he, Brennan, was properly elected. This claim undoubtedly is true, but it would be the same if Brennan were in and Cappellini were out. George Isaacs, Brennan supporter, received a broken arm in the scrimmage.

The Progressive Miners at the convention are being entertained by the Cappellini-Brennan forces fighting for office and the spoils thereof. They see in both fakers enemies of progress, and enemies of the progressive miners. They remember that Brennan and Cappellini joined hands to defeat Alex Howat, and never lost an opportunity to hit at the opposition to the Lewis machine. Their fight is a fakers' fight for personal power and the progressive miners in the convention are getting some amusement watching the leeches perform.

A CORRECTION

Due to a case of mistaken identity the DAILY WORKER in yesterday's report of last Sunday's meeting of the Chicago Federation of Labor, credited delegate Wait with having joined in the attack on the Communists which was initiated by the scurrilous letter sent out by the executive council to its affiliated local unions.

The delegates mistaken for Wait is a person by the name of Ferris. As the DAILY WORKER takes pride in its accurate reports of meetings, it regrets the mistake and herewith makes a correction.

Goose-Steppers Gather to Get Correct Line in Support of the Bosses

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

TODAY, a host of capitalist apologists and defenders are hurrying to Williamstown, Mass., for the annual orgy of anti-labor discussion that passes under the title of "The Institute of Politics."

Sessions during recent years have been featured by a flood of propaganda against the Union of Soviet Republics, with carefully selected speakers, including the renegade "socialist" John Spargo and the "Russian ambassador without a government," Boris Bakhmetieff, subsidized for years by the American government, altho the Kerensky government he was supposed to represent had long gone to its doom.

It is significant that the "more than 200 college professors, diplomats, editors, army and navy officers, and other specialists in foreign affairs," as the New York Times tells us, will have the question of "Fascism" at the head of this year's program.

Count Antonio Cippico, the Italian fascist senator, staunch supporter of the bloody Mussolini regime, will give two lectures on the "glories" of fascism in Italy. No workers' representative will have a voice there. The American workers must be told, thru the capitalist press that they read, of the benefits of this anti-Communist regime. No contradiction, raising the truth from labor's viewpoint will be permitted. That is in harmony with the best traditions of American "goose-step" culture.

Advertised as an attraction of equal importance with the fascist count, there is heralded Count Alexander Skrzynski, the Polish minister of foreign affairs, who is doubling during his visit in this country. Between lectures on "America and Polish Democracy," he will be hanging around Wall Street, trying to get a loan from the House of Morgan, or any of the other international bankers. The Polish count, a great landlord, is foreign minister in the infamous Grabski government, that murders and imprisons workers wholesale, orders mass persecutions on the slightest pretext feeling its tottering existence constantly endangered, and carries out the most ruthless campaigns against the Ukrainian and White Russian peoples still within its borders.

These two speakers, oppressors of the workers in their own countries, typify the whole Williamstown program, that seeks to put an intellectual veneer over the barbarous brutalities of the capitalist social order. Every speaker will be a fundamentalist insofar as the profit system is concerned.

The Dawes plan will be glorified by such as Robert Masson, French financier and head of the Credit Lyonnais; the League of Nations will be revivified for American consumption under the direction of Dr. William E. Rappard, member of "The League's" Permanent Mandates Commission, while the crisis growing out of the murder of Chinese workers and students has been pushed down near the end of the program, altho it may develop into the most interesting discussion.

The importance that the master class attaches to this gathering is clearly shown by the fact that the writer for the New York Times reporting the discussions at "the institute" received one of the annual Pulitzer prizes in journalism, which of course is offered in the shape of good American cash.

It is important to exploiters' rule that the "correct capitalist line" as it is laid down by the subsidized intelligentsia of the ruling class, meeting annually at Williamstown, in the heart of Coolidge's "open shop" New England, should be carefully and correctly passed on to the hundreds of thousands of "goose-step" teachers in the schools, colleges and universities of the nation. Thus the writers who obediently and successfully perform this task receive their reward, in order that others may be encouraged to do likewise.

"Williiamstown, Mass." will again be a concentration spot of the enemies of labor during the next four weeks.

row reminded him of the devil. Bryan's face reminds us very forcibly of a boiled ham, tho when animated it bears a resemblance to the face of a Rotarian at an old-fashioned burlesque show. What's in a face anyhow? It all depends on what is inside the face. Bryan's testimony proves that a man with a glib tongue can get along in capitalist society, tho he may not have enough brains in his thinking tank to make a speck on a pin head.

ONE of the favorite jabs against social revolutionists was, that they were against religion and the family. This nonsense was swallowed by the unthinking. As a matter of fact the evolution of the machinery of production or "the tool" as an S. L. P.-ite would put it, did more to send religion howling on the vacant lot than all the propagandists that were ever born. Capitalism has brought the industrial machine to a point of development which makes Communism not only possible but essential. And this gigantic and complicated industrial machine cannot be operated by mental defectives who believe that an ancient flea-bitten medicineman like Joshua, could stop the planets from revolving by holding up his hands.

IF there is another pen prostitute in the United States more revoltingly disgusting than Arthur Brisbane, we have not yet gotten on his trail. What makes Brisbane so dangerous is his unique style, a style that goes down easily with those who want to get their reading served up in an easily digestible form, as most everybody does. When not engaged in the task of selling real estate in his column, he is boosting airplanes. He learns that the French are sending a big fleet of airplanes to bomb Riffian villages.

THIS pleases the erstwhile radical. "That is wondreful practice for the French airmen, not pleasant for the Riffs," he comments. Perhaps it may not be so pleasant for the French airmen either. And here is Arthur again on the same subject: "The French feel that in dealing roughly with the Riffs they are protecting christian civilization from Moslem conquest in 1925 as that early Frenchman, Charles the Hammer, did many years ago." Brisbane writes this with his tongue in his cheek. The present French government is largely composed of members of the Grand Orient wing of the Masonic Order. The Grand Orient does not let christianity interfere with its business.

THE French airmen are bombing the Riffians in order to get a strangle hold on the mineral wealth of Morocco. Christian civilization or any other kind of civilization has no more to do with the matter than it had with the world war, when "civilization" demanded the defeat of the German empire. The French are murdering the Riffians for the same reasons that the British are murdering the Chinese, the Hindoos and the Egyptians. Plunder and profit is the reason. There is no other.

THE British in Shanghai have cut the telephone connections of the Soviet consulate in order to prevent communications with the outside. This is going pretty far. There is a real, tho unofficial war on today between the British empire and Soviet Russia. So far the empire is getting the worst of it. It is no secret that Britain would make a formal declaration against Russia, but for two main reasons: fear of the working class at home and fear of rebellions in India and Egypt, with a general anti-British uprising against British domination in the Orient. Let the British watch out! They feared the white bear that "walked like a man" but they have more reason to fear the red bear that walks like millions of men.

District No. One Meets in Convention

the Edwardsville miners, for Sacco and Vanzetti, amending the constitution pertaining to the elections, for a labor party, and other issues were touched on by the speaker.

Wm. J. Brennan, speaking after Toohey made bold to assert that "the policies enunciated by the brother exactly coincide with the, principles which I have long held" and later on "buth due to the fear of the reaction, should they be stated publicly, I didn't mention them during the campaign." Forced to declare his position on the appointive power Brennen said "that it was due to the fact that since I was district president for two years and said nothing about it then, that I didn't say anything about it during the campaign, but, certainly the next international convention will find me using al' my power and influence to amend the constitution to have organizers elected by the rank and file.

Time Will Tell.

Brennan is a labor faker. Time will tell if he does as he pledged. If he opposes the appointive power at the next convention it is certain Lewis will lose, as Brennan assuredly will swing many votes against him. By the officials' own crooked count at the last convention the left wing was counted out of this victory by a meager 157 votes.

The assembly selected a steering committee of seven men, from among the elected delegates to the convention, whose duty it will be to lead the fight on all anti-Cappellini measures.

That the convention will be packed to the very roof with Cappellini supporters is evidenced by the fact that all locals of the Penna. Coal Co. are sending a delegate for every vote entitled. Some locals are sending 15 or more delegates. Cappellini is using everything at his command to pack the convention solidly with his supporters. One local union which never paid tax on more than 1,000 members, for the months of April and May paid tax on 6,500 members and will send a delegate for every vote!

The Woodward situation will, it is expected, be the fight of the convention. After revoking the charter of Local 699 and issuing another charter to the Dunn faction of the local, an insignificant minority, the Lewis-Cappellini gang recognized Dunn as the "bona-fide" president. The new local does not function, with all its new charters and supplies. Altho functioning as a local, collecting dues, etc., the old local, 699, is not recognized by either the district or International officers.

Big Fight Over Local 699.

Local 699 will send a delegation to the district convention. The fight will be waged for their being seated as delegates. If they are seated it means Lewis is whipped in District One.

Trouble is expected also on the tabulating of votes cast by the locals in the recent election. George Isaacs, vice president, will wage a fight on the grounds he was illegally counted out. Isaacs opposed the Cappellini slate. Cappellini will be called to account, if reports are true from various delegates, for refusing to call the special convention several months ago when sufficient locals demanded it.

On all of the chief issues the opposition will fight with the district law as a basis for their position.

The DAILY WORKER correspondent will report every session of the convention.

One particular characteristic which the Brennan group has evidenced is their utter bankruptcy, organizationally. The Brennan group has no objective, but their self, no program which appeals to the rank and file, not a shadow of an organization to fight the well equipped, well organize machine of Lewis and Cappellini.

Progressive Miners Only Clean Fighters.

It will not be the Brennan group who will be responsible for any reforms in District One. There will be at the convention adherents and supporters of the principles enunciated by the Communists and the progressive miners. It will be this group which will have the only definite, clear and practical policy, this group knows how to fight the combination that is wrecking the miners' union.

The delegates to this convention will have many things to decide. The proper path is pointed out in the program of the Communists and progressives of District One.

American Imperialism Arming for the Fight Against Chinese Workers

"IT is interesting to note that American imperialism has now thrown aside its mask. As is known, it has come forward as 'the protector' of China, only acting out of 'benevolence.' Not only has the American consul in the province of Fukien had numerous arrests carried out among the students on account of their participation in the anti-christian movement, while on his instructions the governor of Fukien has caused several students to be shot, but in Shanghai the Americans are also arming for the fight against the Chinese."—By TANG SHIN SEE, in "The Struggle in Shanghai and Its Significance."

CALL WORLD LABOR TO ACT FOR CHINESE

French and British Communists Appeal

(By Rosta Service)

MOSCOW, June 18.—(By Mail)—M. Brown and M. Semar, members of the British and French Communist Parties, respectively, have, under their joint signatures, published a declaration, in which they state that if the Second International and the Amsterdam International Federation of Trade-Unions agree to the proposition of the Comintern (Communist International) and the Profintern (International of Red Labor Unions) regarding joint assistance to China, "the warships and machine guns of the imperialists will have no force against such organized united front of the working class."

No Technical Delay.

This proposition must be quickly accepted; declining it for any formal reasons or otherwise would be disastrous. There is yet another possibility, which must be carefully avoided, namely that the Second and the Amsterdam Internationals might try either to dodge their answer or even seize upon the opportunity to use the proposal for polemic purposes.

Immediate measures must be taken, the authors of the declaration urge, to secure the active unity of the front of world labor with the Chinese people against international imperialism. The steps taken in England for organizing a united workmen's front on a naitonal scale are bound to influence the Second International and the Amsterdam organization.

British Unions Stand True.

Such activity on the part of the British working class is the more important, remark Comrades Brown and Semar, as it shows that while Britain is the directing and active factor of international imperialism in China, the British workers are taking a new stand against imperialism. It is indeed interesting to note that less than a year ago, the left wing of the British labor movement was unable to make the labor organization support China.

Quick Action Imperative.

There is no doubt but that the minority of the Amsterdam Trade-Union Federation is sincerely in favor of unity of the labor movement and will welcome an attempt to organize support of the Chinese people to a large scale. Be it as it may, any attempt to dodge or decline the proposition of the Comintern and the Profintern will only result in bringing discredit upon the Second International and the Amsterdam International Federation of Trade-Unions in the eyes not only of the Chinese people, but of all the awakening peoples of the East and the working masses of the world which still have confidence in them.

"Our work"—concludes the declaration under review—"will be successful only when we realize that the Chinese events are of an exceptional importance for all mankind. What we repeat and emphasize is that: not one minute must be lost!"

TSING HUA COLLEGE STUDENTS OF PEKING ISSUE A SLASHING ATTACKS ON ANGLO-JAP MURDERS

The DAILY WORKER has received, by the kindness of a Chinese student at Cornell University, a copy of a publication issued by the students of the Tsing Hua College of Peking concerning the "Shanghai Crisis." Among other interesting matter is contained the following manifesto of the Tsing Hua student council:

Tsing Hua Students' Manifesto.

China, the great nation, has long been suffering the bondage of foreign oppression. However, in all circumstances, she has been patient and generous, extending her hospitality to all alike that inhabit and visit her ground. Her people, lovers of peace and order, have maintained thruout the ages an attitude of goodwill and friendship toward her neighbors.

Alas! Her hope of peace has been again and again obstructed by some that live right under her patronage and hospitality! Ingratitude and injustice that you find in this world are no more despicable than this! The most outrageous act of the British and Japanese happened in Shanghai a few days ago.

Our fellow students of Shanghai, in sympathy with the Chinese laborers who had been killed by the Japanese mills, were out lecturing in the streets one day. The right of free speech as so strongly advocated by these so-called civilized countries, to our great surprise, was denied to them.

The British policemen forced the unarmed lecturers to disperse by gunshots. As a consequence several of our brethren were killed. This is the story sufficient to harrow our souls and freeze our blood! Rise up, you owners of this great land!

We, the students of Tsing Hua College, are indignant over this brutal treatment of students by the British and Japanese authorities and so have prepared this manifesto that it may be circulated to the effect that we, as Chinese, representing the republic and standing for our national sovereignty, should present a united front against foreign oppression!

In any country, the function of the police is to preserve order and its deemed a breach of law to abuse their weapons.

The "accident" recently occurred in Shanghai is therefore unprecedented. There is absolutely no pretext in defense of the British policemen's action. It is evidently an act of atrocity and an expression of foe.

How, on the earth, could the foreigners treat life so lightly and slaughter our brethren at their will? Do they think that we have no resistance, so they can commit any foul deed to their advantage? We shall teach them this time that they are altogether mistaken! In settlement of this outrage, it is our opinion that it is incumbent on the whole Chinese nation to lodge a strong protest with the British and Japanese authorities with the following demands:

1. The restoration to China of all British and Japanese concessions and leased territories.
2. Immediate abolition of extra-territorial rights.
3. An apology from the British and Japanese governments.
4. Punishment of the police, who fired the fatal volley.
5. Removal from post the British and Japanese consuls at Shanghai.
6. Payment of an indemnity to the injured and the dead.
7. Immediate release of the students arrested.
8. The British and Japanese governments should guarantee against the recurrence of outrage of similar character.

Let all those, upholding the dignity of the Chinese student-body, of China as a nation, of justice and humanity, and as sincere and firm believers of world peace and international friendship, hereby proclaim any and all elements that stand in opposition to our hopes and expectation the bitterest adversaries of mankind!

PHILADELPHIA WORKERS CHEER FOR FREE CHINA

Chinese Student Sees Soviet China

By R. BAKER.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., July 21—The workers of Philadelphia for the second time demonstrated their international solidarity at the united front "Hands Off China" mass meeting arranged by the Workers Party and the Y. W. L.

M. Yusem, representing the Y. W. L. expressed the position of the Young Commenist International and its American section pledging full support to the striking Chinese workers.

John Pauu of the Richmond University, spoke in the name of the Kuomintang and was greeted with tremendous applause.

"We are friends of Soviet Russia because Soviet Russia is our friend," and "we will do all in our power to see that the Chinese people establish a form of government as near as possible to the Russian Soviet government" were some of the oustanding statements of Pauu that received the applause and approval of the audience.

The following resolution introduced by R. Baker, secretary of the Workers Party was passed by a unanimous vote:

"We, the workers of Philadelphia, gathered in the mass meeting on July 17, 1925 declare: That the continued extension of American, French, British and Japanese imperialism into all parts of the world, and particularly in the Orient, is a danger not only to the hundreds of millions of colonial and semi-colonial peoples, but to all the workers of the world.

"The struggle for world domination is leading up to a new world war, with its slaughter of the workers so as to give new and greater profits to the ruling class.

"The struggle of Chinese workers, peasants and students in their present revolt against world imperialism marks the dawn of a new day. It means the beginning of a smash-up in the very heart of the stronghold of imperialism. Its suppression would be a blow to the entire working class.

"We therefore pledge our full support to our struggling brothers in China and demand of the United States government: Hands off China."

Comrade Oliver Carlson, director of the Workers School of New York, was the principal speaker. He dwelt at length with the history of imperialism in China and the Orient, and pointed out that the Orient today is the key to the world situation. Carlson ended with an appeal for closer co-operation of the American workers with the struggling workers of China and closer fraternal bonds between the Workers Party and the Kuomintang.

Authorities said Bradfute admitted his guilt.

PROTEST OF THE COMMUNIST PARTY OF PALESTINE AGAINST ANGLO-EGYPTIAN CLASS JUSTICE

The central committee of the Communist Party of Palestine appeals to all workers and peasants to protest in the sharpest manner against the foul and shameful mass murder on the part of Anglo-Egyptian justice against eight accused in the Lee Stack trial.

This murder is one of the most shameful acts of revenge which English imperialism has committed in order to terrorize the enslaved masses in the Orient.

Further, the central committee of the Communist Party of Palestine appeals to all workers, peasants and revolutionary organizations in the country to commence a great mass protest movement for the purpose of showing to the imperialist hangmen that, in spite of bloody death sentences and cannon, they will not succeed in strangling the movement for emancipation in the suppressed countries of the East.

NEW YORK WORKERS PARTY CALLS ON ALL TRADE UNIONS TO DEMAND IMPERIALISTS KEEP OUT OF CHINA

NEW YORK, N. Y., July 20.—The Workers (Communist) Party, New York district, has sent a call to 1,200 trade unions, fraternal bodies and other workers' organizations, for united action of the workers of America against the intervention of American and world imperialism to exploit the Chinese workers.

International solidarity of the workers against the murder rule and bloody oppression of the foreign imperialists in China is the demand of the Workers Party.

The letter signed by Charles Krumbein, district organizer, follows:

"Dear Sirs and Brothers:

"The Chinese people are waging a valiant struggle for their independence and against the brutal oppression of the foreign imperialists. The toiling masses of China demand that the imperialists get out of China and let the Chinese people develop freely their own lives and manage their own affairs.

Imperialists Murder Rule

"But the rapacious imperialists of America, England, Japan and France, the capitalist powers that are holding China in their grip, refuse to accede to the rightful demands of the Chinese people. Foreign imperialism is determined to hold on to China by sheer force, by jailing, persecution and wholesale murder.

"At this very moment the imperialists of England and Japan are carrying on a joint military intervention to subdue the revolt of the Chinese masses. At the same time the imperialists and militarists are using the Chinese situation as a pretext to mobilize their forces to a new attack on Soviet Russia.

"These efforts of the bankers and imperialists mean a new world war in which the workers will be sacrificed for the greed and profits of big business. They mean more suffering and misery for the masses of England, France and Japan, as well as for the people of China.

United Action For Chinese

"The situation demands united action of all working class forces in support of the just demands of the Chinese people for "Hands off China." It calls for energetic action to stand by Soviet Russia. The labor movement of the United States is vitally interested in the success of the struggles of the Chinese workers against their capitalist exploiters and the freedom of China from the imperialists, as well as in preventing new alliances against Soviet Russia."

"Realizing the gravity of the situation and the duties that it imposes upon the labor movement of the United States, the Workers Party of America calls upon your organization to join hands in a United Front conference for common action in support of the struggles of the Chinese people. We request your organization to select two delegates to the conference to be held on Monday, August 3, 8 p. m. at Stuyvesant Casino, 142 Second Ave., New York, to make the following demands:

Demand "Hands Off China"

"1. The withdrawal from China of the imperialists and their armed forces.

"2. The cancellation of all treaties humiliating to China, and the cancellation of the extra-territorial rights for foreigners.

"3. Grant the demands of the Chinese workers now on strike.

"4. The immediate trial of all those guilty and responsible for the killing of the workers and students in Shanghai, Hankow, Cindow, etc.

"5. Opposition to the new efforts of the imperialists against Soviet Russia.

Connecticut Labor Also Demands Hands Off Chinese Workers

NEW HAVEN, Conn., July 21.—Recently, four meetings have been held in the Connecticut district of the Workers Party. On Saturday, July 11, 350 workers attended the Central Green Bandstand meeting in New Haven. On Tuesday, July 14th 250 were at the corner of Buckingham and Main Sts., in Hartford, the state capital. On Thursday, July 16th 250 were near the Post Office in Springfield, Mass. On Monday, July 6, a meeting was held in the colored section of New Haven at Dixwell cor. Webster. All of these meetings were addressed by district organizer William Simons.

These meetings met with great success, the audience being in sympathy with the cause of the Chinese strikers in their demand for economic betterment and for political freedom. Bridgeport has already arranged a meeting and Stamford will follow suit. On Wednesday, a local membership meeting of Springfield considered party activities.

In Hartford, a special C. C. C. meeting took place after the open air meeting, where plans were laid for a further meeting in conjunction with the Kuomintang party of Hartford.

TOPEKA COUNCIL FAVORS CHINESE LIBERATION MOVE

Kansas Workers Wise to Imperialism

By JESSE A. KEEBLE.
Worker Correspondent.

TOPEKA, Kan.—The last meeting of the Topeka industrial council was not as large as usual. This was partly due to the intensely hot evening and partly to the fact that a good many of the delegates were attending a protest meeting at the Y. W. C. A. in conjunction with the W. C. T. U. and several other organizations to prevent the adoption of the Winston primer as a text book in the Kansas schools. What the meeting lacked in numbers it made up in enthusiasm.

Favors Chinese Liberation.

The following resolution was introduced by Delegate J. T. Filler from the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen and unanimously adopted:

"WHEREAS, the exploiters of labor in England, France, Japan and the United States, in order to evade paying the required standard of wages of these respective countries, have invested their capital in China and Mexico, and at this moment are carrying on a joint military intervention to subdue the revolt of the Chinese masses, Means War.

"This means war, this means the sacrifice of thousands of people on the altar of capitalism; it means more suffering and misery for the masses of England, America, Mexico, Japan and France as well as the people of China.

"The labor movement of the United States is vitally interested in the success of the struggle of the Chinese workers against the capitalist exploiters as well as the struggles of the Chinese people for national freedom and independence.

Demands A. F. of L. Act.

"Therefore be it resolved that the industrial council of Topeka, Kansas, call upon the executive committee of the American Federation of Labor to use all the influence and power at their command to arouse the working class of America to the enormity of the situation.

Be it further resolved, that a copy of these resolutions be given to the labor press for publication."

Wants "Labor College."

Mr. Tom Tilma, editor of the labor paper at Wichita, Kansas, was present and made an excellent talk urging the workers here to start a labor college here, soon after Labor Day, to study economics from a laborer's viewpoint and other things of vital interest to labor.

It was voted to take up for discussion at the next industrial council the question of an open forum to get speakers to talk to the laborers and discuss labor subjects.

Mr. Chas. Snyder of the Broommakers' Union will give a lecture at the next council meeting of the Topeka industrial council, describing the broom factory at the Missouri penitentiary.

Mr. Snyder was employed as foreman in the prison boorm factory for several months so knows all the inside workings of that prison slave pen.

Prison Graft.

In talking with Mr. Stifler he said that during the four months that he worked at the prison 1,650 dozen brooms were sunk in the Missouri river to get rid of them. A large graft was made in selling supplies to the state so when the goods wouldn't sell, they were destroyed to make room for the purchase of more supplies.

ties in the concessions and the killing of a few dozens of the Chinese students by the foreign police in the course of a peaceful demonstration.

"It seemed like a local incident and could have been easily settled. But you must know that this incident was only an occasion of the present movement, the underlying causes of which are far deeper and far more complicated. The first shot in Shanghai sounded to me like the fall of the bastile in France and the first death-bell to the imperialistic domination in China. It really opens a new chapter in the history of China.

"Now I am going to point out to you some of the underlying causes of the unrest in China.

Causes Explained.

"The first and immediate cause is the intolerable conditions of the Chinese workers themselves. With the industrialization of China, the Chinese workers suffered the same sad lot as their brothers in other industrialized countries.

"Low wages, long hours of work, child work, unsanitary conditions, etc., these are the evils as a sequence of the industrialization. Their immediate demand is economical, that is, the improvement of their economic conditions. It is a just demand.

"The second underlying cause is the economical exploitation of the country at large by the foreign capitalists. Started as a local incident, the movement has spread rapidly as a protest against the foreign exploitation in general. The Chinese people as individuals and China as a nation are the economical slaves of the capitalistic countries. These capitalists with the support of their respective governments have extorted from China concessions of various kinds, railways, mines, forests and so forth. It made China a working nation under the foreign capitalistic domination.

Foreigners Are Exploiters

"I may frankly tell you that the Chinese people are fighting foreigners now not because they are foreigners but because these foreigners are also exploiters. In other words, the present movement is not an anti-foreign movement, as some people are led to believe, but it is a movement against the foreign exploitation.

"We Chinese people are too internationally-minded to be anti-foreign. Confucius, our great teacher says: 'Within the four seas, we are all brothers.' Confucius in his youth, as he told us, was a cowboy and a watchman to a certain noble.

Confucius Would Join Workers Party

"If he lived today, I believe, he would certainly belong to a workers' party. In China at present it is not only a class struggle but also a struggle of the oppressed nation with the imperialistic nations.

"The third underlying cause of the present unrest is the political domination of China by the foreign powers. China is not only an economical slave but also a political slave. She has no tariff autonomy. She cannot protect some of her industries, that need protection. She cannot raise enough revenue to establish a stable government that can maintain order and peace.

"The foreign concessions in the various treaty ports serve nothing but as a ground for both undesirable Chinese and foreigners to commit various kinds of crimes.

"These concessions together with the so-called extra-territoriality or consular jurisdiction not only impairs the Chinese sovereignty and political and administrative integrity, but they also made any political and judicial reforms difficult if not impossible to work.

"And then a stable government is hardly possible when the foreign powers are intriguing in and interfering with the Chinese politics today supporting one faction, tomorrow another faction to promote their own selfish interests in China.

Missionaries' Vile Business.

"Now I just gave you a real picture of what the China of today looks like. You can imagine how the Chinese as individuals and China as a nation suffer under foreign imperialism. When I refer to imperialism I used to mean three things, missionaries, business men and soldiers.

"You may be surprised how I link these three together. Yet they have a united front to promote imperialism. Most of the missionaries are not bad in themselves, but they are forerunners of imperialism. Missionaries to oriental countries, especially in former days had a political mission, too.

"Missionaries explored the country and imposed their religion upon natives. Then came business men to trade with their capitals. One day, if one of these missionaries or businessmen is killed by natives, they appeal to their governments for protection. Then these governments send their army and navy not to protect their nationals, but to demand either the cecession of territory or the concession of various kinds.

Chinese Have "Learned a Lot."

"The present anti-imperialistic movement in China is the natural outcome of and reaction against these intolerable conditions. The Chinese people are the most peace-loving people, but they have learned a lot of lessons from the foreign powers for the past ten or twenty years.

"They understand now what is meant by 'justice, humanity and righteousness' in the minds of the foreign powers. The Chinese people no longer rely on their government alone to accomplish their purpose. The Chinese and especially the Chinese workers are beginning to organize themselves under intelligent leadership to free themselves from imperialistic domination. They learned to use those legitimate methods which other people and other nations have used to enfroce their just demands for political and economical freedom.

May Cause World War.

"Here I appeal to you to have a correct stand as individuals and as a great nation on the present problems of China. I appeal to you strongly not to be misled by some propaganda cables sent to you or to your government by your missionaries and business men in China, who try to sacrifice your interests for their own.

"It must be clear to you that what China wants belongs to her as her own. She does not demand more than what is due to her. Unless China is again in her right place among the family of nations, which she is entitled to and unless the present problems of China are solved according to the true sense of justice and humanity, it will endanger the peace and tranquility not only of the Far East, but of the world at large."

The position of the workers of the United States and the position of all workers who follow the banner of the Communist International, was presented by Rebecca Grecht. H. M. Wicks also spoke, dwelling at length on the role of missionaries and the Christian religion in China. The following resolution was passed unanimously:

"Get Out" Says Resolution.

"Whereas, Events transpiring in China today are of such a nature as to make imminent another world war,

"Whereas, the Chinese people are beginning to arise in a nationalist movement against foreign capitalist invaders, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That this meeting declare that we sympathize with the movement for freedom of the Chinese masses and demands of the United States government that it immediately withdraw its armed forces from China and keep its hands off that country."

TOUTED 8-HOUR SHIFT OF OIL TRUST IS HOAX

Wages Cut, Most Men on 12 Hour Trick

By ART SHIELDS.

(Federated Press Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK, July 21.—(FP)—Though the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey is being advertised as the latest patron of the 8-hour day and eulogistic editorials in metropolitan papers are duly hailing Oil for following the example of steel the facts of this gracious reform have simmered down to smaller size than was at first supposed.

Only 1,400 workers are affected by the reduction in hours from 12 to 8 per day and these are the drillers, tool dressers, and other workers engaged in digging wells for the Carter Oil Co., a subsidiary of the New Jersey Standard in the mid-continent fields.

Not all the Carter men are included in the change from two to three shifts a day. In the more remote camps 12 hours will continue, A. F. Corwin of the industrial relations department of the company explaining that the workers would be bored by four hours more leisure in those outlying spots.

The three-shift system will mean the hiring of about 500 more workers but the daily wage of the individual worker will fall. wages per hour will rise 35 per cent, it is said, but at 8 hours per day this will total to 16 per cent less than before. At the same time there is nothing to indicate that boarding house prices, and the cost of living, in general, will be reduced.

Only a Few Affected

Drillers in the oil fields have been doing a 12-hour day since the first wells were bored in the middle of the last century. Even during the war when the 8-hour day was fairly common the drillers watched the clock go round on the job. The existence of this 12-hour day furnished a glaring contradiction to the statement of John D. Rockefeller, Jr., two years ago, that he was opposed to the two-shift system.

And it is pointed out, today, that this contradiction still obtains, for only part of the Carter men are affected and none of the 12-hour men in the field for the subsidiaries of the Standard Oil companies of Indiana, California, etc., and for Sinclair, Doheny, et al.

Highly Profitable

Other companies will watch the experiment, and if it does not increase costs, and if the workers in the remaining 12-hour fields show a restless demand for some of that extra leisure Mr. Corwin is so fearsome of, it is expected that the 8-hour day will be extended gradually thru the producing fields. As for the cost end, the Ford Motor Co. found that its 8-hour day, even with increased wages, was highly profitable, and the United States Steel corporation at a later date lost no money when the 12-hour day was discontinued.

It should be stated in this connection that the 12-hour day in the oil fields is found on the continuous operation jobs such as drilling, where there are day and night shifts. Pipeline workers and most other workers, are generally day men, working more than eight hours but less than twelve.

Men Fought For 8-Hours

Old time unionists from the oil fields, discussing the new Carter policy attribute the change to the agitation that has been carried on for many years in the "grease belt," where at different times and places the American Federation of Labor and the Oil Workers Industrial Union have kept the 8-hour issue alive. The peak of the A. F. of L. effort, perhaps, was the long strike of 1921 that stopped production over an immense area in California with the aid of a militarized picket line and threatened to sweep into the mid continent fields.

In the latter territory the industrial union conducted such a spirited drive in the early war days tha tthe federal administration, which was in close contact with the oil interests, rounded up about 40 organizers, kept them in filthy Kansas jails for 25 months waiting for trial, and finally dispatched them to Leavenworth penitentiary for the actual offense of labor unionism, though nominally on espionage bill indictments.

At about the same time officials of the Carter Oil Co. attempted to frame up Charles Krieger, a job delegate, on a dynamite charge. He was defended by Fred H. Moore, acting in behalf of his organization, and eventually acquitted by a Tulsa jury that became convinced vice president Pew had procured the dynamiting of his own porch for the purpose of discrediting the union.

VOLUNTEER HELP WANTED

Volunteer help wanted every afternoon and evening of this week at the International Labor Defense office, at 23 So. Lincoln Ave. Come and give as much time as you can spare. Very important.

MAINE OFFICIALS TO TEAR DOWN ALL BILL BOARDS ON HIGHWAYS

AUGUSTA, Me., July 21.—While state troopers and highway employes sallied forth armed with ax and paint brush to give battle to billboards and other advertising signs on all public highways today, the state of Maine was adding another "first" to its already enviable record of leadership. The state which launched the first ship of the American navy and introduced prohibition, has now legislated all highway advertising out of existence.

The prohibition on new billboards and the demolition of the old, decreed by the last legislature, is the result of a popular demand for the preservation of the natural beauties of the state.

'AVIAKHIM' IN FRATERNAL NOTE TO KUOMINTANG

Air and Chemical Society Wires China

MOSCOW, June 18—(By Mail)—The "Aviakhim," which means the Air and Chemical Defense Society, has sent the following telegram to the Executive Committee of the Kuomintang and the Central Council of Trade-Unions of China.

"It is with unabated atention that three million workers and peasants, organized in the Aviakhim, are following the development of events in China. Two years ago, to the arrogant ultimatum of the British imperialism the Russian city proletariat and peasants responded by offering resolute resistance and creating a mass public organization aiming at strengthening the defense of the Soviet Union.

"Today, the toiling masses of China, with whose people we are connected with fraternal ties, are rising against the inhuman oppression of foreign imperialism, against enslaving laws and treaties under which is suffering a great nation. A storm of indignation and wrath has been roused in our ranks by the brutal shooting of unarmed workers of your country by the police of the oppressing powers.

"We are with you; we send our warmest greetings to those who direct the struggle for the national liberation of the Chinese people—the Communist and Kuomintang parties of China, which are carrying on Sun Yat-sen's work, and the Central Council of the labor unions of China. And we firmly believe that victory will be on your side. We are convinced that all the public forces of awakened China will follow the same paths as those they tread in the Soviet Republics."

MacMillan Ship Is En Route to Disko Island, Greenland

WASHINGTON, July 21.—The airplane carrier Bowdin of the MacMillan Arctic expedition was enroute today from Hopedale, Labrador, to Disko Island, Greenland.

A radiogram to the National Geographic Society from Commander Donald B. MacMillan said that the ship left Hopedale under full sail and engine power. There was a light East wind and "splendid weather conditions," the mesage said. The Bowdin is expected to join the airplane carrier Peary at Disko Island the latter part of this week.

Tale of Two Cities

Among the cities that showed up exceptionally well in the recent DAILY WORKER drive for new subscriptions were Muskegon, Mich., and Bellaire, O. As mistakes were made in publishing the figures for these places, the following correction is necessary. Eighteen new subscriptions were secured in Muskegon, all sent in by their "live wire" agent, Walter Johnson, while Bellaire completed 40 per cent of its quota instead of only 25 per cent. Both of these party units expect to come under the wire for nothing less than 100 per cent of their quota in the next drive.

SOUTH BEND, Ind., July 21.—Governor Small, of Illinois, arrived at Long Beach, Michigan City resort, this morning, to remain until after Labor Day. He will occupy the cottage, "Broadripple." He expects his son, Leslie, of Kankakee, to spend part of the time with him.

The governor said he was here to rest, but that he would keep in touch with the Scott case. He will not interfere, he said, with the execution orders unless Scott's brother returns and surrenders to police.

JOHN REED COLONY SPREADS LIGHT OF KNOWLEDGE AMONG THE PEASANTS; HARVEST THIS YEAR IS EXCELLENT

By ANISE.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MOSCOW.—(By Mail.)—I have just come back from a trip along the Volga and a visit to John Reed children's colony, where a hundred orphan children are now approaching their second harvest. It looks good; it is beginning to look very good. Yet everyone is holding his breath for so much can happen in four weeks. Hail, for instance, or some of the little pests that get into grain. There is a lot of this along the Volga; the question is how much it will spread.

There's a tractor at John Reed colony. I heard of it two hundred miles away, from a peasant on the Volga steamer twelve hours before we reached our dock. He heard that I was getting off at Alexeivka. "There's a tractor there" he told me! He did not know to whom it belonged; he knew only that the district had one. But I, knowing the poverty of the famine-stricken peasants, was sure that no peasant had bought it. And I found it was indeed ours, belonging to the colony of John Reed, a present from the Executive Committee of Saratov. Three of the older boys had already learned to run it, under the direction of a "tractorist."

Help The Peasants.

I saw at John Reed Colony how the network of mutual help is being built up between government groups, peasant organizations, and co-operatives. We ourselves, tho our teachers have not been paid for two months and our children are on short rations till harvest,—we ourselves have yet the proud position of philanthropists.

For we are richer in implements than anyone else about. Consequently the village Self-Help Committee asked us to help them, by ploughing and sowing land for widows and Red Army families. And since we have a tractor and sixteen working horses, our children acceded to the demand and ploughed for those poorer than we . . . On the other hand, this SelfHelp Committee, which was so poor that even we could help it, was also able to help us.

For it brot to our mill all the flour grinding for several small government departments, and out of our percentage for grinding we got almost a two month's bread ration.

Government Aids Co-ops.

Some more of this mutual help business. There is a little village co-operative in Alexeivka. Very tiny: $600 is all its working capital. Yet when the Saratov education budget ran short by May, due to the bad harvest last year and consequent small taxes, and our food supply failed, just after we had put absolutely everything we had into the ground,— this little co-operative gave us credit to the amount of $200.

It nearly went broke as a result; in fact, it would have gone broke if it had not been helped by the next higher up organ. But, you see, our little co-operative knew it could count on that, since it is government policy to help co-operatives.

Farm 600 Acres.

Our hundred children are farming now 600 acres, more than three times what they handled last year. It is a great sweep of wheat and rye and sunflowers and barley and millet; there has been no sweep of grain like it in this district since the revolution broke down the old grand duke's estate. Our horses and pigs are already so good that the peasants are coming to us for breeding purposes.

There is a real struggle going on constantly between the Old Russia and the New. It goes on not only between different classes and different individuals, it goes on in the soul of each individual also. Our manager, for instance, is a Communist. But for all that, his soul is that of an old time peasant.

He is energetic; he is proud of the number of acres he has sown; he is proud that he has taken idle children from the children's homes and made working citizens of them . . . But as for schooling, it doesn't really seem to him that the children need schooling.

He had spent all the colony money on more and more horses, in order to make a good productive showing. . . After all, he was treating the children no worse than every peasant treats his own children. He himself had first learned to read and write in the Red Army.

Schools for Peasants.

But the result of this,—was a party investigation. For word began to spread around that we were neglecting culture for the sake of our farm work. And while work must come first, of course, in a country which needs rebuilding, there is measure in all things. So there were hearings, and reprimands, and two new assistants appeared at the colony, who had pedagogical training. Also an energetic young secretary was sent out by the party for our Communist Youth organization.

After I had talked with this youth I saw that the thnig for me to do next year was to "make culture hum." For the present harvest will give us the food we need, and even a few sheepskin coats and felt boots for winter and some extra underwear. What our young Communists wanted now was to start a "School of Peasant Youth." This is the latest thing out in Russia; it does for the village what the Workers College has done for the factory. It spreads knowledge among those who are too old to begin all over in the primary school, who have a background of experience to make use of, but have never been given an education before. It is a short, steep cut to knowledge, and has some similarity to the clubs and classes maintained in social centers in America.

I told the youy Comsomolist about our American clubs and it seems he knew all about them. He knew that "in the summer they go camping in tents and have plenty of fresh air; in the winter they have all kinds of classes for various hand-work and knowledge; in the spring they have a big exhibition of their work." . . . This he had learned way down on the Volga in the handbook he gets from the Communist Youth, to teach him how to organize other boys and girls.

Women Must Be Educated.

He said that Saratov had promised a School of Peasant Youth if we could furnish a building. And it seems there is a building, a former barracks where the soldiers slept who came at harvest time to work for the grand duke. During the civil war and famine it was used by hundreds of refugees who burned its floors for fuel and blackened its walls with their smoke. But the strong brick building still stands, needing calsomining, windows and flooring. Here is a regular audience hall, with theater; here is space for two classrooms; here is a club-room and library, and a small apartment for the club-leader.

It will cost $1,000 to make a complete social center here. And when we get it I think we will name it, not after John Reed, as the colony is named, but after some woman . . . For that also is part of our fight for the New Russia against the old. Out here in the back country it is still hard for people to believe that women are citizens, and that girls as well as boys should have shoes and also knowledge.

Our young Comsomolist also tells me of a new peasant library put out by the Government Publishing House, —100 small volumes for $4.00! It beats even the famous 5 cent libraries of America. And it tells about everything a peasant needs to know from Lenin to tractors! So we are buying two of these for use in our library.

Radio Spreads Like Fire.

And games and social life! And a radio with which to hear concerts and lectures from Moscow, Leningrad and Kiev! Yes, radio, also has spread like wild-fire thru the Soviet Union and where is it more needed than in these dark centers many miles from railroads, snow-bound in winter, where now it becomes possible to heer the best city concerts.

They are putting on radio programs instructing peasants! As for games, —perhaps somewhere in Russia there have been beautiful folk-dances in the past. But most of this talk about the social charm of old world peasant life is just an out-and-out lie. No Russian peasant children that I knew ever learned to play games. There are no balls around. As for winter sports, sledding, skating, even making snow-men,—when have Russian peasant children had shoes and coats to go outdoors in?

Huddled on their great stoves they passed the winter months and came out to work or lie in the sun in the spring. The chief social amuzement possible was calling the girls names when you were little, or spooning with them when you were big.

Form New Collectives.

Yes, that is peasant life with the glamour removed. But now we are to have a real club, with a stage and a library. And a radio. And besides our young Comsomolist we maye have a club leader from America for the winter, a woman to work with him and to organize the girls. And to bring in some standards of life that he doesn't know about; mosquito-netting, for instance, so that our children's legs will not be covered with great red welts and so that we can knead our bread without kneading hundreds of flies into it also. For these also are some of the unconsidered joys of peasant life, untouched by civilization!

As for the future of these children, —already there are signs of what they will wish to do. Ten of the older boys, seventeen and eighteen years old, have made formal application to form their own working collective this autumn. They want to live at the colony another year and use the implements of the colony, but taking up new land of their own, and having the right to their own harvest.

TAXI DRIVERS FIGHT POLICE PERSECUTION

Association to Make Spivak a Test Case

(Special to The Daily Worker)

(Taxi Driver, W. C.)

NEW YORK, July 21.—The license of Isador Spivak, a taxicab driver was suspended by order of Deputy Police Commissioner John Daly, in charge of the license department of the police department. The reason that the police gave for the suspension of this worker's license, thus depriving him of earning a living, was that while driving, with a fare in his cab, he was smoking, and a complaint was made and the suspension followed.

Spivak was represented in court by John O'Brien, counsel, for the Amalgamated Taxi Association, of which he is a member. O'Brien sought a change of venue to the state license commissioner, contending that Daly, the police commissioner, had no jurisdiction, because of the ruling last week of the appelate division, that the notorious police taxicab bill and other laws passed by the local assembly, were unconstitutional. The request for a change of venue was, of course, refused.

The Amalgamated, announced its intention of making the conviction a test case of the whole police supervision and will appeal to the higher courts.

NEGRO PLUMBERS ASK ADMITTANCE TO THE A. F. OF L.

As the A. F. of L. has started a campaign to organize the Negro workers, the American Negro Labor Congress will watch with interest what action is taken in the case of Mr. Doty and his group.

Postmaster New Admits Increase in Mail Revenue

WASHINGTON, July 21.—A general investigation of postal rates was started today by a special Joint congressional commission under the chairmanship of Senator George H. Moses (R) of New Hampshire.

Appearing before the commission with a summary of receipts and expenditures under the old and the new laws, Postmaster General New said he expected there would be an increase in revenue under the rates which went into effect last April, but that he could not tell what the total expense would be under the increased postal salaries authorized by congress.

SHERIFF TO ADDRESS OUTLAWED KLAN MEET IN LOUISIANA CITY

NEW ORLEANS, July 21—Despite the fact that the ku klux klan has been outlawed in the state of Louisiana, 75 klansmen, male and female, are holding a state convention in Alexandria, and just what the boys and girls in nighties have on tap has not been announced, but it looks as if something is brewing.

Sheriff U. T. Downs, of Rapides parish, has been announced as one of the speakers of the klan rally and barbecue, to be held in Alexandria, July 23. It looks like a case of law be damned.

LAUNDRY WORKERS INTERNATIONAL UNION OF A. F. OF L. INDORSES AMERICAN NEGRO LABOR CONGRESS

The American Negro Labor Congress, 19 S. Lincoln St., reveived the following resolution from the Laundry Workers International Union with headquarters in Troy, N. Y., indorsing the Congress:

"Whereas, the Negro workers and farmers are one of the most exploited groups of people in this country, and

"Whereas, racial prejudices, which are fostered by the white employing class, lead to Jim-Crowism and lynchings and various other injustices against the Negro, and

"Whereas, an American Negro Labor Congress is to be held in Chicago this year, which will fight for equal rights for all workers and the abolition of race prejudice, and will work to promote unity and harmony between the workers of ALL races, therefore be it

"Resolved, that we, the Laundry Workers' International Union, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, heartily endorse the aims and purposes of the American Negro Labor Congress and pledge ourselves to assist in every way possible to make the American Negro Labor Congress a success, which will mark a great forward step in the struggle of the American Negro for equality.

"Signed, Harry L. Morrison, General Secretary-Treasurer, Laundry Workers' International Union."

RUSSIA TODAY

The Official Report of the British Trade Union Delegation to Soviet Russia

THE DELEGATION

(FROM THE INTRODUCTION)

was cmoposed of men whose political tradition tended to make them critical of the Communist philosophy and policy, and who had each an expert knowledge of, at least, one of the branches of industry under inspection. Further, the advisory Delegates were men who had long official training in inquiring into and reporting foreign countries, and who had a thorough knowledge of the language and of Russia under previous conditions.

HOW THE DELEGATION WORKED

(FROM THE INTRODUCTION)

There was no difficulty in getting contact with opinion of every shade. Each member of bte Delegation had an authorization which enabled him to enter into any Government building, factory, club, hospital, police court, prison, or private house without any guide and without any previous notice. These authorizations were made full use of by those members who spoke the language and knew the country. The Delegation came well provided with means of getting in touch with opposition opinion and was kept continuously in contact with it.

WHY THE DELEGATION REPORTED

(FROM THE INTRODUCTION)

We have placed on record the results of our labors in the hope that what we have to say will be of interest and use to those who desire to understand Russia and who are prepared without bias to examine the consequences which arise from the control of this great country by the workers who reside in it and who have secured this control by facing indescribable dangers and going thru suffering unparalleled in the history of world conflicts between race and race, class and class, and one form of civilization and another.

CARNEGIE STEEL DRIVES WORKERS MAD WITH SPEED

Old Slaves Scrapped After Life of Toil

By THOMAS

(Worker Correspondent)

PITTSBURGH, Pa., July 21.—Perhaps it is the growing unemployment situation which makes the usual terrible conditions in the Carnegie Steel mills worse today than ever before. The bosses are getting more brutal and arrogant than has been known in the history of these mills. Men are forced and driven like dogs.

The bosses do not need a stick or whip as they have a good whip, in that if a man does not do what he is told he is immediately fired. They are glad of the chance to fire a worker as they do not have to lay so many off; the more they fire the better their records look.

Old Slaves Dumped On Scrape Heap

At the present time they are laying off men who have been working for twenty years without a break but now they are too old they are not needed anymore, and besides in a few years they would have to be pensioned.

One case in particular is that of an old worker who worked for twenty-two years. During the first fifteen years he claims that he never lost a day's work, but was there every day, Sunday included. He is now laid off and a young fellow hired instead.

In the molding section over three fourths of the force have been laid off. The brunt has fallen on the older men, as the only men who have been kept on are the young men who are strong and able to keep up the terrific pace set in this section. It is all piece work and there is a time set on every job.

Having some friends in there I walked in to speak to them for a few minutes but they had no time, they could not take a minute to speak to one another.

Unemployment Rife

Unemployment and short time are the main features here at the present time. Most of the mills are shut down, only the repair sections are working full time. But the worst part of it is they still keep the men in subjection even tho there is no work.

In the splice bar section the workers have had to report every day for the last three weeks in the hope of getting a job, but have been sent home every day. The same applies to every other section. Those that work are forced to do triple the work they used to do.

A few of the young men quit, as they claimed they would sooner starve than be worked to death. Young workers are forced so much that they see no joy in living, they almost all take to strong drink to ease their minds from the terrible strain that is imposed on them.

Jugo-Slavia and Italy Sign Treaty.

NETTUNO, Italy, July 21.—Thirty-two agreements concluded between Italy and Jugo-Slavia at the recent conference in Venice have been signed here. Mussolini signed for Italy. The port of Fiume is used equally by the two countries.

CALIFORNIA LABOR FAKERS ASK NO RAISE IN WAGES AND UNITE WITH REAL ESTATE SHARK RULE

By L. P. RINDAL.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., July 21.—Brother A. W. Muir, A. E. Woolwerton and M. E. Richardson, representing the Los Angeles county building trades council, went to Santa Barbara "immediately" after the news of the earthquake They were instructed to ascertain the needs of the building trades mechanics of Santa Barbara and offer assitance. Thru the "courtesy" of a police commissioner they were "permitted" to enter the city.

They were also "assisted" and made a "complete investigation." And now they are "greatly indebted to Police Commissioner Foss of Los Angeles and to the Santa Barbara police department." Only one brother, Tom Mathews, Lathers, was killed. Several members suffered injuries. No building trades men needed at present. All work stopped—except cleaning up wreckage.

"Arrangements have been made with the chamber of commerce and builders' associations to employ all men thru a central employment service, which will be established and maintained under direction of the Santa Barbara county building trades council." This they call a "level-headed agreement policy" which have been practiced in Santa Barbara for years. "Curiosity seekers and job hunters stay away," ends the message. (This is the essence of an article in the Southern California Labor Press, the carpenters' organ, July 3, 1925.)

No Raise in Wages in Santa Barbara During Rebuilding.

"Santa Barbara, July 1.—By unanimous vote at a special meeting of the Santa Barbara county building trades council last night a resolution was adopted declaring that no increase in wages will be inaugurated by any union affiliated with the council during the reconstruction period, regardless of the length of time it takes to rebuild the city. The council also declared that every affiliated union in the city will co-operate in speedily restoring Santa Barbara . . ."

"Building trades mechanics are asked to keep away until notified to come, as much work must be done before actual building proceeds. All building trades councils thruout the state will be notified when men are needed, and when they come here they will be employed thru this council.—A. G. Gilson, secretary-treasurer of the State Building Trades Council of California, attended this meeting and 'congratulated' said council upon its attitude." (Labor Press, July 3, 1925.)

These two extracts from the local organ of the carpenters shows five things: First, yellow submission to police authority; second, collaboration with bosses; third, agreement in advance not to ask for higher wages; fourth, that both the Los Angeles county organisation and the state body of the building trades are in complete accord with the "level-headedness" of Santa Barabara unionists; fifth, that all these bodies are dumb-bells—badly cracked at that—when it comes to giving information concerning the sufferings, etc., among thousands of conscripted slaves—working day and night and injured right and left—during the quake.

These collaborators are (also in this respect) working hand in hand with organizations of the master class, whose interests demand to keep everything of this nature under cover and, therefore, out out from the newspapers. Real estate values might go down if the real truth about this "rebellious" quake zone was told. BUT THAT IS ANOTHER STORY YET TO BE TOLD.

Peace Report.

While industrial "peace-making" (in favor of property owners) is the order of the day on the main land, Scharrenberg, secretary-treasurer of the California State Federation of Labor, is attending a conference at the institute of pacific relations in Honolulu, Hawaii. The idea is that of trying to pull the chestnuts out of the fire for the hard pressed imperialists—on a world-wide scale. "The federation's secretary reports a pleasant voyage to the home of ukulele" (whatever that is) "and other things," says the Labor Press. A great peace report, indeed.

WHIP SLAYER IS FREED OF DEATH OF CONVICT BOY

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., July 21—John Higginbottom "whipping boss" for one of the biggest lumber companies in this state has at last been freed of the charge of having murdered Martin Tabert. Higginbottom was once found guilty of murder but the lumber company for which he worked and who might have been forced to pay the family of the dead boy damages if the case were permitted to rest with an employe of their guilty of the murder fought the case thru the supreme court of the state and got a new trial and Higginbottom was acquitted.

Tabert was arrested for "stealing" a ride on a freight train here and was sentenced to sixty days in jail. He was leased to a lumber company and while working in their camp was beaten so badly by Higginbottom that he died. The defense committee of the I. W. W. hearing of his case and with the aid of his family in North Dakota had his death investigated.

The state legislature of North Dakota asked that the guilty parties be punished. Their resolution was sent to the state legislature of Florida and an investigating committee after taking testimony reported that the use of the lash should be abolished. Nothing was said of the real evil—the leasing of convicts to private lumber and turpentine firms.

A special grand jury was called and indicted Higginbottom. He and others were tried and he was found guilty. The lumber company for whom he had acted in beating Tabert to death was not even reprimanded. They fought his case and secured a retrial and he was freed.

In the meanwhile there is a law against the use of the lash on leased convicts but no way to enforce it since the fellows charged with the enforcement of the law are the same ones who still "beat hell out of" the convicts to get the last ounce of work from them. The evil will continue till some other poor devil is beaten to death. If he has friends who can fight for him there will be more investigations. But, if he is a friendless hobo or a "nigger" he will be buried in quick lime as Tabert was and that will be that.

FARRINGTON'S FAT EXPENSE BILL IS HYPOCRISY PROOF

Blunts His Attacks on the Progressives

posing him, and his threat of expulsion to Tumulty.

Fight for Miners.

For many years these four men, Thompson, Watt, Parry, and Tumulty, have been the outstanding opponents of the Farrington machine, and the champions of the rank and file of the Illinois miners. They have consistently fought for the miners against the combined efforts of Farington and the coal operators. Their work has become so effective that Farrington, feeling his position slipping from him, resorts to the method of expulsions and threats in an insane attempt to stop the exposure. It is a well known fact in Illinois that Thompson and Watt are the miners' hope for high district offices in the next Illinois miners' union elections.

Dual to Fakers.

Farrington now declares the Educational Committees to be dual. Farrington is a liar. We are not any surprised or worried at any thing Farrington says about dual unions. We have come to know that what Farrington says is against the union must be good for it. Any miner having a thot of his own, and not in bondage to the machine is "dual" in the eyes of the faker.

We organized the unemployment councils to help care for the starving children of the miners when Farrington had refused to do so. They were declared dual, so was the Progressive Miners committee declared dual after Farrington saw he could not use it as part of his machine. Now the educational league is "dual" because its members are exposing the fakers to the miners.

Blood Letting.

Farrington states the attempt to send Watt and Thompson around the state "A brazen attempt to bleed you of your hard earned money and has never before been attempted in Illinois." This statement shows the gall and brazenness of the faker. The proposed trip of Watt and Thompson would cost the miners of their subdistricts a few cents each and the request for voluntary subscriptions for that purpose is entirely constitutional.

That request and method of securing money is in great contrast with the method used by Farrington himself. A few examples of the manner that Farrington uses is given below, and no doubt will be interesting reading to the outraged miners.

Enough Expenses to Circle World.

The district expense account for the last three months of 1924 shows that Farrington drew two salaries while the miners' wives and children were starving! His salary and expenses are shown on page 14 of Nesbit's report as follows:

Salary $2,550.00.
Hotel, $673.00.
Train Fare, $672.54.
Livery $60.75.
Total expense, $1,406.29.
Total, with salaries, $3,956.29, or approximately $4,000.000.

For the first three months of this year the following figures are shown in Nesbit's report of Farrington's fat graft:

Salary, $1,062.50.
Hotel, $534.00.
Train Fare, $651.65.
Livery, $74.50.
Total Expenses for quarter, $1,260.15.
With Salaries, $2,322.65.

For Six Months.

Outside the above, Farrington charged $551.38 for telegrams while traveling, besides the large amount while not traveling. All, a total for the last six months that has been only partially explained of $6,830.32, or approximately $7,000.00 the Illinois miners have paid during the six months period for the luxury of having Farrington in office.

Tomorrow I will tell of other details of Farrington's finances.

BUILDERS AT WORK

TAKE A TIP FROM A LIVE WIRE

In Philadelphia, under the capable leadership of City Agent Lena Rosenberg, splendid work for the DAILY WORKER—and equal effort in books and pamphlets and general propaganda work are being obtained.

Comrade Sam Weisberg has been one of those whose good work is a large part of the reason for this success—and is also the first Builder to respond to tell others just how he does it. He puts some of his methods in these few words:

• • • •

SOME OF THE EASIEST WAYS

By SAMUEL WEINBERG

In the shop, or in the Union my best argument is the DAILY WORKER. I manage to have clippings of articles pertaining to my trade and hand them out to my prospects to make the way clear for a sub. I find less resistance after they read the best articles ever written in a newspaper. They come across right there or else they ask to see a copy or so. When I oblige them his only excuse might be that he is not prepared with money. For which I usually trust him. They are all glad to pay after they get the first copies of the DAILY WORKER.

BIG PROFIT IN HAWAIIAN SUGAR MAY ACCOUNT FOR TRUST'S FEAR OF COMMUNISM IN THE BARRACKS

By LELAND OLDS

(Federated Press Industrial Editor)

Cash dividends averaging 18 per cent paid by 15 Hawaiian sugar companies in 1924, not to mention huge undivided profits expected to produce stock dividends, bear witness to the successful protection of sugar millionaires afforded by the republican tariff. The tariff protects corporations exploiting the island possessions of the American empire as well as those exploiting peon labor in the beet sugar fields at home.

Hawaiian Commercial & Sugar Co., the biggest producer in the islands, in 1924 paid 24 per cent cash dividends on its $10,000,000 capital stock and in addition showed a surplus of $5,225,507, equal to more than 50 per cent of its capital. The $2,400,000 paid in dividends is 2-3 again as large as the entire average profit of pre-war years.

Oahu Sugar Co. paid 18 per cent dividends on its $6,000,000 capital stock and closed the year with a surplus of $6,695,000. This surplus exceeds the whole value of the capital stock. The $1,080,000 distributed to the owners in cash is 87½ per cent more than the entire profit average of pre-war years.

Get Away With the Swag.

Ewa Plantation Co. paid 28 per cent on $4,000,000 capital stock, a cash distribution of $1,120,000, approximately 2½ times the average pre-war profit. The surplus was $3,073,000.

Hawaiian Sugar paid 24 per cent dividends on a $3,000,000 capital and finished the year with a surplus of $1,376,382.

These are typical results for 1924 shown by members of the Hawaiian Sugar Planters' Association. Any one reading the Coolidge apology for refusing to reduce the sugar tariff would expect similar prosperity among the "protected" wage earners.

Japanese Struck.

The plantation work is being done by Filipinos whom the association is importing by thousands. Tens of thousands of Japanese workers were imported prior to 1920 for plantation work, but they finally struck against the peon conditions and the owners had to look elsewhere for strikebreakers.

A request to congress for permission to import Chinese for this purpose was refused on the ground that an adequate supply existed in the Philippine Islands under the American flag.

Filipinos Won't Scab, Either.

Recently the Filipinos also struck but the planters' association, according to the Wall Street Journal, can still import plenty for $1 a day and keep. The policy is to lessen the likelihood of strikes by drawing these workers from different tribes. It is easy for the corporations to break a strike because the workers live in company houses, on company property and are dependent on the company for their subsistence.

Previously imported Japanese and Chinese and their children predominated in the sugar mills.

War "Welfare" Expensive.

An amusing sidelight on this exploitation is found in the government reports on cost of sugar production during the war. Government investigators found that one Hawaiian company raised its expenditure for welfare work from about 30 cents to over $11 per employe to escape the excess profits tax. Probably the interest in welfare has taken a slump since the repeal of the tax.

"Black Jack" Off for South America.

A "Good" Labor Leader

The Chicago Daily News, owned by the millionaire tory, Victor Lawson, has words of praise for William D. Mahon, president of the Amalgamated Association of Street and Electric Railway Employes, for his action in forcing the employes of Samuel Insull's elevated road to accept the company's offer which refused a paltry increase in wages of five cents an hour demanded by the men.

Under the caption: "Mr. Mahon's Wise Counsel," the Daily News says: "Largely because of the advice of William D. Mahon, the capable and experienced president of the international organization of street and electric railway workers, the 2,500 transportation employes of the Chicago elevated railways have abandoned their demand for a considerable increase in wages and have voted to accept virtually the same wage agreement as that of last year."

This is praise indeed. Mahon is a good leader in the eyes of the capitalists, tho he was hooted off the platform by the members of his own organization who experienced his treachery before. Mahon agreed with the employers when they claimed that "present industrial and commercial conditions are not favorable to wage increases." Not only did Mahon betray the interests of the members of his own organization, but he struck a blow at the workers in other industries, in their fight for higher wages. This statement of Mahon will be quoted extensively thruout the country by the chambers of commerce and other capitalist organizations.

Here we have another example of a boss' leader. He's the kind they like. While the boss press slanders and villifies militant labor leaders like Foster, Howat, MacDonald, MacLachlan and others of that type they have words of praise for the Mahons, Greens, Wolls, Lynches and the numerous specimens of the labor faker type who use the trade unions in order to feather their own nests at the expense of the workers. This should be convincing proof to the workers that the reactionaries are not fighting for them, but against them.

Benito on the Banana

If news dispatches from Italy are authentic Benito Mussolini, representing fascism, has one foot on an over-ripe banana skin. The other foot is covered with bunions. We are speaking politically, so to speak.

Mussolini has recently put his murder machine thru a delousing process. By a wave of the white-wash brush he exonerated his merry men of the murder of Matteotti, going to the extent of conferring honors on them as a recompense for whatever discomfort they suffered while they were legally held on the murder charge. He has postponed the next national elections indefinitely and got rid of those members of his government who had not separated themselves from every vestige of decency. But Mussolini's troubles increase with each new punitive measure against his enemies.

The Matteotti murder did not down with the exoneration of his murderes by the fascisti-controlled court. It is now reported that a great movement is on foot with international ramifications to bring about his downfall. As a means to this end, members of the opposition have gotten into the fascist organization with the object of creating discord within its ranks.

Weight is added to this report by the action of the fascist newspaper Epocha in publishing a document containing the story of a terrorist organization formed inside the fascist party by Mussolini and his clique for the purpose of getting rid of his political opponents. The same paper also charges the high court that tried one of the murderers of Matteotti with having ignored evidence during the trial.

That this paper has dared to face Mussolini's wrath is proof that the black dictatorship is steadily weakening and that the millions recently loaned by Wall Street to bolster up the fascist regime have not stayed the inevitable process of disintegration of a government that exists, not thru the support of the masses, but thru the economic power of big industry and the bayonets of the fascist army.

Blocking the Bloc

Great Britain's efforts to build an unsanitary cordon around Russia, thru a bloc of Balkan nations is left hanging between earth and heaven, like Mohammed's coffin, because of the refusal of Lithuania to become a party to the conspiracy.

We are not quite satisfied that Lithuania's motives were animated by any devotion to ethical scruples, but the fact remains that this particular neighbor of Russia threw a good sized monkey wrench into the delicate machine of British diplomacy.

England had succeeded in lining up Finland, Esthonia, Latvia, Poland and Rumania. The messenger boy employed by the British in perfecting the conspiracy was the Latvian foreign minister M. Meirovitz. This gentleman, a socialist, visited the capitals of the small nations like a tea peddler, soliciting the co-operation of the respective governments in the anti-Soviet plot and giving the cash terms England was willing to pay for their assistance.

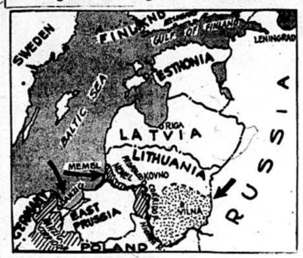
The Lithuanian government was on the mailing list of the British foreign office and being somewhat exasperated over the Polish grabbing of Vilna in 1920, thru a "putsch" sanctioned by the then British government, the Lithuanian foreign office allowed the Soviet government to have a look at the tell-tale correspondence. At least so the story goes.

It is signficant that Meirovitz visited the Lithuanion capital on his way to Paris and that shortly afterwards, the official organ of the Soviet government issued a statement revealing the object of Meirovitz's mission. Esthonia is to hand over two of her islands to Britain for use as naval bases against Leningrad. England also proposed to shift some territory between Poland and Lithuania, and Germany and Poland, in order to satisfy all concerned. But the small nations, like the large ones, don't trust each other, which is all to the good of Soviet Russia.

The Balkan bandit nations will gain nothing by entering the British conspiracy against the Soviet Union. Lithuania is well advised to depend for its prosperity more on trade and commercial relations with Russia, than on the cash boxes of the British government. It is also possible that the silhouette of the Red Army which is thrown across the borders is an effective reminder to Lithuania that discretion is the better part of valor.

Another one of Britain's anti-Soviet blocs seems to be blocked.

England Plots Against Soviet Union



THE map shows where England is plotting to form a Baltic league against the Soviet Union. England is endeavoring to enlist Germany against Soviet Russia by giving back the Danzig corridor shown in the lower left hand corner, to Hindenburg as a bribe.

Lithuania has blocked this anti-Soviet combination. Lithuania protests the seizure of the region around Vilna by Poland, shown by the dotted area. England proposes to give Vilna back to Lithuania, but take from her the corridor along the Niemen River, and give this to Poland in compensation for the loss of Danzig.

So far, however, England has been unable to carry thru this anti-Soviet plot.

IMPOSING STREET DEMONSTRATION IN NEW YORKS EAST SIDE AS WORKERS PAY LAST TRIBUTE TO JOHN LASSEN

By WILLIAM WEINSTONE.

NEW YORK, July 21.—Comrade John Lassen (Lakai) who died of tuberculosis at St. Lukes Hospital was cremated Sunday afternoon after an imposing street demonstration in which the red draped bier carried by a guard of honor was followed in closed ranks by hundreds of workers who came to pay tribute to his memory.

The demonstration stretched a whole length of a city block and attracted the wonder, attention and interest of the proletarian families as it passed along First and Second avenues and 79th and 81st and back to the Hungarian Workers' Home on 350 E. 81st street.

A Life of Service to Revolution

The funeral ceremonies began at 1:30 p. m. Much earlier than the hour announced the members of the Workers Party, Young Workers League and the workers organizations with which Lassen was associated assembled to pay their last respect to their deceased comrade. They stood closely packed in the auditorium while comrades Basky, for the Elore, Lustig for the Hungarian Young Communists, Klein of the Workers Dramatic Society, Comrade Amter of the Workers Party and Comrade Eber, a member of the Hungarian branch, paid tribute to the services John Lassen had rendered to the movement and to the inspiration that his brief life had furnished them.

Red not black was the prevailing color in which hall, bier and cortege were adorned and not tears but a solemn determination to carry the task to which Lassen had devoted his life were the dominant note in the speeches of tribute. It was with the vigorous singing of the International that the ceremonies at the home were closed.

The street demonstration then followed and later in the day, several hundreds of workers assembled in the Fresh Pond Crematorium in Queens for the final addresses. Comrades Gardes of the Elore, Raskolsky and other members of the Workers Party and Comrade Jack Statchel of the Young Workers League of New York spoke. Comrade Statchel paid a special tribute to the memory of Lassen for his activities in the youth movement of America and other countries.

Lassen's Life and Work
By William Weinstone

ALTHO taken from us when scarcely in his prime, Lassen leaves behind him a career of valuable service to the revolutionary labor movement and to the Communist International. Of proletarian family, Lassen became interested in the movement when 16 years of age in Budapest as student. During the war period, and as a student in a Budapest university he joined the radical student organization known as the Galileo Society. He had hardly reached his 18th birthday, when in 1917 he became the center of political life in Hungary by his attempt on the life of Count Tiszo, the Hungarian premier and central figure in the war. Comrade Lassen was tried and sentenced to death for this attempt which had been miscarried, but was liberated by the revolution.

Active in Youth Movement

Lassen then became a member of the Young Communist League and threw himself actively into its work. Up to the time of the fall of the Commune, he did editorial work for the revolutionary organs and carried on various organizational tasks.

With the fall of the Commune, he emigrated to Russia and became a member of the executive of the Young Communist International and in close cooperation carried on work in Germany, Austria and France. He wrote for the Jugend International, the German organ of the Youth International.

Lassen arrived in America in 1921, and became editor of the Hungarian Communist daily, The Elore. He established international connections for the paper obtaining contributions regualrly from the best of the Communist writers in Russia, Hungary, Germany and Austria. He remained one of the editors of the paper until his death.

Altho frail in health as the result of the pernicious disease which was consuming him, he threw himself into the work of the youth of America and helped to build up the splendid Young Workers League which obtains in the Hungarian section. He devoted himself to the work of organizing and systematizing the revolutionary plays and stimulated the Workers Dramatic Society as well the Workmen's Orchestra.

Author of Revolutionary Plays

Lassen was the author of several revolutionary plays. "1914-1919" was written while he was in Germany. "Herrin," a one act play based upon the events in Herrin, Ill., during 1923. "Masters and Slaves" which was running serially in the DAILY WORKER was his play. He also wrote a novel "Reds and Whites" a story based on the events in Hungary. In his many articles on life in America, which were published in the DAILY WORKER, Volkzeitung and Elore, are depicted the bitter struggle of the workers and especially of the most keenly exploited workers of the East Side of the American cities. In all his writings and editorial work Lassen showed a keen appreciation and application of Marxism and Leninism of which he was a devoted student.

Was Under Indictment

The American capitalist class saw in Comrade Lassen a powerful enemy of exploitation. He was indicted at the end of 1924 for writing a poem against Coolidge and for an article attacking the Hungarian counter-revolutionary organ Nepsava, and was under $2,000 bail.

The American Communist movement and its Hungarian section as well as the proletarian movement everywhere will deeply feel the loss sustained in the early death of our comrade, while his life will afford a splendid example of earnest and untiring service to the cause of Communism.

BALDWIN CRISIS LOOMS IN SPLIT OVER ARMAMENT

Political Questions Involved in Dispute

LONDON, England, July 21.—Premier Baldwin was working energetically today to stave off the cabinet crisis which loomed as a result of the opposition of Winston Churchill, chancellor of the exchequer, to the naval building program advocated by W. C. Bridgeman, first lord of the admiralty. Churchill wants to increase the size of the navy, but not to the extent that Bridgeman does.

Baldwin has been striving, without success, to reconcile the "big" and "little" navy men in his official family. The cabinet having failed to reach an accord today was being given over to private and informal discussions in the hope that the elusive compromise might be found by the time the cabinet again assembles in Downing street tomorrow.

The controversy having got into the realm of politics, there is much more at stake now than the mere question of the number of cruisers to be laid down this year and the continuing program.

Political issues of the utmost gravity have entered the quarrel, and might easily precipitate a ministerial crisis.

Pitted against each other are the powerful clique headed by Churchill and lord Birdenhead and the "big" navy group. The latter are rallying around Bridgeman, first lord of the admiralty, who with earl Beatty, first sea lord, and the entire admiralty board threaten to resign if their recommendations are discarded.

The admiralty group accepted a new compromise today as a basis of settlement. They expressed themselves as satisfied with a building program calling for laying down of three cruisers this year, but insisted the four must be the minimum next year.

Churchill and his group still are dissatisfied. They refuse to go so far. As chancellor of the exchequer Churchill has a strong card. But there is a strong group who insist upon "proper safeguards for national defense."

Duluth, Minn., Workers Will Stand by China and Soviet Republics

DULUTH, Minn., July 21.—The following resolution was unanimously adopted at the "Hands off China" picnic held here at Fairmount Park: "Resolved, that we workers here assembled demand that the capitalist government of America keep its hands off China and we also pledge our aid to the workers' government of Russia in its fight to protect the interests of the workers and oppressed peoples of the world.

Military Revolt in Portugal Quelled, Have Martial Law

LISBON, July 21.—Portugal's most recent revolutionary attempt was almost bloodless, it was determined today. The uprising, quelled almost as soon as it started, claimed two lives in the whole country. A few persons were injured.

Portugal was quiet today, altho the state of martial law has not been withdrawn.

Mother Dies; Unborn Baby Lives

Americans Plan London Subway

LONDON. — American capitalists have completed their preliminary plans for a $25,000,000 electric subway for freight and vehicular traffic as a solution for London's traffic chaos, it was announced in the Graphic today.

U. S. INDEMNITY RETURN SEEN AS MOVE TO WIN CHINA INTO NEW TRAP

WASHINGTON, July 21. — The United States has completed the steps leading up to the re-payment to China for educational purposes of all the money collected as indemnity on account of the Boxer rebellion.

It was announced at the state department today that President Coolidge on July 1 signed an executive order directing the secretary of the treasury to make payments to the China foundation for education and culture to be used in Chinese schools. The Boxer indemnity originally totaled $24,440,000. This sudden action is known to be part of American imperialism's skillful maneuvers to win influence in China in order to betray the trust as Wilson did after the war.

LYING "LABOR" PRESS PRINTS PROPAGANDA FOR STANDARD OIL BY ATTACKING SOVIET RUSSIA

By JAMES H. DOLSEN.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 21.—The official labor press of this state is featuring an article by the International Labor News Service, dealing with the imminent danger of a new world war over the control of the oil resources of the earth.

The treacherous character of this alleged "news service" and the insidious ways thru which the labor fakers try to control the minds of their rank and file are well illustrated in this feature story.

Compelled by the fact that the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics has withstood every assault and compelled the recognition of the great powers, excepting America, the leaders of the A. F. of L. have been obliged to soft-pedal their vicious misrepresentations of the world's only working class government. For ingenuity of twisting facts and creating unwarranted inferences, take the following quotation from this article, reprinted in every labor paper of California:

Same Fairy Tale.

"Take the situation in China today and strip it down to bare facts. Oil is the underlying cause. RUSSIA (capitals ours) is back of the pressure that is being brot there at this time.

"Russia must have an outlet and the pressure from the interior is being manifested at three important points. The Soviet republic needs southern outlets; she needs to get out to the world with her oil, and those who hope to control that oil want to help her in her efforts. The great oil interests do not care about the risk they are taking in aiding the Soviets. After them, the deluge."

Aiding Rockefeller by Pretending to Oppose Him.

Rockefeller and his Standard Oil gang, with the Dutch Shell Oil outfit, moving heaven and earth to help Soviet Russia market its oil! Much of the article read as if that Judas, Wm. English Walling wrote it, but this is too childish and crude for that polished traitor's hands. Yet the article is unquestionably propaganda of the Standard Oil interests which are fighting the government oil industry of Soviet Russia.

The article goes on to state that the outlet for Russia's production from the Black Sea territory is blocked by England's control of the Suez Canal and of Gibraltar. "Immediately one sees the 'disaffection' in Egypt and the Riffian uprising in Morrocco." The article then goes on "In a similar manner the Soviets are seeking to get thru Persia, India and China. In the latter country they have made use of every available pretext and coined every phrase to catch the ear of the Chinese: 'China for the Chinese.' Every method of arousing the populace and stinging them into action is being used by propagandists."

Self-Contradictions.

The article lamely winds up in the conclusion that if this country can bring in enough oil and locate and reserve sufficiently vast fields, "there will be no need for this country to be involved in an oil war and no amount of propaganda can pull or push her into it." The conclusion itself is opposed to the writer's previous statements in the same article to the effect that the country has no reserve and is unable to supply its own needs. The optimism in the wind-up sounds also suspiciously like that which exuded from the selfsame labor skates prior to our entrance into the world war.

Just as the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics is a constant menace to the capitalist system and must be fought in every possible way by the ruling class, so also must the labor lieutenants of that class, themselves more ignorant than the representatives of the class which they serve, continually prostitute themselves and the truth to misrepresent what is going on in the Soviet Republic Republic and to deceive their follows as to its policies.

Go To It!

A principal task before the T. U. E. L., it seems to me, should be the exposure in the unions, at every possible opportunity, of such vicious and lying articles as that sent out by this "labor news service," so-called.

FRANCE STOPS 'DODGER' GAME AT EXHIBITION

Negro Labor Congress to Hit "Uncle Tom's"

"French soldiers, realizing that Africans do more than dodge, as seen by the Riffian situation, and being unable to see any pleasure in trying to make Africans dodge, have brought pressure to bear on the French government to bar from the Paris Modern Arts Exhibition the popular American Midway amusement," says the Paris Journal.

This game consists of a few balls, a large canvas with a small hole in the center, and an "Uncle Tom" with no brains who sticks his head thru the hole. You throw the balls at "Uncle Tom's" head and he dodges from side to side.

The American Negro Labor Congress hopes to strike these brainless heads with such force that they will be eliminted from all American activities forever.

Workingclass Movies Will Be Taken at N. Y. Labor Defense Outing

NEW YORK, July 21.—The International Labor Defense, which was organized in Chicago on June 28, will hold its first affair at Pleasant Bay Park on August 23. This will be one of the finest outings held this season.

In addition to athletic events, the executive committee is arranging to have a moving picture-taken of the affair. Every comrade will want to be seen in the movie, so no one should fail to attend. The executive committe has another surprise in store—preparations are now being made.

The need of funds for the defense of the class war prisoners is growing daily. The International Labor Defense protects all victims of the class struggle, who are sent to the capitalist prisons. The organization has a large number of cases on hand and the number is growing.

Hence in addition to enjoying one of the finest outings that have ever been arranged—and there will be dancing and refreshments, every comrade will be doing a great service to the revolutionary movement. Tickets are 35c.

AMERICAN NEGRO LABOR CONGRESS FUND BEGINS TO CLIMB TOWARD GOAL

Slowly but surely the $10,000 drive of the American Negro Labor Congress is progressing. The congress committee looks to every organization and individual that is interested in furthering the Negro's interest on the political, economic, and social field to rally to this drive for $10,000 and over.

Every Negro worker or farmer interested in his own well being should do all he can to make this drive a success.

YOUNG WORKERS IN BRULE TAKE MANY COURSES, GRADUATE JULY 26

By LAURA KANGAS, Worker Correspondent.

BRULE, Wis., July 21.—The students of the Y. W. L. E. C. have given program numbers in several recent entertainments. A picnic was held at Maple, Wis. Five of the students went there and each gave interesting selections which were much appreciated by the audience. In the evening all the students went to Oulu, and there the same program was offered as at Maple, but some other selections were added, such as solos, recitations, etc. Three speeches were made by the students. This program was even more highly appreciated than the afternoon's program, because of the additional entertainment provided, and in the afternoon the audience was quite restless on account of the intense heat.

Gannes the Teacher.

Our instructor, Comrade Harry Gannes, on Economics, Theory and the Forum, left for Chicago last week. He was accompanied by his wife, Comrade Heline Gannes, who was here during the time he taught. In his place arrived Comrade Hathaway who will be instructor for the remaining term. His subjects will deal with trade unions and the organization of the Workers Party history.

We are conducting five different study circles. Each circle has an instructor and they meet after classes or after supper. Each student has to volunteer to join one of these circles, and when they meet they bring up some subject they can't understand and it is then discussed and thoroly explained by the instructor.

We have been working on outlines for coming courses, that is concerning teachers, transportation, curriculum, food, funds, etc.

Commencement on July 26.

As we have only one and one-half weeks of the school term left the students are all busy with preparations for commencement, which will be held July 26. The program will consist of sdios, dances, and monologues. Refreshments will be served during the intermission, after which will be presented the one-act play, "Nick in Siberia," in which five of the students participate.

This play is a true happening which took place after the revolution in Russia. This program is one of the most interesting entertainments offered during the time of teh courses, so everybody is welcome.

TEXTILE WAR SPANS ATLANTIC

AS [illegible] E IT.

By [illegible] AHERTY

NOW, that the "monkey" trial is over, at least the first installment of it, national attention is invited to the antics of Chief Collins of the Chicago police department. One of the chief's favorite pastimes is defending the law, sometimes against the so-called criminal elements, anon against the police. Whenever the bootleggers, gunmen and kindred elements of the citizenry, take a brief holiday Chief Collins hops on to the police, shuffles them up, forces a few of them to resign or otherwise compels them to become his press agents.

THERE is nothing a politician hates like silence regarding his existence. Collins has no reason to kick. Outside of the "Yellow Kid," alias Mr. Weil, the noted confidence man, and perhaps State's Attorney Crowe, Collins is the best advertised man in town. Several hundred citizens have been "liquidated" in Chicago since the beginning of the year, according to the Chicago Tribune. The Tribune regrets that at least twice as many more were not hanged in retaliation. Chief Collins throws a fit every time a citizen goes down before a gangster's gun, swears that he will make Chicago a hot place for gunmen, then goes to a police convention, while his police busy themselves protecting scabs and arresting Communists for speaking on the streets.

THE latest stunt pulled off by Collins is to "shake" down his department and threaten to force the superannuated into retirement. It's good front page stuff. Some officers are credited with looking the other way when Mr. Volstead's pet law is getting trodden on. Politicians on the inside of things in city hall claim that captains, lieutenants and ser-

NATIONAL WAR IS DECLARED ON KNOWLEDGE

Scene of Battle Is Now Shifted to Columbia

WASHINGTON, July 22.—The conflict between religion and science, exemplified in the Scopes anti-evolution trial in Tennessee, today came squarely before the federal courts of the District of Columbia.

Declaring that children in the national capital were being taught "disrespect of the holy bible," Loren H. Wittner of Washington asked the district supreme court to enjoin the city's fiscal agents from paying salaries to instructors who teach the evolutionary theory of the origin of man in conflict with divine creation.

Teaching of evolution, Wittner said, was expressly forbidden by congress in the last district appropriation bill, which provided:

"That no part of this sum shall be available for the payment of the salary of any superintendent who permits the teaching of, or of any teacher who teaches, disrespect of the holy bible."

In his bill of complaints, Wittner cited 13 specific instances of "disrespect to the bible"-thru teaching from the approved textbooks on natural science. The injunction was filed admittedly as a "test" case, in much the same spirit as the Dayton trial was started, to determine by law whether evolution can be taught by teachers paid from public funds. Wittner described himself as a "federal taxpayer," but said also he was "somewhat of a liberalist and wanted this thing settled."

Washington children are being taught disrespect to the bible, Wittner said, because the approved text books:

1. Doubt and contradict the teachings of the bible.
2. Teach that man and apes and monkeys belong to the same family, and also that plants and animals come from the same common ancestor, while the bible says man was made in the physical image of god out of the dust of the ground, and that woman was made from one of the ribs of man.
3. Teach that after death disintegration of organic bodies takes place making impossible for any human to

CLEVELAND PUBLIC SQUARE TO HEAR THE COMMUNIST APPEAL

(Special to The Daily Worker)

CLEVELAND, Ohio, July 22.—Cleveland workers will hold mass meeting and demonstration under the slogans "Hands Off China" "Stand by Soviet Russia," on Saturday, at seven o'clock in the evening on the Public Square. The speakers will be William F. Dunne, Alfred Wagenknecht, district organizer, J. A. Hamilton, local organizer, and Weisberg of the Young Workers League. There will also be a Chinese speaker. Picnic on Sunday, July 26, at Willoughbeach Park, will also be in the nature of a demonstration by the workers of Northern Ohio. The picnic is held by Workers Party.

CAPITALIST COURT SEEKS MISSING LINK

Even Soviet Sympathy Is Verboten

Revolution, not evolution, was on trial yesterday before Judge Orr of the municipal court in Chicago's city Workers Party and the Young Workhall, when nineteen members of the ers' League appeared to answer the grave charge of speaking without a police permit on the corner of North avenue and Orchard street last month.

Those appearing were William F. Dunne, William F. Kruse, Thurber Lewis, Al. Schaap, Nat Kaplan, Harrison George, Barney Mass, Karl Reeve, Max Schachtman, Bernard Davis, Karl Kritchell, Natalie Gomez Gertrude Welsh, Elsa Block, Ida Eckels, Catherine Polishuck and Max Miroff.

City Attorney the Missing Link.

Defender of the agnostics in this case was Attorney Bentall, the city attorney represented the absent Simian, and the judge in the case, Warren H. Orr, of Carthage, Illinois, who is county judge of Hancock county, acting as associate judge of the municipal court, played the role of upholder of fundamentalism.

As illuminating the event, it may be said that a similar case against J. Louis Engdahl, editor of the DAILY WORKER, has been judged adversely to the scoffers of Ordinance 3703, and the whole question of the constitutionality of the act is to be decided on appeal to higher courts as a test case. Hence yesterday's circus was only a bit of by-play to be staged for the edification of those who have a sense of humor. Others can stop

WOOLEN WAGE CUT AFFECTS BOTH BRITISH AND AMERICAN WORKERS; ENGLISH UNION SURE TO STRIKE

(Special to The Daily Worker)

BOSTON, July 22.—The timing of the 10 per cent cut for 30,000 employes of the American Woolen Co. and several other large concerns with a five per cent cut for the woolen and worsted workers in the Bradford district of England is seen as evidence of the international understanding that is gaining ground in the textile industry.

The New England wage reductions are posted for July 27, two days after the date scheduled by British industrialists for the cuts in the British mills.

Strike In England Expected.

A general strike of the woolen workers in the mills across the water is expected by textile journals on this side. Such a strike would be called by the National Association of Unions in the Textile Trades of Great Britain which has ordered its members to cease work in affected mills the date the cut becomes operative.

Announcement of the reduction in the New England mills were given without previous warning and made in blunt paragraph notices pasted in the mills.

Promise to Workers Broken.

Much indignation is felt by the American Woolen Co.'s workers because of the declaration of its late president, William M. Wood, last fall, at the time reductions were being made in the cotton industry, that his corporation had no intention of following suit.

Those better acquainted with Wood discounted his promises because of his bad labor record and the fact that he was director and heavy investor with some of the largest cotton corporations profiting by the cuts. Since then Wood has retired from office with American Woolen.

Lawrence the Center.

Lawrence, Mass., leading U. S. woolen city, has most of the reduced workers. Cuts are decreed there for the Wood, Ayer, Prospect, Shawsheen, Riverina, Washington and Plymouth mills of the American Woolen Co. and the Arlington, George E. Kunhardt and Uswoco Mills. The Arlington Co. sets no limit on the reduction, merely informing its employes that a cut will take place on date.

Cuts have also been posted, for the American Woolen plants at Lowell, Mass., and Norwich, Conn. In other Lawrence mills reductions are in the air while managers sound out employes' sentiment. No action has yet been taken by the Rhode Island or New Jersey woolen manufacturers.

Unorganized Strike May Develop.

Lawrence has been the scene of

MEXICAN RAIL UNIONS MUST STRIKE OR DIE

Calles Would Smash Their Organization

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MEXICO CITY, July 22.—The "bull-fighters" tactics of the government of Mexico on its attack on the wages and working conditions of the railwaymen employed on the national lines, continue to give successes to the government in its efforts to demoralize the railway unions. The term, "bull-fighters tactics" first used in a manifesto of the Mexican Communist Party on the railway situation continues to gain currency as the railwaymen begin to comprehend that it accurately and picturesquely describes the situation.

The government must return the railway to private hands. That is provided for by the Lamont-De-la-Huerta treaty. It must also "readjust" the salaries and working conditions and destroy the railway unions, before returning the lines to private

FASCIST LEADER UPHOLDS ATTACK OF MURDERERS

Amendola Badly Hurt by Frenzied Mob

(Special to The Daily Worker)

ROME, July 22.—Deputy Giovanni Amendola, leader of the aventine opposition to the fascist party, "got what he deserved" in the attack by a fascisti crowd while fleeing from Montecatini, general secretary Farinacci of the fascisti said in a speech at Naples today. Farinacci has made open threats that Amendola will be murdered.

"The opposition must learn that no provocation will be further tolerated." Farinacci said in upholding the attack on Amendola's life. "The reaction against the principal responsible persons already has begun and this reaction the fascist party can not deplore.

"Anybody attempting to obstruct us will be treated as a traitor."

Amendola probably will be in a hospital for three weeks from the injuries suffered at the hands of the fascist mob.

JUDAS FARRINGTON GETS THIRTY PIECES OF PEABODY'S SILVER FOR BLACK TREACHERY TO UNION

By ALEX REID.

(Secretary of the Progressive Miners' Committee.)

ARTICLE II.

Another example of Farrington's union bleeding is seen in the following expense bill before he became the district president of the Illinois miners. It shows that Frank has always had an affinity for the miners' fund, in fact all thru Franks' career runs a mounmental expense account.

He charged up the International Union $4,018.00, for one year's expenses, while he was supposed to be working for the International Union, but these figures would indicate that Frank was working for himself.

That same year the expenses of John P. White and Frank J. Hayes combined were less than Farington's. Farirngton's expense for the year was more than four times the average earnings of the coal miners, and on top of this he had a few thousand dollars for salary. His expenses would have taken a large family around the world comfortably in a first class liner, and this at a time when many of the miners were in semi-starvation.

Still More Blood Money.

Since that time Farrington bought a beautiful piece of property in Alabama, paying $2,600.00 for it, close to his friends, the coal operators, who had also bought themselves an orchard as far away as possible from the prying eyes of the hungry coal miners whose money paid the bill.

Van Sweringen Rail Deal Is Scheme of Stock Jobbing, Charge

WASHINGTON, July 22.—The "billion dollar" Nickel Plate railroad merger, involving five big railroad systems, as proposed by the Van Sweringen brothers, is not a transportation deal, but is simply a stock-jobbing scheme, Henry W. Anderson, counsel for a group of minority stockholders of the Chesapeake and Ohio who are opposing the merger, charged before the interstate commerce commission today. J. P. Morgan is behind the Van Sweringen.

RIFFIANS CONTINUE TO ROUT FRENCH AND SPANISH INVADERS

LONDON, July 22.—French and Spanish forces have suffered additional losses from the Riffs in Morocco and the general situation remains serious.

The arrival of Marshal Petain has failed to have the desired effect on the French forces in the Fez sector. In the Riffian attack on the key positions of Ain Aicha and Ain Matouff, the French left 200 dead on the field.

The Spanish have suffered heavy losses at Vondak. The Sapnish burned several villages of the Beni Ide tribes in retaliation for their defeat.

CONVICT WOMAN WHO RAN BABY FARM, IS SENTENCED TO 7 YEARS

NEW YORK, July 22—Screaming hysterically and fighting with court attendants, Mrs. Augusta Geisen-Volk, who operated a "baby farm" here and pleaded guilty to baby substitution, was sentenced to Auburn prison today for three and one-half to seven years.

Sentence was pronounced by Justice McIntyre in general sessions, who branded her as "a fiend incarnate," and declared there was not a single extenuating circumstance in her favor.

German Note Does Not Look So Good Now

PARIS, July 22.—Gloom today succeeded the optimism expressed yesterday in the Parisian press on the German security reply.

The changed attitude was taken to express a change in the viewpoint of Foreign Minister Aristide Briand, who first looked on the note as "encouraging."

Le Matin today warned that France was not willing to permit the destruction of the treaty of Versailles. Pertinax in Echo de Paris advised France to abandon the pact idea if there was still time.

"The German reply could not be more unsatisfactory," he said.

Note Is Unsatisfactory

LONDON, July 22.—At the foreign office it was said the German note cannot be considered satisfactory in itself because it makes a number of references to the allies' attitude, particularly regarding the Rhineland which are unacceptable.

But the German request for accelerated discussion of the whole problem is satisfactory and it is hoped that this discussion will lead to the early conference, which Foreign Minister Chamberlain, has favored all along.

Woolen Wage Cut Affects Both American and British Workers

great battles in the past and may be again tho there is comparatively little organization there now. The United Textile Workers' Union has a local there and so does the American Federation of Textile Operatives, tho it is confined to the cotton mills. The more recently formed united front movement is endeavoring to get results as a co-ordinating agency.

Those who are talking of strike possibilities point out that former strikes began with little preliminary organization and they emphasize that the cut is producing an unbearable condition. With wages clustering around the 20 dollar mark, for full time operatives, a 10 per cent cut is a serious matter for a family whose expenses are already budgeted to the last cent.

geants are not removed from "wet" precincts because they fail to enforce the law, but because the competition among the captains is too keen. There is nothing a captain dreads so much as to be sent to a "dry" district. Of course, it should be understood that the terms "wet" and "dry" are only relative. Chicago is about as dry as the Pacific Ocean.

RESIGNATIONS from the British cabinet over the question of naval construction are expected. A certain faction favors a heavy appropriation for the immediate building of ships to keep pace with the United States' program. Others, including Winston Churchill, consider the taxpayers and their own political fortunes. The fact is that the British ruling class are no longer able to compete with their greatest commercial rival in the game of naval construction. If the big naval program is adopted, Churchill's budget will be knocked sky high and if it is defeated there will be resignations from the cabinet with a situation bordering on a split in the tory party.

THIS cabinet crisis might loom large, but for other troubles facing the empire. The danger of a coal strike is becoming more and more a probability. Confronted with a likely stoppage of work, Cook and his comrades are working hastily to throw up the nucleus of a powerful alliance of trade unions for offensive and defensive purposes. Practically every important section of the British trade union movement has now joined this combination. The reactionaries like J. H. Thomas and Frank Hodges have been delegated to the rear. British labor is facing a real crisis and to predict the outcome of the present situation would be a risky procedure indeed—for a prophet.

COINCIDENT with the evident approach of stirring times in Great Britain comes increasing activity and violence from the fascisti. The black shirts are now breaking up meetings in Hyde Park, while the police look on with unconcern. Hyde Park was once the sacred open forum for the expression of opinion. But the empire is no longer healthy and the nerves of her ruling class are getting jangled. The plutes are growing concerned over the future, hence the violence on the part of their tools.

THERE is encouraging news, even from Ireland, where the labor movement has not been distinguished by any notable accomplishments during the past few years. This encouraging news is the retirement of Tom Johnson as parliamentary leader of the Irish Labor Party. Johnson is a hide-bound reactionary, and was the only one of the Irish labor leaders to take the side of the British empire during the war. The news of his retirement is taken from the London Daily Herald, which quotes Johnson as saying that his relinquishment of the leadership has no significance, that he was merely relieving himself of some of his responsibilities.

BIG navy advocates threaten to split the British cabinet. In Japan the Jingoes are active. Here in America, rear and front admirals are delivering exhortations on the necessity for more battleships, airships and other instruments of war. Senator Hale visited Coolidge a few days ago and told the president that Doheny's tanks in Pearl Harbro, Honolulu, were rusting for want of oil and that the "Golden West" was in danger from Japan unless the United States had more battleships and harbors to accomodate them in. Calvin is said to have lent a willing ear to Hale's tale, and unless our guess is awry, Morgan will get more ships.

COMMUNISTS say, "the more peace conferences, the more the likelihood of war." Peace conferences are always devices to iron out serious differences that make for war between nations when they are not ready for war, and also to maneuver for position. When the United States called the Washington conference, the object was to smash the Anglo-Japanese alliance as a preliminary in the United States' onward imperial march. That conference did the trick. But it did not make for peace. All the nations that participated in that conference are building ships and more ships. There cannot be any peace under capitalism.

THE American fleet is now visiting Australia. The babbits of that British colony are babbling of the friendship between the United States and Australia. It is significant they point out, that for the first time in history an Australian loan was placed in Wall Street and not in London. That is significant and very much so. England is fast losing her grip on her colonies and the sight of the goodly navy of J. P. Morgan, will be ocular proof to the capitalists of Australia, that if the "mother country" is forced to play with Japan as a matter of self-preservation, Uncle Sam's navy is at hand. And what is a navy for anyhow, unless to collect loans in case the debtor becomes refractory?

THE political clouds are gathering over the world for another big burst that will make the last war look like a deaf and dumb picnic. The foreign sections of the newspapers are devoted to little else except the diplomatic maneuvers of the rival powers. And out of the murky darkness looms the bright light from Soviet Russia, which beckons the workers of the world onward to a new order of things, but the road to this goal is a hard and thorny one. Yet over this road the subject peoples and the exploited masses of the world must travel before the golden era of peace thru the emancipation of the last slave class in history will be realized!

HYMAN, PORTNOY, ZIMMERMAN COME TO CHICAGO SAT.

Tell of Sigman and Perlstein Here

The garment workers of Chicago are going to hear in person the leaders of the great left wing fight of the International Ladies Garment Workers' Union in New York, where Locals 2, 9 and 22, comprising 60 per cent of the New York City membership are suspended by the arbitrary action of the joint board controlled by the Sigman gangsters and the executives of these locals removed from office after a farcical trial upon charges of having held a May Day meeting at which Communist speakers actually talked about a revolution.

On Saturday, July 25th, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, Louis Hyman, manager of Local 9, Julius Portnoy, manager of Local 22, and Sasha Zimmerman, executive board member of Local 22, all representing the joint committee of action of the suspended locals of New York City, will speak to the Chicago garment workers at the Ashland auditorium, west room, at Ashland and Van Buren streets.

All garment workers are invited to come to hear these able and honest unionists who have led the revolt against the yellow socialist terror of the Sigman machine, one of whose shining lights is Meyer Perlstein, who managed the I. L. G. W. of Chicago so well that he spent something like a fortune of six figures with the net result of destroying the union by expelling its best members on similar charges of being Communists.

Urge Typographical Union to Join War on Public Printer

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(FP)— Columbia Typographical Union No. 101 will urge the convention of the International Typographical Union to be held at Kalamazoo, Mich, August 10 to 15, to take up the protest of the local union against further retention of George H. Carter in the office of public printer.

A resolution to this effect was unanimously adopted by Columbia union. The support of the American Federation of Labor in this fight against Carter will also be requested. Hitherto the A. F. of L. has held aloof from the controversy that has been waged by Columbia union against the public printer, on the ground that he is "incompetent and intolerant and has made himself a public tyrant."

Miss Pickford was expected to testify she knew nothing of the alleged plot until after the trio was arrested.

Soviet Republics Invited to Industrial Exhibition in City of New Orleans

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

TODAY, the Union of Soviet Republics tells the world that it has been invited to participate in the Commercial-Industrial Exhibition to be held in New Orleans, La., U. S. A., this fall. There is no doubt that the Workers' Government will accept.

But what terror must strike the hearts of the politicians in the Coolidge regime at Washington, D. C., who steadfastly contend, from "Silent Cal" and his secretary of state, Kellogg, on down the line, that they have not changed their attitude toward Soviet Rule?

Where is Kellog's predecessor, "Charlie" Hughes, who joined "Sammie" Gompers in his declining years, in declaring Soviet Russia to be an "economic vacuum," useless if not dangerous, to recognize and empty of any trade or commercial possibilities?

• • • •

If the Soviet Republics cannot break into Washington with a red ambassador, they can and have slipped around to the American side door, to the important port at the mouth of the Mississippi River where it flows into the Gulf of Mexico—NEW ORLEANS, the capital city of cotton.

All the attacks that have been made on Soviet Rule by the American state department have not bothered with facts. They have wandered far and wide in the realms of anti-Communist propaganda. But here are a few facts:

FIRST—There are offices in New Orleans of the All-Russian Textile Syndicate, Inc., a New York corporation with capital stock of $1,000,000 fully paid up in cash.

SECOND—The head of the syndicate is Fritz F. Kilevitz, who is also president of the All-Union Textile Syndicate of Moscow, which is a combination of all textile mills in Soviet Russia.

THIRD—The syndicate purchased 243,898 bales of the 1924-1925 American cotton crop, at a value of $36,340,000. Twenty-five steamers have been chartered to transport this cotton across the Atlantic.

FOURTH—The purchases of America's 1923-1924 cotton crop totalled 189,145 bales, valued at $31,457,000, and required 20 ships to transport to the Workers' Republic.

FIFTH—The first shipment was made on Feb. 8, 1924, and the shipments that now continue constantly are financed thru New York banks. Neither credits nor recognition has come from Washington, but "the syndicate has satisfactory credit arrangements with the Chase National Bank and the Equitable Trust Co., of New York," says the Russian Review, published by the Russian Trade Delegation, at Washington.

• • • •

Soviet Rule is busy buying the things the workers and peasants need thruout "The Union." Buying them right here in the United States of America!

What is more, it is having these goods, great shiploads of cotton, for instance, shipped into the Soviet Union thru Murmansk, the Red Port on the Arctic Ocean. It was thru Murmansk and Archangel that the United States government, in common with its capitalist allies, poured troops and munitions, in an effort to crush the Bolshevik Revolution of November, 1917. The American flag may fly from the masthead of some of the ships that sail into the harbor at Murmask, this month, and next month, and the months thereafter, but they carry no cargoes of soldiers and arms. Instead they are loaded to the gunwales with precious cotton cargoes that will feed the Soviet textile mills, making cloth to clothe the liberated masses of Russia, as part of their triple struggle to lift their standard of living, thru providing themselves with better homes, better clothing and better food than they have ever enjoyed during all the centuries of their enslavement.

In time the plundered and landless cotton growers of "The South," of Oklahoma and Texas especially, will learn where their cotton is going, who is buying it, and how it is being used in the land across the sea, where landlords have been evicted forever and profit rule has been abolished under the Soviet Star. They might, they will take it into their heads to proceed themselves in the same direction. Washington, the political seat of the American imperialist empire, will number this among its fears as the Union of Soviet Republics accepts the invitation to participate in the Commercial-Industrial Exhibition at New Orleans this fall.

MANY NEGRO AND CHINESE WORKERS AT MASS MEETING

PITTSBURGH, Pa., July 22—Great enthusiasm marked the mass meeting held at Pittsburgh, Pa., demanding that world imperialism keep hands off China and urging the American workers to stand by Soviet Russia. More Negro workers could be seen in this audience than ever attended a radical meeting in Pittsburgh. Many oriental workers and a number of Chinese students also attended.

Arne Swabeck, district organizer, in opening the meeting emphasized the fact that not only is the Soviet government the only government which has shown itself as a real friend and defender of the Chinese workers and the suppressed colonial peoples but also the Communist Party is the only party which has taken up the fight. He emphasized that in France while the socialists, the yellow trade union leaders, and all the so-called revolutionary parties were supporting French imperialism in their efforts to subjugate the Morrocan people only the Communist Party has stood up as the defender of these subjected races.

Max Salzman spoke on behalf of the Young Workers League and told about the struggles of the class conscious youth not only to support the movement for national liberation but for complete freedom of the working class. William Scarville, local organizer of the Negro Labor Congress, drew wholehearted approval from both colored and white workers when he stated that for a long time it has been his conviction that only by making common cause regardless of color of skin or race could the workers ever free themselves from imperialism.

Tells of Struggle.

H. H. Tseng, member of the local Kuomintang party gave a brief analysis of the struggles of the Chinese workers stating that the Chinese are very tolerant, very peaceful, had remained tolerant for more than 85 years but now had come to a point where they recognized that to even maintain a human existence to free themselves from imperialist oppression they must fight. He drew a strong applause when he said "we also recognize that we must fight together with the workers of the world."

Comrade Gitlow made a brilliant speech making an analysis and a comparison of the methods of imperialism abroad and the methods at home hidden behind phrases of democracy. He stated that many of the atrocities by the imperialist powers in China are very similar to acts performed in the United States against the workers in the name of democracy and he closed with a long declaration pledging the active support in a solid net alliance of the class conscious proletariat of the United States led by the Communist Party with the struggling colonial workers.

POST INCOME TAX PAYMENTS SEPT. 1

WASHINGTON, July 22.—Income tax payments will open to public inspection on and after Sept. 1, it was announced at the treasury department today.

The payments which will be made available for publication are those made in 1924 on 1923 incomes.

The lists will be posted in the internal revenue collection districts thruout the country, publication having been approved by the United States supreme court.

The amounts shown on the lists open for public inspection are the amounts of tax declared to be due by the tax payers in their returns filed beginning January 1, 1925. And may be subject to adjustments and revisions by the subsequent audit of the returns or by the filing of amended returns by the taxpayers.

Incomes represented are those for the calendar year, 1924. And for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1925.

Statement by Bureau of Internal Revenue

The following statement was issued by the bureau of internal revenue:

"The lists will be opened for public inspection at all times during each working day for thirty days, beginning September 1. Thereafter, the hours they shall be open for inspection may be regulated by each collector of internal revenue with a view to preventing undue interference with the official work of the office.

"However, following this thirty-day period the lists must be open for public inspection at least three days a week and during such days they shall be available to the public at least three hours a day. The days and hours will be selected by each collector and due publicity to their regulations will be given by the collectors.

"Each collector will designate an employe to supervise the inspection of the lists by the public. It will be the duty of this employe to see that the lists are not torn or mutilated to prevent any person from removing them from the collector's office and to see that no one monopolizes the lists to the exclusion of others."

LOS ANGELES HOLY DOPERS GATHER LUCRE

Bryan Bug Bites Hard in "Holy City"

By FRAPIESA

LOS ANGELES, July 22.—The season of religious revival is on. As the Mecca of grafting preachers, this city is in a unique position. The authorities put no restraint on the fakirs who impose on human credulity.

Miracle Tricks.

Wonderful feats are performed by those whose business is to delude. Miracles are made to order. Incurable diseases are cured overnight. The dead might be brot to life, if dupes desired. And the evangelists would say, simply: "No trouble at all, sir."

In the eastern cities the vagrants would not be allowed to operate. Public indignation would force the police to act. But in this town no religious imposter is discouraged by the law enforcers.

All that the police insist upon is the license money. That helps the taxpayers. Once it is well in hand the faith healers can fleece the gullibles until the cows come to church. There is absolutely no censorship of miracle tricks.

Building a Temple.

One of the great achievements of the religious traffic is the building of a temple by a female evangelist who began her career of saving souls four years ago. It is claimed that the temple cost was $1,000,000 and it probably does represent on investment of $100,000.

The holy lady who built it is of Scotch pedigree. Thomas Carlyle declared that all Scotch healers were quacks. That is a clew.

This sainted person went from town to town in California perfroming miracles. Children came to her on crutches and went away in perfect physical condition. Grown folks also acted. There was never an exposure of preliminaries.

She grew wealthy and decided to build a temple in Los Angeles. Her vultures, male and female, plucked the public. The temple was built.

She Reforms.

Having arrived, the saintess gave up her healing business. It was too risky. She dedicated hreself to converting horse thieves, pickpockets, etc. Scores testified to their utter depravity and to final salvation by her. The temple resounded with their testimony. It also re-echoed the sacred dame's denunciations of Bolsheviks, Communists, etc., for those are strictly part of her trade.

After the temple was built, a skeptic visited the lady. Mistaken for one of the gang, the visitor was invited to sit at a table with the saintess and her mother. There was on the table a bottle of gin, cigarettes, etc. The saintess drank, smoked and conversed in unmistakable Hollywood English. Her mother did likewise and made one remark which removed doubt from the skeptic. Addressing her daughter, she said, in a bantering way: "It is a shame how you take money from the dubs!"

One of Many.

There are hundreds like the one indicated in this city. They are accessories of the game. It is their part to drug the people.

Any Communist who has the slightest doubt that "religion is the opium of the people" might profit by a visit to Los Angeles. The scores of evangelists' tents, dwellings in which religious preaching is carried on red-hearted Rosicrucian shrines, etc. etc., will soon testify convincingly that the public is being shot full of mental dope.

Psychists, psychologists, spiritualists, fortune tellers, clairvoyants, mediums, etc., work without restriction so long as they have licenses. Any faker appears to be welcome.

Still, there is no reason to despair. A Workers Party is on the job at 204 South Spring street. It will prove an effective antidote for the drug of the paid preachers.

Getting a DAILY WORKER sub or two will make a better Communist of you.

CAPITALIST LOBBY CROWS OVER LABOR'S POLITICAL WEAKNESS; SLOW WORK A FELONY IN IDAHO

By ART SHIELDS.

(Federated Press Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK, July 22.—The manufacturers' lobby says the state legislatures of this country did what it asked them to last year for the most part. The lobby organization is known as the National Industrial Council, a federation of national, state and industrial associations, organized under the leadership of the National Association of Manufacturers in order—its literature states—"to foster constructive industrial legislation and to oppose enactment of class laws."

"Splendid Opposition to Class Laws."

In a summary and review of state legislation of 1925 distributed to its members, but not to the press, the association boasts that "the 1925 state legislatures were marked with an anticipated degree of conservative actions. The net results to manufacturing industries, with exception of a few states, were most satisfactory, altho the major reason for this was the splendidly co-ordinated opposition to class laws presented by the officers and members of state industrial bodies affiliated with this council."

Again the report proudly says: "Enactment on such matters as 'liberalizing' amendments to workmen's compensation insurance laws, delimiting hours of labor and fixing minimum wages and maximum hours for women, old age pensions, special industrial regulatory measures, granting special privileges to labor unions, etc. are conspicuously missing this year, owing, once again, to the effective and intelligent campaigns of opposition conducted by the various state manufacturers' associations represented on the advisory committee of this council."

Labor Politically Weak.

"Nevertheless," the council admits, "the legislative committees of organized labor in the several states did not come away entirely empty-handed. Altho their victories were mighty few, as, for example, the passage in New Jersey of a law of doubtful constitutionality, providing for jury trial in labor dispute injunction contempt cases, the margins of their defeats were uncomfortably close in several important instances, such as the indefinitely small vote which has temporarily defeated a vicious anti-injunction bill in the Illinois legislature; the narrow escape of New York industries from final passage of a 48-hour weekly working law affecting women workers.

Legislation that the council is particularly satisfied which includes the state police measures passed in Rhode Island, Illinois and Maine and a "practical and satisfactory" workmen's compensation insurance law which Missouri industrialists are given credit for securing in the Missouri legislature.

Lack of Speed on Job Now a Felony.

Summary of the legislation state by state shows satisfaction with Idaho for broadening the Idaho syndicalism act to make mere slowing down on the job a form of criminal sabotage; gratification with California for defeating 35 out of 37 proposed amendments to the Workmen's Compensation Act, the defeat being credited to the California Manufacturers' Association; praise for Colorado where business interests successfully opposed a 48-hour week for cement and plaster industry workers; regulation of hours for women and drastic amendments to the workmen's compensation law—these listed by the council as "anti-industrial legislative" bills.

A one-day-rest-in-seven bill before the state legislature of Illinois while the report was being prepared is also listed as an "anti-industry" measure, a phrase frequently used by the council in connection with pro-labor proposals.

Prison labor gets the floor in the section on Oklahoma where the council shows its pleasure with the repeal of the law compelling the labeling of convict made products.

Victory Everywhere For Capitalist Class.

West Virginia stood safe for the employers, the report telling that "A long list of class legislative proposals, including anti-injunction, regulation repeal of the state constabulary act, of hours of labor of female employes, were all defeated or 'lost' in committees."

Wisconsin's tax legislation does not please the lobbyists, but in general, taking state by state, they show how business has won over the worker. Even in Wisconsin an 8-hour law was beaten. It is an interesting report, available for its members but not intended for the newspapers.

CHANG TSO-LIN ACCUSED AS A JAP MERCENARY

Soviet Paper Points Out Betrayals

MOSCOW, June 18.—(By Mail.)—Commenting upon the situation in China, the Isvestia points out that General Chang Tso-lin, who is actually the most powerful and influential Chinese militarist, is standing aloof from Shanghai events, which open a period of new development of the national struggle of the Chinese people.

Chang Tso-lin, the Moscow paper goes on to say, is by no means a national leader, as the English press is endeavoring to represent him. His present powerful position he acquired thanks to Japan, whose interest he has been and is systematically serving. This is clearly shown by his attitude towards the Shanghai affair and his stand in the matter of the construction of Japanese railway branches in Manchuria, indeed, these new lines, constructed by Japanese engineers with Japanese money, are the greatest blow to the prosperity of the Chinese Eastern Railway, whereby China's interests are violated while the aims are specially served of Japanese immigration in Manchuria, where the Mukden warlord has already allotted lands to Japanese emigrants.

To justify his position, General Chang Tso-lin asserts that an agreement on railway construction is one of China's new internal affairs, even tho such an action did amount to sacrificing the interests of the C. E. R. and the Chinese people to those of Japan.

Thus, concludes the Isvestia, thru all his conduct, Chang Tso-lin has definitely revealed himself as a politician alien to the national movement in China.

SONS OF ITALY TORN IN FIGHT WITH FASCISTS

NEW YORK, July 22.—A factional row between the fascist faction in the Sons of Italy in America and the faction headed by supreme court Justice Salvatore A. Cotillo, head of the New York state branch, threatens to split the organization.

Cotillo declared that the head of the supreme council of the organization, John di Silvestro of Philadelphia, is a "tool of Mussolini." He said that di Silvestro is now trying to gain control of the Sons of Italy for his fascist faction. The organization has 200,000 members in this country, 35,000 being in New York state.

At the convention on August 5, 6, and 7, in Schenectady, the Cotillo group will endeavor to elect Congressman La Guardia as grand master of the grand council of the state of New York, the office which Cotillo vacates automatically, having served the limit of two terms.

Cotillo opposes the fascist group on the ground that he favors "Americanization." He is a Tammany politician having been in the democratic party for years.

NEGRO WOOLEN MILL STRIKERS STILL IN JAIL

Officers of N. A. A. C. P. Refuses Them Aid

By A. WARRENO

(A. N. L. C.)

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., July 22.—After considerable inquiries, we learned that a strike took place about two months ago affecting several Negro workers employed in a woolen mill at Khimency, Delaware, known as the Khimency Woolen Mills.

An official of the N. A. A. C. P., whose name is Reading "investigated" the case by asking the police officials about the matter. He reported to his national headquarters that the Wilmington branch of his organization approved strikes, but was against rioting, the charge lodged against the victims of the police.

Five men were held on this charge. Here his investigation ended. He was certain that bail had been set.

Employer Refused to Pay.

The strike was called against an employer who refused to pay the wages he had agreed to pay. It was spontaneous and unorganized. After the strike started the boss hired Negro scabs. The strikers were picketing and a melee occurred with some of the scabs getting the worst of it. Five strikers were arrested under a Delaware law against "rioting" which is a felony and punishable by a penitentiary sentence.

Upon further investigation, the American Negro Labor Congress received the following letter from the New Castle County workhouse, Wilmington, Delaware:

Still in Jail.

"Replying to your inquiry of the 29th ult., the five men were committed here on April 20, for disorderly conduct, having each been given a term of 30 days in default of payment of fine and costs amounting to $23.50. Three of these paid their fines a few days later and were released; the remaining two serving out their 30 days.

"We understand this disorderly conduct grew out of a strike at the Kiamensi Wollen Mills, with the details of which we are not familiar."

Perth Amboy Listens to Manley Speech on Chinese Strike Move

By JAMES SZEPESY.

PERTH AMBOY, N. J., July 22.—The Workers Party branch of Perth Amboy opened the open air season with a successful meeting Saturday night, at the corner of Division and Fayette streets, with Comrade Joseph Manley as the speaker.

Comrade Manley's speech dealt with the situation of the workers of Perth Amboy and he also linked up with that, the national and international situations.

He explained the situation in China, the part the Kuomintang party and the Communist Party are playing in this struggle. He also dealt with the Morocco struggles, and the role the socialist parties are playing in this fight as blackhearted traitors.

The crowd was very enthusiastic and Comrade Manley was stopped many times during the talk by the audience with its cheering and clapping.

Near the end of the meeting a socialist came there and asked the speaker "Why has Soviet Russia political prisoners?"

The crowd cheered Comrade Manley when he answered this question, and the socialist seeing that the audience was with the speaker, did not bother any more.

The audience cheered and clapped wildly every time Comrade Manley mentioned Soviet Russia.

All the literature was sold, including the DAILY WORKERS, Young Workers, and pamphlets. The crowd numbered about one hundred. From now on, open air meetings will be held regularly.

CAPTURE THE FILM!

Hints on the Use of, Out of the Use of, Proletarian Film Propaganda.

By WILLI MUENZENBERG.

FERDINAND LaSALLE characterized the press as a new major power. The same can be said of the film, which, in some countries, has already achieved a greater significance than the press itself. The total attendance in the movie theaters of England, France and the United States is perhaps even today greater than the total number of newspaper readers in those countries.

Even if the press were granted the greater numerical dissemination, let it not be forgotten that the film, thru the medium of the visual picture, influences its patrons far more strongly and emphatically than does the printed word its readers.

He then develops the thot of the importance of technical progress in the film world finally convincing the last opponent of its value and permanence.

We must develop the tremendous cultural possibilities of the motion picture in a revolutionary sense . . . the film must truthfully reflect social conditions instead of the lies and fables with which the bourgeois kind befuddles the workers, etc.

AS in many other instances, the working class organizations were the most timid and most tardy in the effort to put this new medium to their use. The time is not so far past when social-democratic leaders, in common with bourgeois ideologists, in all seriousness proposed to boycott the films because of their competition with the theater, their flattening of public taste and destruction of literary standards. Only after the war were timid attempts made to put the film into the service of working class propaganda. In various countries workers' organizations arranged "Better Movie Nights" in which, besides the showing of educational and cultural films, criticism of current entertainment films was given. In 1922 in Germany the A. D. G. B. (All German Federation of Trade Unions) tried, thru the establishment of a "Peoples Movie," to produce and exhibit socialistic working class pictures. The attempt was unsuccessful, but it was later repeated by the A. G. D. B. in the production and distribution of the film "The Smithy," which, however, also failed of mass influence. In the main the labor organizations and even the Communist Parties and groups have left this most effective means of propaganda and agitation unopposedly in the hands of their enemy.

The bourgeoisie, and especially the extreme nationalists and militarists very early recognized the significance of the film as a propaganda weapon, and constantly and most extensively put it to their service. Particularly far-reaching exploitation of the film took place during the world war, particularly by England and France which spent tremendous sums on film propaganda against the Central Powers in allied and neutral countries. Germany tried in vain to beat the opponent at this game, and even created a special film center for the purpose of pushing nationalist films to fan the war spirit. These films received little distribution outside of Germany and Austria. But it is beyond argument that the war and incitive films contributed very heavily to the creation of the chauvinist insanity in the war, and the post-period showed continued use of the films for the purpose.

WHILE in England and France a whole row of pictures proclaimed the military victory, the German producers were more concerned with awakening a faith in the possibility of a rebirth of the "good old times" of Germany's "greatness." A typical example of this series is the picture "Frederick, The Great," which was mightily effective along this very line in petit-bourgeois and "spiessbürgerlichen" circles.

In considering the development of the German film industry it is interesting to note the reflection of the current political tendencies. During the mounting wave of the monarchist movement which culminated openly in the election of Hindenberg there was a decided increase in the production and release of monarchist and militarist films.

The pictures, "The King's Grenadier," "Ash Wednesday," "Reveille" "The Tragedy of Major Redl," are typical examples of this ten and it would be very interes establish statistically in ho theaters, during the few weeks the presidential by-elections th similar films were shown to th lic.

HOW far film is exploited for definite political ends is shown in the large number of prejudice building films directed by European and American producers against Soviet Russia. For example the film "Death Struggle" (Todesreigen) produced in Berlin, which for months in practically all German cities conjured up on the screen the most unconsciable concoction of invention and fantasy of terror and horror on the part of the Soviet government against the Russian workers and peasants. In several industrial centers the workers became so enraged at this calumny that, as in Leipsig, they smashed up the projectors and burned the films. The attitude of these workers is entirely understandable, but it recalls its precedent in the early days of capitalism when the workers, feeling their livelihood threatened by the new machines smashed the new tools and set a red cock on the roof of the manufacturer. Only later did the proletarians learn that it does no good to destroy machines, but that what concerns us in the conquest of those machines and their application in a manner useful to the workers. Understandable tho the action of the Leipzig workers, it shows no workable remedy with which to meet the evil. Not the destruction of tools and technical equipment, but their conquest and their turning to the use of the labor movement, for the idea-world of Communism. One of the most pressing tasks confonting Communist parties on the field of agitation and propaganda is the conquest of this supremely important propaganda weapon until now the monopoly of the ruling class, we must wrest it from them and turn it against them.

Predicts Earthquakes.

ROME, July 22.—Prof. Bendani, some of whose earthquake predictions have been fulfilled, today predicted that July 25 and 26 would see two more shocks of importance. "Two earthquakes are imminent the night of July 25 and 26 in Alaska and during the day of July 30 in the Japanese islands," he said.

SOVIET RUSSIA'S FLAX SEED AREA DOUBLE IN YEAR

Need 60,000 Tractors; So Import Two-thirds

NEW YORK, July 22.—A report issued by the Central Bureau of the Society for Technical Aid to Soviet Russia contains the following interesting account of tremendous agricultural gains made by Soviet Russia:

Increases in Flax Area.

This year the seeded area of flax in Moscow is twice as large as last year and is now almost equal to the seeded area in prewar times. It is expected this year that the market will consume 12,000,000 poods of flax.

The grain elevators in the ports of the Soviet Union of Moscow are now under the control of the state bank. Their capacity now exceeds the prewar figures by more than 2,700,000 poods. The construction of a new grain elevator in Nicholaeff will be completed this year. It will have a capacity of 2,500,000 poods.

Reconstruction of Grain Elevators.

Ukrainia and North Caucasia are constructing 23 new grain elevators, each with a capacity of from 60 to 100 thousand poods. In the Urals nine elevators are being constructed with a capacity of from 100 to 150 thousand poods each.

The Production of Hemp.

To date 1,700,000 poods of hemp has been prepared. An additional 700,000 poods will be ready by the end of the present agricultural year. The production of hemp in the previous year was 939,000 poods.

Soviet Russia Needs 60,000 Tractors.

According to plans of experts the U. S. S. R. will need during the next thre years at least 60,000 tractors: 5,000 in 1925; 8,500 in 1926; 15,500 in 1917; and 31,000 in 1928. Soviet factories will be able to furnish not more than one-third of this number and two-thirds will be imported.

In 1922-23 the U. S. S. R. imported 805 tractors; in 1923, 1,375; in 1924-25, over 4,000. But due to the demand it would be possible this year to sell from 10 to 12 thousand tractors.

The National Commissariat of Agriculture has called a meeting of all leading officers of the agricultural departments thruout Russia. The meeting will be held in the last days of July, in Moscow, and it will work out and consider plans for a more profitable exploitation of the forests thruout all republics of the Soviet Union.

WISCONSIN FEDERATION TRAVELS AROUND IN SAME OLD CAPITALIST CIRCLE OF POLITICAL IMPOTENCE

(By The Federated Press)

LAKE GENEVA, Wis., July 22.—Increased strength is reported to the delegates by the officials of the Wisconsin State Federation of Labor which opened in 33rd annual convention at Lake Geneva, July 21. "No notable boom has taken place, but most of the substantial organizations record a consistent increase in membership," declares the general executive board.

"As in past years, efforts of employers to lengthen the work day, reduce wages and impose less favorable conditions have been uniformly unsuccessful when directed against well-organized groups." Twenty locals have affiliated since the last convention, three withdrew, and one disbanded.

Private Dicks Ruled Out.

Company unions are condemned in a warning against company-controlled roganizations of workers. A triumph against private detective agencies is recorded in the fight to prevent the notorious Howard Russell detective agency.

The Wisconsin industrial commission refused Russell a license as an employment agency on the ground that "the conduct of a private detective agency specializing in industrial work renders the character of the applicant unfit to engage in the business of an employment agent."

Wisconsin labor, like Minnesota and other states, feels compelled to report that "the 1925 legislature did not prove to be the progressive body that was looked for by many after the elections were announced last fall. Many who were brot forward as progressives during the campaign turned out to be the opposite."

Nevertheless some legislative fruits were reaped including ratification of the federal child labor amendment, regulation of child labor on farms and in fruit-growing, regulation of private detective agencies, old age pensions at the option of the counties, tax exemption for labor temples not run for individual profit, home rule for cities, increased exemption under state income tax law and taking the shackles off the state-owned life insurance company.

No Labor Party in Sight.

In the field of political action, Pres. Henry Ohl, Jr., of the federation, and Secy. J. J. Handley, who were sent as delegates to the abortive third party conference in Chicago, Feb. 22, urge that until a labor party is formed that labor pay the "closest attention to the proposed make-up of our legislative and judicial bodies as well as executive offices in nation, state and community, by fostering co-operation between those forces which are sincere in the promotion of labor's program."

The Lake Geneva convention is expected to continue for four days.

Three German Fascists on Trial Before Soviet Court

There is now proceeding in Moscow the trial of three German fascists (Hackenkreuzler) who, on their own confession, came to Russia with the express purpose of carrying on espionage and to assassinate the most prominent members of the Soviet government, including Stalin, Trotsky, and Kamenev. It should be mentioned by the way, that these assassins are receiving the sympathy and support of the social democratic press of Austria and Germany, which only recently were calling on the workers to commemorate the anniversity of the death of the socialist martyr and victim of fascism, Matteotti.

We give below an extract from the leading article of the Pravda of June 26, dealing with this trial.—Editor.

THE declarations made yesterday by one of the three accused German fascists, who have come to Russia in order to murder leading personalities of the Soviet power and of the Communist Party, have opened up such a panorama as to the morals of the monarchist conspirators that even the most unbridled Communist phantasy could scarcely find better arguments against the bourgeoisie.

Herr Ditmar who has become penitent, has, already before the court before witnesses and in the presence of his fellow prisoners, made damning statements.

THE whole bourgeois and social democratic press of Germany has for long endeavored to prove that the Moscow trial is only a frame-up, that the accused are not fascists and white guardists, but noble minded young scholars, young scientists who have journeyed to the barbaric country of red discoveries, red fairy tales and red miracles and who have been captured and held in prison, that these young scholars are innocent and that only the Moscow Tchekists can assert that they are familiar with poisons and pistols, rules of conspiracy and other far from innosent things.

The accused Ditmar has shown how mendacious and hypocritical this concern of the German press, particularly of the fascist wing of the counter-revolution, has been. Monarchist conspiracies in Germany, espionage work among the working class, penetration into the Communist Party by agent provocateurs, service in the Berlin police presidium, relations with princes, counts, barons, etc.; fascist organization "consul," drowning of the revolutionary attempts of the German proletariat in blood, unsuccessful provocatory attempts to sneak into the Russian Trade Mission in Berlin and, finally, the adventurous journey to Russia for purpose of carrying out murders—these are all links in the chain of crimes of the counter-revolutionary cliques, who are stained with the blood of the German people and who were about to stain themselves with the blood of our best men of the Soviet country.

THE crimes of these people against the German proletariat were not judged by our court, this must be the affair of the proletarian court of the German Soviet Republic. In spite of the fact that the threads of the crime lead in a most striking manner to the portals of the Berlin police presidium and to a whole number of highly placed personalities of the German oligarchy, we will not break out into hysterics over Germany. We shall soberly weigh everything up and we know that there are firmly rooted economic and political reasons which induce us to value peaceful relations with the German republic. But we must candidly assert that the monarchist and fascist circles resort to means of warfare which arouse the greatest indignation and abhorence in our country. It would be wrong for our people to tolerate such things, just as the proletarian court could not overlook these murderers, who were only prevented from carrying out their intended acts of murder thanks to the watchfulness of our comrades. And this court will pronounce its judgment with no uncertain voice, if the course of the proceedings should demand it, if the results of the preliminary investigation and Ditmar's credible statements are not refuted.

OUR court is not employing forged Zinoviev letters, as is the habit of the civilized forgers of Great Britain, nor false quotations as did Painleve's only a few days ago, who brot forward a mass of his own inventions and afterwards declared with a genial smile over these same words and inventions. "Se non e vero e' ben trovato!" "If it is not true then it is a good invention." Our court does not need such half-witted provocateurs as Felix Neumann, but prefers to deal with objective data, with genuine documents and statements, not of its agents but of people who came here on the orders of the fascists.

Our authorities do not think of arranging raids upon the German embassy as did the German police upon the Russian mission in Berlin—this same police who are deeply involved in the affair of the accused fascists—for we are for peace, for peaceful relations and their extension, for we are not given to hysteria, like the monarchist and social cemocratic leaders of the Berlin police. Our court will soberly weigh the matter and calmly determine the punishment to be borne by each of the accused.

UPPER SILESIA TURNS TO REDS, MANY JOBLESS

Financial Crisis in Poland Impends

BERLIN, Germany, July 22.—The workers of Polish Upper Silesia are increasing their demand for a Soviet government, and have struck terror into the Polish government, reports here disclose.

The Polish government and Germany have been carrying on a tariff war, and as a result the steel plants and coal mines of Upper Silesia, which ordinarily export 350,000 tons a month to Germany, are closing down. Thousands are out of work.

Then rapid spread of Communist ideas among the workers has prompted the Warsaw government to attempt negotiations with Germany on the tariff situation. There are 100,000 men out of work in the district of Kattowitz alone.

The Polish government has increased the intensity of the situation by calling the Silesian reservists to the army despite the convention liberating the inhabitants of the region from military service for eight years.

A financial crisis looms in Poland. The government is unable to pay doles to the unemployed. Forty per cent of Poland's foreign trade is with Germany, and with this cut off, Poland's economic and financial condition is bad.

Building Permits in Chicago Still Break All Previous Records

Building permits are still breaking all records for Chicago and Cook county and those issued for this month up until last Saturday total more than $13,000,000, according to the citizens' committee to enforce the Landis scabby open shop.

The total value of permits to date for this year exceeds already $210,000,000, which is $39,000,000 more than for the same period of 1924 and $12,000,000 more than for the same period of 1923, the latter being classed as a banner building year in Chicago's history.

The Landis award contractors are securing a goodly percentage of the new construction work and 33 per cent of the value of permits have been awarded to Landis award contractors since July, asserted the open shop outfit.

CURSE OF CRAFT UNIONISM HITS BUILDING TRADES WORKERS; LEFT WING MUST END RULE OF FAKERS

By CHARLES ERICKSON, Worker Correspondent.

War has been declared in the building trades, one international against another international, the Bricklayers against the Plasterers and Cement Finishers and within the internationals themselves we find the officials of one local attacking those of another local.

Not only is this taking place within the organizations of skilled workers, but also among the unskilled laborers, hodcarriers, etc.

Altho large internationals have gone on records for amalgamation, nevertheless it is just a scrap of paper as far as the officials are concerned, unless the rank and file led by the left wing fight to carry it out.

Officials Attack Each Other.

Within the locals of the International Hod Carriers, Building Laborers and common laborer' unions of America we find the officials of one local attacking those of another even to the extent of not recognizing the permits issued by different locals.

An example of this was clearly demonstrated the other day on one of the big construction jobs in the city.

A worker applied for membership in Local No. 3, of the I. H. C. B. L. & C. F. U. of A., a permit being issued, No. 587 dated May 6, 1925, on which $15.00 was paid. This permit was issued to the worker while employed on a large building under construction and entitled him to working privileges for some time to come. The worker after a few days, was laid off and he found employment on a cement construction job doing work on side walls and curbs and gutters.

Forced to Change Local.

This work is considered under the jurisdiction of Local No. 76 of the same International. After working for a few days on this job one of the business agents came out to the job in question, asked this worker, among others, to sign up in Local No. 76 in order to work.

The iniation fees for membership in the locals in Chicago of the I. H. C. B. L. & C. F. U. of A. is fifty dollars.

In order for the worker to hold his job he signed up with Local No. 76, not being familiar with the situation within the union, and in doing so losing the money paid on the permit issued by Local No. 3.

While we workers who have union cards in good standing are allowed to work on any or all construction work, after a bitter fight some years ago, nevertheless, the same rights should and must be given to those workers who are employed on permits.

Fat Salaries of B. A.'s

In Chicago alone there are a great number of local unions of this same international, each having from three to six business agents, receiving their fat salaries of sixty-five to one hundred dollars per week and expenses and the expenses run high, to hear the reports given at union meetings.

It is this fear of losing the fat "pie cards" that they fight against amalgamation of the locals into one industrial union. Thus doing away with some of the useless officers and the expense which falls upon the shoulders of the exploited workers.

This can be stopped only, if the rank and file, led by the left wing, unite and throw off some of these useless officials who are in these unions for their own interest first and the union members second. They fear losing their fat jobs thru amalgamation of all building trades unions into industrial unions.

Bore Way to $75,000

CHICAGO—Boring thru a two foot brick wall, fur bandits early today made away with $75,000 worth of furs from the wholesale establishment of Kaiser and company in a loop building.

COAL OPERATORS PLAY CONFIDENCE GAME ON MINERS

Want Them to Work Without Any Pay

(Special to The Daily Worker)

TRIADELPHIA, W. Va., July 22—Mines No. 2 and 3 are idle here, as a result of the Paisley Coal Company trying to force the miners to work up to August 25th, without any pay. The Lucy mine at Stewartsville, Ohio, is idle for the same reason. The Company claims that they are unable to pay the miners before that time, as they (the company) will not be able to get the money sooner.

The contract existing between the men and the coal company calls for pay days on the 10 and 25th of each month, and the men are determined to force the company to live up to the contract. The miners remember that many of their brothers in Illinois, have been forced to do without their pay now for over 18 months as a result of a similar scheme.

Stole Miners Pay.

The miners in Pickneyville, Duquoin, Sessor and other places in district 12, worked for over a month and have received nothing for their work. This happened over a year ago and there is no prospects yet for any pay. In one mine the men went back to work, on the promise of pay and worked another month, then shut down again, and paid the men nothing for that month either, making two months pay that this company owes the men.

Another coal company had the men go to work and put the shaft in operation, clean up the roads, falls, timber where necessary, and put it in a position ready to start, then as suddenly shut down again and the men got beat out of this also.

No wonder the men here are refusing to work a month or six weeks without pay. They remember the Illinois steals, and as one man said he don't propose to give his labor in charity to the thieving coal barons.

4. Deny the possibility of a miracle, or the supernatural.

Feel For A Woman

5. Teach that man has evolved thru millions of years from a single protoplasmic cell and is ever evolving, while the bible says that the first man was made in the perfect image of god and later fell because the first woman, his wife, believed what the snake said to her about eating the forbidden fruit.

6. Teach that man evolved from lower animals and not from Adam and Eve.

7. Declare that blood is the most vital fluid of the human body, while god arose bodily from the dead when no blood was left in his body.

A Lousy Miracle

8. Teach that one elemental matter cannot be changed into another simple elemental matter, whereas god made full grown woman out of the rib of man, changed the dust of Egypt into lice, and made all the earth out of nothing.

9. Teach that rainbows are reflections of light rays on water in the clouds, while the bible says god made the rainbow as a promise to Noah that he would not again kill every living thing by flood.

10. Teach that it is impossible for a living body to overcome the law of gravity, while the bible says Jesus Christ ascended to heaven after he arose from the dead, and that all dead shall be resurrected and ascend to heaven on judgment day.

Created Out of Nothing

11. Teach that life has been on earth for millions of years and that the earth was once a red hot mass which cooled and hardened, while the bible teaches that the earth was created out of nothing less than 6,000 years ago.

12. Teach that earth is round, while the bible teaches the earth is flat and on a foundation

Clever Sabotage

13. Teach that language and speech are the gradual outgrowth and unfoldment of thought brought about by the evolution of man, whereas the bible teaches that the earth had one language and one speech until man decided to build a tower of Babel which would reach up to heaven when god came down and suddenly confounded their speech so that no one could understand them.

Continuance of such instruction, Wittner said, out of money collected as taxes, would work injury and "irreparable damage and loss to the plaintiff and to all the tax-payers of the district and the United States."

Mexican Rail Unions Must Strike or Die

hands. It has till 1926 to accomplish this and therefore has plenty of time to employ its wearing-down policy before making the direct attack.

Many Workers Fired

In the bull fight, the bull is jabbed at and slashed and then the fighter retreats, returns to the attack and retreats again, bewilders, mystifies and tires the bull, and at last, when it is wearied out exhausted, confused, the bull-fighter closes in for the "kill"; so the government has been playing with the railwaymen for six months, threatening, witholding pay, cutting wages, changing working conditions, yielding again and retreating, and then returning to the attack; threatening to fire 40,000 and then discharging only a few odd thousand, threatening to apply big wage cuts and then applying only little ones, and thus slowly confusing, tiring, wearing down and demoralizing the railway unions.

There have been two "psychological" moments thus far, for a rail strike; but on both occasions the timidity of the leaders and the tactical skill of the government, prevented the men from utilizing the appropriate moment for the general strike.

The first of the two occasions, was at the beginning of the year when the government ordered all railwaymen to take the oath of loyalty administered to government employees. The second was July first when the "readjustments" were scheduled to go into effect.

Official Refuse to Call Strike

The week or so before July first, as the government announced it was to drop 40,000 men, cut wages from 10 to 60 per cent and make many unfavorable modifications of working conditions, there was an epidemic of local and partial strikes thruout the system.

The men got ready for a general strike July first. Resolutions poured into the national headquarters of the railway unions promising support for the strike. The Communist Party named committees of action everywhere, which had as their principal purpose the securing of solidarity on the part of the peasant and the workers organized in other federations.

These committees worked in close touch with local strike committees of the railwaymen. The eve of July first saw partial strikes everywhere. The strikes were complete in all important shops. Two seccessive Sundays all the mechanics went out because under the new conditions they were not to receive double time for Sunday. The carpenters struck two successive Saturday afternoons for the forty-four hour week. In a frontal attack, the government would have been powerless.

The government responded to the critical situation with new suggestions for parleys, with promises to reconsider some of the "readjustments" and to put them into effect gradually during a period of three months.

Union Leaders Cowardly

The leaders of the railwaymen, with one or two exceptions, are not corrupt. But almost without exception they are cowardly, timid and "respectable," ready for almost anything but a direct fight against the government; ready to accept any excuse for postponing the fight or for evading it.

The leaders of the trainmen asked for more time to "prepare" their membership for the strike. The others, glad of an excuse to evade the fight, declared that they must wait for a unanimous strike vote.

Communist Manifesto Unites Workers

A wave of protest began among the railway masses. A timely manifesto of the Communist Party gave this protest cohesion and direction, and from every railway center came a flood of messages and telegrams: "Vote the strike before it is too late. Vote the strike before demoralization sets in."

On Friday, Saturday and Sunday, June 26, 27, 28, great numbers of railwaymen were in permanent session with the trade union committee of the Communist party, seeking advice and direction for the strike that every one expected to break out July 1. On Monday night, June 29., there was to be a general meeting to consider the question.

Calles Deports Wolfe

On Monday morning, President Calles responded to the critical situation with characteristic energy and skill.

He seized and deported a foreign Communist, Bertram D. Wolfe, issued a statement that the strike was ordered "by the Third International" for political purposes; and another statement that he was willing to confer with the men on minor details of the readjustments and that they would be applied gradually between July and November.

Leaders Give In To Calles

The railwaymen's leaders fell into the double trap. They entered into renewed conferences thus confusing and weakening the strike spirit; and they disclaimed their connections with Communism and their intention of "causing difficulties for the government." Both of these acts definitely lowered the morale of the members of the unions.

More Local Strikes

July 10 finds the "readjustments" still not accomplished. The unions are not demoralized in spite of the wavering of their leaders. A new wave of partial strikes is beginning as indicated by the strike on the Puebla division caused by a mere two hours delay in pay. The Communist Party rapidly orientated itself to the new situation and, abandoning its double united front with the leaders and masses, began a new campaign of mass pressure from below to force the leaders to a strike decision.

The Calles government issues new conciliatory statements about gradually affecting the readjustments between now and December. And so the situation stands. The delay is more unfavorable to the railwaymen than to the government, because it gives the government time to prepare, to seek to corrupt certain elements in the unions (never a hard task in Mexico) and to sow division and demoralization.

Men Must Fight

If the government cannot destroy the unions before the end of the year, it must force a strike, as the lines must be given back in 1926, without deficit, without high wages and without fighting unions. If the men want to save their wages and working conditions, they must fight. The longer they wait the worse for them. A strike may break out at any time. It may not come till the end of the year, or it may be postponed till the government has succeeded in demoralizing and breaking the rail unions. But one thing is sure—it is "strike or destruction."

If the rail unions go down the most powerful group of unions independent of the government will have been destroyed and the wage level of the entire working class lowered. If they win out of their victory will grow a national federation of independent unions, and, thanks to the role of the Communist Party enjoying the confidence of the entire militant working class.

Such are the stakes. The issue is difficult to predict. But the fight must be fought.

MASS MEETING AGAINST POLISH TERROR IN N. Y.

Workers Voice Protest at Manhattan Lyceum

NEW YORK, July 22.—A mass demonstration against Polish imperialism and persecution of revolutionary workers will take place on Wednesday, July 22, 8 p.-m., at Manhattan Lyceum, 66 East 4th street, under the auspices of the Workers Party, Local New York.

The occasion for this meeting is the arrival in the United States of Count Alex. Skrzynski, Polish minister for foreign affairs. The count comes here ostensibly on a mission of "peace" to lecture at the Institute of Politics, at Williamstown, Mass., and disavows any financial or political aims. There is no doubt, however, that the Polish minister is here to negotiate a loan to Poland, and get the backing of the United States government and American financial interests for its militarist-imperialist designs and its brutal crushing of the revolutionary workers of Poland.

The workers of New York, of all nationalities, must join in a rousing protest at Manhattan Lyceum next Wednesday against the murderous imperialists and jingoists of Poland.

Prominent speakers in English, Polish, Ukrainian, and Jewish will address the meeting, among them being Earl Browder, member of the Central Executive Committee of the Workers Party, and Thadeus Radwanski, editor of the Novy Mir and one of the most powerful orators in the Polish revolutionary movement.

Another new Sub—Makes another Communist.

Darwinian Theory of Evolution Plays an Important Part in Class Struggle

MARXISM AND DARWINISM. By Anton Pannekoek (translated by Nathan Weiser), published by Chas. Kerr and company. Order from the DAILY WORKER, 1113 W. Washington Blvd., Chicago, Ill.

Reviewed by Karl Reeve

THE Darwinian theory of evolution is playing its role in the class struggle today, exemplified in the Scopes trial at Dayton, Tennessee, just as it has been used as an instrument in the class struggle in the past, as we learn from Anton Pannekoek's book. In Europe, Darwinism was used by the bourgeoisie in the struggle against the feudal lords, and was of inestimable service in smashing the religious tradition and the theory of "divine rights" on which the feudalistic system leaned.

Anton Pannekoek, a Dutch professor of astronomy, is now in the anti-parliamentary group in Holland. He has for many years taken part in the revolutionary movement in Europe. Panneokoek was criticized by Lenin for his extreme left, anti-parliamentary views.

Pannekoek, under the name of Horner, wrote for the German revolutionary press. He is a friend of Gorter, and with him fought in the left wing of the Holland social-democratic party.

Pannekoek took part in many discussions in the second international, and always was in the left wing, taking the revolutionary position against the mensheviks. He crossed swords with Kautsky several times. Pannekoek was one of the founders of the Communist Party of Holland.

"Darwin's theory that man is the descendant of the lower animal destroyed the entire foundation of christian dogma," says Pannekoek.

BUT a new enemy of the bourgeoisie and the remnants of the feudal system alike sprang up out of the capitalist system of production—the industrial proletariat. The bourgeois, threatened by the growing power of the workers, took up the same tool which had been used to lull the discontent of the serfs, and issued the slogan that the masses must be brought to religion.

Religion has been brought "up to date." Darwinism is now perverted and "interpreted," as a means of "saving christianity," and using it to perpetuate the profit system. In the Scopes case we see the "modernist" religionist attempting to save the prestige of the church.

Clarence Darrow, is acting as the mouthpiece of the ruling class. "We want to prove that the theory of evolution is not in conflict with the divine origin of man," Darrow told the court. "While there is not a soul on earth who believes the whole bible literally, we will not attack it, but merely prove that the bible and science can be reconciled."

The capitalist buys the brains of the professors and scientists for the two-fold purpose of perfecting the technique of production and of masking the exposure of religion by science with "symbolical" interpretation.

"THE estimation of science has undergone a change," says Pannekoek. "Mysticism has gained the upper hand. All that was solved appeared as very trivial, while all things that remained unsolved appear as embracing the most important life question."

"Darwinism has been of inestimable service to the bourgeoisie in its struggle against the old powers. It was therefore only natural that bourgeoisdom should apply it against its later enemies, the proletarians."

In the Dayton evolution case the antiquated Bryan represents the remnants of the old order, which naturally enough, has its stronghold in the backward "solid" south. Bryan is still fighting the fight of the feudal lords against the capitalistic interpretation of Darwinism, and will accept no compromise. "Religion and science do conflict," he says, "and science must be suppressed."

It is for this reason that the allies of the capitalists, the middle class liberals, the socialists and the "progressives," are lined up with modern capitalism, against the remnants of feudalism.

THE socialist party organ, the Milwaukee Leader, in an editorial significantly entitled, "Evolutionists Defend Religion," says, "Anyone who thinks that the Leader opposes religion when it espouses evolution, is entriely wrong. This paper is not irreligious, and it never attacks religion, either expressly or impliedly. In taking the side of the defense in the Scopes' case, The Leader is championing the cause of religion."

And Dr. Maynard M. Metcalf, recently appointed research associate in zoology at Johns Hopkins university, testified that he believed in evolution and was a member of the congregational church, having taught a bible class in Boltimore. Metcalf, like all the other goose step professors thruout the country, who are paid to teach what big business tells them to teach, says that evolution and the bible do not conflict.

Class collaboration and ownership of trade union officials have proved more efficient weapons against the workers in the unions. And mystical interpretations of the bible is more efficient in doping the workers with religion than a crass attempt to make them believe in miracles. The capitalists well know this, as is seen by the fact that John D. Rockefeller, Jr., oil king, is about to build a fashionable church for one of the best known modernist preachers in New York.

What Evolution Teaches.

Darwinism teaches us that the animal world may be arranged into divisions and subdivisions. The animal classes were not created individually, but descended one from another. The highest organisms have descended from primitive beings having but one cell. Under certain conditions, some animal kinds will necessarily develop into other animal kind. Parents transmit their peculiarities to children, but at the same time the children diverge from their parents in some respects and also differ from each other.

DARWIN'S theory of the "struggle for existence," shows that favorable variations in animals and plants tend to be preserved and unfavorable ones to be destroyed. Those which are best adapted to existing conditions survive, and new species are produced from the old ones.

What is the relation between Marxism and Darwinism? "Both teachings," says Pannekoek, "the teachings of Darwin and of Marx, the one in the domain of the ORGANIC world, and the other upon the field of HUMAN SOCIETY, raised the theory of evolution to a positive science."

"Marx proved that class distinction were owing to the various functions each played in the productive process. The methods of production have continuously changed with the progress of time. The manner of labor and the productive relationship demand upon the tools with which people work.

"Thus the Marxian theory disclosed the propelling force and the mechanism of social development. In doing this it has proved that history is not something irregular and that the various social systems are not the result of chance or haphazard events, but that there is a regular devlopment in a definite direction. . . . that social development does not cease with our system, because technique continually develops."

MARXISM is not an abstract theory but a sharp weapon used by the proletarians in their struggle against the capitalist class. And we have already seen how the bourgeoisie made Darwinism a weapon in their struggle to pervert Darwinism as a tool against the workers.

In commenting on the Scopes trial, many of the capitalist professors are belittling the theory of evolution, declaring it "obsolete," and unimportant, serving the master class by attempting to show that additions to the evolution theory, which strengthened the theory of descent, really destroyed it.

Those professors who use Darwinism as a defense of the bouregois system, Pannekoek tells us, make the error of comparing the social organism with the animal body. "The survival of the fittest" cannot be used as a support of capitalist competition, for, "while it is positively true that in the struggle for existence those animals that are strong, healthy and well survive, yet this does not happen under capitalist competition. Success does not depend upon personal ability, but upon the possession of capital. The competition existing in the capitalist system is something different in requisites and results from the animal struggle for existence."

The workers do not compete with capitalism, Pannekoek points out, but only sell their labor power to them. The poor do not succumb because they are unfit, but because capitalism creates miserable conditions, wrings their very blood out of them, and destroys the bodies and minds of the healthiest and strongest of the workers. "It is the possession of money that determines who shall survive and who shall perish.

THEREFORE, while Darwinism supports and supplements Marxism, the two theories are distinct, one applying to the animal world and one to human society. The bourgeois scientists, in attempting to apply the theory of Marx, belonging to human society, demonstrate their inability to reason. Darwinism shows the development of the animal world up to the entry of man, and the Marxian theory applies after the animal developed into man.

Darwinism and Marxism are not directly connected, because although man is an animal, he is also a social animal, who has developed tools, thot and language, three pecularities belonging to man alone.

The animal organs are used just as the humans use tools. But tools can be changed and transformed, allowing the development of production whereas the animal is mainly dependent upon but one organ. The hare can only run fast, the lion can spring and bite, and if conditions change, the animal is lost. But man can change his tools while the animal cannot change his organs.

The struggle in the animal world is a struggle of these organs, the struggle in human society is a struggle of tools. Darwinism shows that animal organs continually develop. Marxism shows that tools and the means of production continually develop.

THE jury of backwoods Tennesseans may find Scopes guilty, but before the capitalist world Bryan has been beaten. Such a trial would be impossible in the north, where capitalism is developed.

The further development of the mining and steel and other other industries, which have already made inroads into the plantations of Tennessee will abolish the remnants of feudalism and "modernist" preachers will replace the evangelists and Bryans who cling to a literal interpreation of the bible.

Unless before that time the industrial workers overthrow the capitalist system, and throw out the prostitute professors and preachers who are perverting Darwinism and attempting to use the theory of evolution in addition to the bible, as a means of further exploiting and degrading them.

BOSTON BOSSES SIMPLY CANNOT BE SATISFIED

Even Arbitration Is Now Turned Down

BOSTON, July 22.—The Building Trades Employers' Assoication of Boston has appealed to Secretary of Labor Davis to survey and correct in the employers' favor the recommendations made by three federal conciliators in regard to the demand of the laborers' union for advance of wages from 65 and 70 cents and hour to 77½ and 80 cents an hour.

The conciliators had advised that the dispute be arbitrated, each side to name a representative and if no agreement were reached after five days a third arbitrator to be named by Davis.

In making their arbitration recommendation the conciliators said that the laborers might have been able to force a better wage award had they continued their strike. The strike was called off to give the conciliators an opportunity to do something.

Meanwhile Davis has gone to Europe and there is talk in the laborers' union of going out on strike again unless the employers agree to arbitration.

Fire Department Chief Insists on Open Door

(By Worker Correspondent.)

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., July 22.—Chief Ringer of the fire department, called on 85 officers of the fire department, all of whom are members of the fire fighters' union, and informed them that "a department cannot run efficiently with dual authority." This is tantamount to an order for them to abandon their union cards.

A standing vote was taken on the question, which resulted in a 10 to 1 vote in favor of pulling out of the union. When murmurs of dissatisfaction arose today, Chief Ringer announced he will call another meeting for a secret ballot.

This is a move to break up the fire fighters' union.

The union is seven years old.

J. W. Simcoe, who is secretary of the union, and an unrelenting foe of the left wing, will now have it brot home to him that political treason against the working class is not always appreciated by the capitalist politicians in the way that labor fakers feel it ought to be.

FORD SLAVES MUST PAY FOR THEIR VACATIONS BY PRODUCING ENOUGH TO KEEP SHOPS OPEN AT CAPACITY

By PLEB, Worker Correspondent.

DETROIT, July 22.—Here at the River Rouge shops of Henry Ford, the "auto king," employes will have two weeks vacation. Vacation is a sweet word to every worker who is fortunate enough to slave for the bosses the year around, as this little recreation is beneficial to health and mind.

So this summer a new system is being tried to grant this vacation and here it is: "Altho contrary to the usual practice, production will be maintained as nearly normal as possible." This will be possible, officials explain, by a "staggered" plan by which "one department re-opens as another closes."

In other words it means the most scientific exploitation that has ever been put into practice.

For some time past straw bosses have been driving the slaves faster than heretofore, and in this sweltering heat it is almost beyond endurance to stand the strain of this devilish speed-up.

But to get ready for "vacation" there must be overproduction in every department so that all the slaves will get two week off without pay and without hindering the normal flow of profits to the "auto kings" pockets.

So new schemes are tried to squeeze out more sweat and blood from the workers in the interests of the never satisfied god of profit.

But such an outrage will not last forever. Sooner or later this producing giant will realize it's place in the world and throw off those leeches from his back, and only Communists are showing the true path to travel for the complete emancipation of the working class from slavery and oppression.

Haitian "Bandits" Were Patriots, Says Plea to U. S. Senate

NEW YORK, July 22.—"There was no such thing as banditry in Haiti before American intervention," says James Weldon Johnson, secretary, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, in Volume 1 of the testimony given before the senate committee on foreign relations, on the subject of American domination and exploitation of Haiti and other Carribean nations.

"They had a country in which the percentage of crime was considerably less than in our own country. Robbery was almost unknown.

"Those Haitians who got the name of 'bandits' were men engaged in a futile attempt to expel the invader, believing they could do something to regain the sovereignty of their native soil. The America of 1776 would have called them patriots, not bandits."

Defense Day a Failure.

PASADENA, Cal., July 21. — The war spirit seems to be dying out in South Pasadena, Cal., and a few 100 percenters have put the blame for this "catastrophe" upon the heads of the "city fathers" who have been criticized for their lack of interest in observing patriotic occasions such as defense day, etc. In order to stop criticism and stimulate patriotism, once more the city council has decided to install flag holders and buy flags to decorate lamp posts on main business streets.

FARRINGTON IS JUDAS IN WAR AGAINST UNION

Gets Peabody's Silver for His Treachery

Since that time, the faker has paid $11,900.00 for repairs to his beautiful orange grove, no doubt in preparation for a hasty retreat from the outraged coal miners whose wrath is about to break on his treacherous head.

That Chest of Silver.

It is a well known fact that Francis Peabody had a great deal of "respect" for Farrington, and be it known that Peabody is one of the largest coal mine operators in America, and one of the most efficient and treacherous, whose systematic reduction of the miners' wages and earning capacity, thru the introduction of so-called efficiency methods in violation of his agreement has practically reduced the miners to mere mechanical automatons.

This same Peabody, in token of his "deep respect" for Farrington's friendship and co-operation, presented Mr. and Mrs. Frank Farrington with a beautiful mahogany chest full of silver (perhaps thirty pieces at the usual Judas rate) a short time ago, which, needless to say, is a very useful gift indeed?

The miners of Illinois feel that the gift was not given without payment in return in the form of working conditions in the mines at the expense of the miners and which will be proved later on in these articles. (Will Frank be so kind as to go hang himself and save Judas' reputation?)

Other brazen attacks on the miners' treasury are very interesting, a few of which follow: Farrington used $27,000.00 to crush the progressive miners in Illinois, when those miners, forced into desperation, made a march on Springfield to attempt to compel Farrington to take up their grievances, and have them rectified. Instead of meeting with the men and having a proper understanding with them, Farrington hired thugs and had them beat up the miners in front of his hotel.

Hires Bosses as Thugs.

Jack Brown, a Peabody Coal company boss, was paid $320.50, for slugging the miners in Springfield. You will notive the trinity here, the Peabody Coal company, the thug Brown and the faker Farrington. Remember the thirty pieces of silver.

We are also in possession of a copy of a lost check and letter which is interesting.

(Copy)

"Pay to the order of Jack Brown
$150.00 for value received.
FRANK FARRINGTON,
HARRY FISHWICK."

At that time a letter was written by Harry Fishwick to a friend, stating that Brown and Fishwick had "not been able to get together yet." For what purpose Farirngton did Fishwick and Brown wish to "get together"? Perhaps to arrange for the "value received" on one hand and your thirty pieces of silver on the other.

Tomorrow I will continue the exposure of this Judas Farrington who has not repented and whose hanging will not be self inflicted but will occur at the hands of the outraged miners of District 12.

BUILDERS AT WORK

A Daily Worker Builder Does Most Important Work

Have You Ever Even Thought of This?

A DAILY WORKER Agent and all Builders travel with such a full supply of tools that when they talk to a worker they are almost sure of a sub. Maybe not a DAILY WORKER sub always, but if you are anxious to do some constructive Communist building just look over this list of tools that you can use.

Granting that you can't get a sub for the DAILY WORKER (and that is your very best tool) there is the WORKERS MONTHLY. But maybe you can't get a sub to either—the worker may not speak English well enough. That's nothing—you are only beginning. There are exactly twenty two different language papers, (daily, weekly, monthly) all fighting the same battle for the working class in many languages. A good Builder or agent has in all these a great means to build our movement.

But again you may say, that general literature, newspapers and magazines do not interest every single worker. Many of them are only interested in their trade—especially in the shop and trade union. If that is your only argument, then—

• • • •

Here Is the Answer!

The Trade Union Educational League thru its different arms of the Left Wing movement, has just what is needed for that type—and for all workers. How can the workers—in fact how can you?—know all the interesting facts of the Left Wing activity in the trades without getting these facts from their official papers.

Here they are. Clip them out and paste them in your note book to use whenever you meet a worker . . . and send in the sub directly in to the DAILY WORKER. You will find the smoke of the workers battles in these

THREE GERMAN FASCISTS ENTERED SOVIET UNION TO PROVOKE BREAK

MOSCOW, July 22.—An article in the Isvestia points out that the accused members of the organization consul, the three German fascists who entered Soviet Russia to promote anti-Soviet plots, only showed themselves as fascists in their closing speeches when they clearly recognized that further lying was hopeless. They then adopted provocation, the most common weapon of fascism. After the completed investigations of the court which exposed at least a part of the crime, it is clear that the alleged scientific expedition of Kindermann had as its purpose, not merely terrorist acts, not only espionage, but also the provocation of complications in the Russo-German relations.

This purpose was revealed by the accused themselves when in their closing speeches they abandoned their previous tactics and openly made threats based on calumny.

The definitely fascist closing speeches must convince everyone who has no interest in a calumnious mutilation of the actual facts of the case, that the sentence of the supreme court was unavoidable.

Kindermann and Wolscht themselves saw to it in the closing session that the accusations raised against them were strengthened. Only ignorance of the real course of the process and ignorance of the revelations made by the consul members themselves can make the campaign of lies of the Vorwarts still possible, for every unprejudiced person must long ago have lost all doubt that any but experienced and determined terrorists were sitting in the dock, who at first, as this seemed to them the only path of salvation, simulated stupidity.

It is just the campaign of calumny carried on by the bourgeois press which provides the most smashing proof for the strength of both forces whose agents were the participators in the alleged scientific expedition, and how real is the danger of provocation and how energetically this danger must be fought.

CALIFORNIA OIL GREASES CONTROL OF ALL SOCIETY

Oil Magnates Richer Than Any Monarch

By FRAPIESA.

(Worker Correspondent)

LOS ANGELES, July 22.—Today California is producing 630,000 barrels every 24 hours. The 1925 production of the state will be approximately 230,000,000 barrels. Most of the oil is from the Los Angeles basin and is shipped out of this city by rail and sea to every corner of the earth.

Enormous Wealth.

Output increases constantly. New wells are brot in every day and new districts every year. Estimated at $2 per 42-gallon barrel for crude oil, the annual product is worth half-billion dollars. Converted into gasoline, the value goes to $1,200,000,000. Manufactured into parafine, lubricating oil, etc., etc., the duplication of the worth goes still higher.

More than 50 per cent of this wealth goes to 20 millionaires, more than 75 per cent to 50 millionaires, and more than 90 per cent to 100 persons. How the unidentified "public" manages to get the remaining 10 per cent is more mystifying by a great deal than how the magnates get the 90 per cent.

California oil is a major contributor to the establishment of aristocracy in America. It shows democracy as a fake in every way as a social, industrial and proletarian factor.

All For Few.

When Doheny declared that he considered giving $100,000 to Fall as of no more importance than handing a tip to a bellboy, he summarized the situation. The extravagant perversion of the oil industry to serve the caprices of a few successful sure-thing gamblers casts into the shade the donation of old Russia to the Romanoffs and Germany to the Hohenzollerns.

The czar, with his 90,000,000 acres of the best land of Russia, never had the income that the oil industry of California yields to the plutocracy. Never did he revel in such increases of wealth as the petroleum magnates know as theirs as a matter of privilege.

Year by year fewer men control this fabulous resource. New comers are ruthlessly crowded out. The monopolists have no scrupples in dealing with competitors, proving that the more a hog gets the less he will let another get.

Capitalists Produce Nothing.

Nobody is as far away from petroleum as the oil magnate. This rare bunco artist has nothing to do with production at all. He simply lets others do all the producing while he contends himself with taking all the profits. For magic his performance outdoes Aladin.

Of course, the source of the necromancy is not the cleverness or ingenuity of the oil magnate. It is the credulity of the people. That is truly amazing. It answers the question asked relative to the magnates: How do they get away with it?

Well, Why Not?

The above is the title of an editorial that recently appeared in the New York Commercial, a capitalist rag edited by the notorious stoolpigeon, Fred Marvin. The article is a eulogy of Fascism and of Benito Mussolini in particular.

Our capitalist contemporaries never tire of throwing mud at the government of the Soviet Union, because it is a dictatorship, and the "American people" they tell us, are enamoured of democracy. But as we often point out it is not dictatorship in principle that our political bawdy sheets object to, but to a dictatorship in particular. In other words, a dictatorship of the many, the workers and peasants and not of the few such as we have in a disguised form, in every capitalist country.

The New York Commercial says that Mussolini wrenched the country out of the hands of the "proletariat" and returned it to its rightful owners, the capitalists. As a matter of fact the proletariat unfortunately did not seize the golden movement to take over the country and establish their own government. Had they done so the "rightful owners" would now be scratching themselves like flea bitten curs in the alley ways of Italy's big cities, while the proletariat would be busy at the task of reconstructing Italy on the basis of a Communist order of society. As it is they are living in terror of Mussolini's armed cutthroats.

Since Mussolini seized power, writes the fink Marvin, the Fascist government has "maintained itself in a dignified and admirable fashion." Evidently the murder of Matteotti, not to speak of thousands of others, is a quite "dignified and admirable" proceeding in the eyes of this blood-hungry American fascist! Marvin goes on to say that the Italians are not capable of governing themselves, like the American, (they don't have "monkey trials" in Italy) and need men like Mussolini.

"That sort of government is best which produces the best results whatever it may be called. The problem with Italy appears to consist of discovering a second Mussolini at some future time." We are quoting from the Commercial. According to this line of reasoning the government of Russia would be given a clean bill of health. But Marvin does not mean the best results for the masses, but the best results for the small parasitic group whose boots he is constantly licking. And we suggest that the problem before the Italian workers is not to immortalize Mussolini but to "mortalize" him. We venture to predict that Benito will be the last Mussolini as well as the first.

Another Report on Russia

The members of the British Womens Trade Unionists' delegation who have spent over two months making an investigation of conditions in Soviet Russia, particularly as they affect the women, have returned, and a summary of their impressions is given in the London Daily Herald. The women are enthusiastic over what they saw and they confirm the findings of the other delegation of British trade unionists led by A. A. Purcell.

The preliminary statement of the report of the women trade unionists will appear in next Saturday's magazine supplement to the DAILY WORKER. It makes good reading for every class conscious worker. It will not sound so good to the enemies of Soviet Russia, particularly those who have dragged the once proud flag of socialism in the dust and made of it a mantle of shame to cover the hideous sore of capitalism.

The women trade unionists found that "both workers and peasants look upon the present government as their own." There is a dictatorship they admit, but it is a workers' and peasants' dictatorship and "it is the workers and peasants thru their elected Soviets or Councils, that rule."

This is a report, not made by members of the intelligentsia who sometimes graciously descend from their exalted petty bourgeois pedestals in order to bestow the favor of their enlightened and cultured leadership on the working class, but by genuine workers who have toiled in the factories and who have risen to positions of leadership thru service to their fellow workers. Those working women saw, without any trouble, the main fact that stands out clearly thru every act of the Soviet Union, and that fact is, that the Soviet government is a workers' and peasants' government; that the workers and peasants are running the government machine. Those working women have no fear of a dictatorship on the throttle of which the workers have their hands.

Shot in the Back

Quite a few students were shot in the back! Some have already gone to eternity! What a horrible, foul, and barbarous deed!

Should such an act happen in some savage country or by some known-to-be savage people, it would not be taken so much to heart!

Unfortunately, it was committed by some known-to-be civilized people of a known-to-be civilized nation in a civilized center of the Far East

To be sure, savages have their moral codes too. Perhaps they would prefer to fight face to face and both when armed.

This almsot universally upheld principle of fair play and justice proved an exception in Shanghai.

We have an old saying in China, "Gentlemen fight openly, only rascals and curs fight with an underhand."

Supposing this outrageous crime had occurred in the days when knighthood was in flower on the Europena continent, I am sure many a knight, rather all the knights, of old Britain would have drawn swords to fight the common foe as it was their sworn duty to stand by the right.

You say, "The students bullied me." Alas!. "The students were shot in the back!"—From the Shanghai Crisis, published by the Students of Tsing Hua College, Peking, China.

CAPITALIST COURT SEEKS MISSING LINK

Tune in on Capitalist Court P. D. Q., broadcasting from Room 915 City Hall:

Hot Dog!

"Be it remembered, that heretofore, to-wit: on the 22nd day of July, A. D., 1925, the same being one of the days of the regular July A. D., 1925 term of said court, the above entitled proceedings came on to be heard before the Honorable Judge Orr, one of the judges of said court, at which time and place the following proceedings were had:

The Court: "Call the case and call the defendants by name."

Whereupon the Clerk of the Court called the defendants.

The Court: "I suppose you are not guilty."

Defendants: "Yes, yes. Not guilty."

The Court: "How many of you are working?"

Defendants: "All of us."

Double Duty.

The Court:. "Working day time and speaking at night, I suppose?"

Defendants: "Yes."

The Court (obviously a skeptic on this question). "All those that are working raise your right hand? Those who are working."

The vote being unanimous, His Honor had to choose another tack.

The Court: "You are not going to school, some of you?"

Attorney Bentall, heavying for the agnostics, olfacted an effort of the fundamentalists to get a change of venue to the Tennessee school system. "Nobody goes to school," he snorted.

The Very Idea!

Defendants: (Vigorously) "No. No. No!"

The Court: (Hopefully remembering the Immigration Act) "How many of you are born Americans? Raise your right hand."

Seventeen hands, accustomed to this sort of thing, pointed toward Jehovah's doorstep.

The Court: "How many of you are naturalized?"

The motion carried with only two hands raised.

The Court: (Clearly disliking the vote, offered a third thesis.) "How many of you are not naturalized?"

Alas! None to be Deported.

Complete silence.

The Court: "You say that this is the fourth time you appeared in this case? Have you been going somewhere else to speak?"

Comrade Lewis: "Yes. We have spoken on another corner."

Bentall: "You see, the police headquarters does not issue permits, but they say you can pick out the corner, and unless there is an objection, you go right ahead, and if there is objection, you iron it out or go somewhere else."

His Honor Becomes Curious.

The Court: (Getting a bright idea.) "What were you talking about? Religion?"

Comrade Lewis: "No, only occasionally. We spoke for the Workers Party, a labor organization. We were talking about the subjects pertaining to our party and we were talking about labor topics and appealing to union men."

The Court: "On a religious issue?"

Voice: (Facetiously.) "No, nor of evolution."

Methinks I Smell Bolshevism.

The Court (Bethinking itself of where labor topics and unionism leads.) "Are you connected in any way with the Russian Soviet organization?"

Comrade Lewis: "No, we are not connected with the Soviet government."

The Court: "Are you getting any aid from it?"

Comrade Lewis: "No. We are not connected with it, but we are very sympathetic."

Sympathy Verboten, But Bazoos May Blow.

The Court "The mere fact that you are sympathetic is enough in my mind to justify sending you to jail. I don't think the great majority of Americans are sympathetic. Any meeting that tends to undermine the government of the United States would be punishable. But I believe a good deal in the English idea of letting them blow their bazoo, letting off steam. It doesn't hurt anybody. I suggest that to avoid trouble you obtain some sort of police recognition. There is a law. Don't break the law, no matter what it has been."

Look Out, Here Come the Cops!

Police Officer: (Helpfully.) "It is the business men out there that are complaining to us."

The Court: (Recalled to its duty by the mention of the word "Business.") "Just because you are turned loose this morning, don't think you won't be brot in here again. It is people that don't respect the laws that cause the trouble. Defendants discharged."

SCOTT'S NEW COUNSEL TO ASK THIRTY DAYS REPRIEVE FROM SMALL

A new appeal for a thirty day reprieve of Russell Scott will be made today by Charles N. Bidwill and Arthur N. Kettles, attorneys who stepped into the case as his new counsel, in the last ditch fight to save him from the gallows Friday.

"We will go to the governor personally and ask the new reprieve," said Bidwill. "We have been given some new information which we will put before Governor Small, information which, we believe, will shed new light to warrant the stay."

He declined to disclose the information.

IRISH LABOR MAKES GAINS IN ELECTIONS

Win Many Seats in Local Governments

DUBLIN, July—(By Mail)—Incomplete reports on the local elections held thruout the Free State show that the labor party candidates won a substantial success tho the Voice of Labor, official organ of the Irish Transport and General Workers Union, feels that the workers could have done better. Still in view of the general situation it must be admitted, that the workers showed up pretty well.

The anti-treaty party as De Valera's followers are called appear to be losing out rapidly. Usually they came in at the bottom of the list unless more complete returns show a better result for them.

A Remarkable Union

The great majority of the labor candidates are members of the Irish Transport and General Workers' Union, a rather remarkable labor union it must be admitted. Not only is it the biggest union in Ireland but it is also the backbone of the political expression of labor, as represented by the labor party.

The Transport Union does not allow that a member of the union can vote as he pleases. Recently it had a resolution passed treating a member who cast his ballot for a capitalist candidate as a scab should be treated in a strike. Whether this rule is going to be strictly enforced or not is another question, but the local organizers of the transport are quick of temper and take their duties seriously.

Have 150 Representatives

The returns to date give the labor party approximately 150 representatives in county and town elections. In some instances they have a working majority on the local government bodies.

Thomas Johnson, deputy in the Free State parliament has resigned the leadership of the Irish Labor Party in that body. In an interview to the press he claimed that his action had no significance other than that he was getting rid of some of his responsibilities, and would henceforth take a back seat in the Dail. There are others who claim that his decision to take a back seat was due to pressure from the younger elements in the labor party.

Telegram Sender To Insane Ward

DETROIT, July 22.—James M. Ball, originator of the fake telegrams which accured a week's reprieve for Russell T. Scott, was taken to the psychopathic ward of receiving hospital today for observation.

SOLDIER DROWNED IN CAMP, MOTHER DENIED PENSION BY COOLIDGE

WASHINGTON, July 22.—Accidental drowning of a soldier "thru his own carelessness" is not in line of military duty and does not entitle his heirs to a pension from the government, according to a ruling made by the secretary of the interior today.

The question was presented on an appeal from a decision of the commissioner of pensions in which an application for a pension from Mrs. Sarah Rizzo, 624 North May St., Chicago, Illinois, for the death of her son, Lee S. Rizzo, was rejected.

Rizzo lost his life by drowning at Camp Grant.

COPS ACT FOR GARMENT BOSS, JAIL 4 PICKETS

Injunction Comes Up for Hearing Today

Four more striking members of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers' Union, employes of the International Tailoring company, were arrested while walking the picket line yesterday, making a total of 117 arrests by the city police, acting as agents of the garment manufacturers, since the strike began four weeks ago.

Thomas Skel, against whom charges of disorderly conduct and assault and battery were placed, was released on $1,500.00 bond.

Oscar Novack, charged with carrying concealed weapons, was placed under $1,000.00 bond, as was his brother, Harry Novack, who was charged with assault and battery.

Isadore Baum was released on $400.00 bond charged with disorderly conduct.

Schlossberg Arrives.

It was announced at the strike meeting that Joseph Schlossberg, general secretary treasurer of the Amalgamated, would arrive in Chicago in time to speak to the strikers at their meeting this morning.

Isadore Rothbart, business agent of the pantsmakers, addressing yesterday's strike meeting at Hod Carriers' Hall, 814 West Harrison, declared that the desperate attempt of the International Tailoring company and the J. L. Taylor company to secure an injunction against the strikers shows that the bosses are hanging on by a straw.

Companies Are Licked.

"The companies are licked," Rothbart said. "Never has there been a strike when the workers were more loyal to their cause. No one is going back to work until the International Tailoring company signs an agreement with the Amalgamated Clothing Workers."

The strikers loudly applauded the statement that it was the rank and file who had strengthened the Amalgamated, and who were the backbone of the present strike. Rothbart pointed out that the strike showed the meaning of a union organization and was an education to the workers.

"Lined up against us is everything that is called the 'law'," Rothbart said. "They are on the side of the manufacturers, the people who have money. We have on our side our organized power."

Pickets are now being regularly assigned, and roll call is being taken.

Wild Rumors Scotched.

Mike De Novi replied to the rumors being spread by the bosses that they were going to move their business to Rock Island. "We have a good organization there," he said, "And the struggle would go on. But that is only a rumor spread to confuse the workers. If they really intended to move they would keep it secret. This is more bunk being spread by the hirelings of the company."

Injunction Up Today.

This morning at ten o'clock the bosses' bill for an injunction comes before Judge Hugo Pam, of the superior court, in room 941, county building. Unless another postponement occurs, the demurrer filed by the defense attorney, William A. Cunnea, will be argued. The demurrer states that to grant an injunction would be a violation of the Cuthperior court, in room 941, county passed by the Illinois legislature. It also brands the charge of the bosses of "violence" on the part of the pickets as untrue.

Pickets on the Job.

There were few scabs in the building yesterday, and these were not clothing workers. The International building, at Jackson Blvd., and Peoria St., is still surrounded by the city police and private sluggers brot in by the company.

As the DAILY WORKER reporter neared the picket line he was approached by a striker and asked if he were "Looking for work," which shows that the pickets are 100 per cent on the job.

Jailor Assaulted Girl Prisoners

MARION, Ill., July 22.—Charged with accepting bribes in releasing two murderers and a car thief and accused of assaulting seven girl prisoners, Dick Robinson Williamson county jailor, was under arrest today.

JAPAN OFFICIALLY AGREES WITH U. S.; BRITAIN REMAINS SILENT

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 22.—The state department today gave out the statement that Secretary Kellogg "has hopes" for a conference on Chinese affairs since he received word that Japan is "in accord" with his views for an international "discussion" of China's treaty relations with imperialist powers.

It is said Kellogg got the word of the Tokio government's attitude from Ambassador Matsudaira of Japan.

The state department, evidently for propaganda purposes, at once announced that it understands that Great Britain's views are the same as those of Japan," but it cautiously leaves a hole to crawl thru by adding that of course, England has "not yet" officially advised America of it.

FIRST PRIZE OF IGNORANCE TO SOCIALISTS

Speech One Lengthy Apology

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW HAVEN, Conn., July 22.—An ignorant note was struck at the meeting last Saturday at the Central Green bandstand by the socialist speaker imported from Pittsburgh. After one of those preserved-before-the-war speeches, he was asked by Comrade Kling of the New Haven English branch of the Workers Party, if he was in favor of independence for the Riffians, and if so, why didn't the French socialists stand for the evacuation of Morocco by the French.

He replied that he was in favor of such independence, but as to the French socialists' attitude, he was not a member of the chamber of deputies, and did not have the necessary information. A case of the blind leading the blind.

The Workers Party had already held two meetings on the Green, one with Carlson and the second with Simons as speaker. The socialist meeting to open the municipal campaign fell flat. The speaker excused the socialists for their betrayal of the of the working class at the outbreak of the world war, by referring to the war hysteria, etc.; that Ramsay MacDonald had no opportunity to do anything, etc.—the usual humbug.

Under the fire of questions from Communists present, the speaker became quite apologetic; he was on the defensive. The opening gun in the socialist campaign proved a dud.

U. S. NEEDS BIG SHIP TO FIGHT JAPAN—WILBUR

Airplanes Have Not Made Fleet Obsolete

PORTLAND, Ore., July 22.—Secretary of the Navy Wilbur was today on record in predicting that modern naval engagements will be between great fleets and that airplanes will be but a factor in supplementing the fleet.

Addressing public officials and citizens at a banquet given here last night in his honor, Secretary Wilbur was very emphatic in stating he did not agree with contentions of others that recent bombing tests had spelled the death knell of the capital ship.

"Whenever the airplane is able to anchor in the air, can maintain its position there for weeks or months and refill with fuel in the air, then it can be said that the capital ship has seen its usefulness decline," he said.

He pointed out that bombs and explosives would not harm such modern battleships as the Arkansas, New York and Utah, which he said, were to be equipped with heavy armor and sloping tops.

Wilbur stated that the navy program called for maintenance of a fleet of eighteen capital ships and that the policy would be to keep the fleet of eighteen capital ships in the Pacific.

BRYAN REFUSES TO DEBATE ON EVOLUTION LAW

Darrow Says We Are Being Pulled Back

(Special to The Daily Worker)

DAYTON, Tenn., July 22.—Those who uphold the Tennessee anti-evolution law are dragging America back to the middle ages, Clarence Darrow said in an interview here, following the end of the Scopes trial. While Darrow was riding thru the Smoky Valley on an auto ride, William Jennings Bryan, who is to remain at Dayton to raise funds for a university named after himself, issued a statement that he would not debate with Clarence Darrow or anyone else on evolution.

"After hearing Clarence Darrow I am not at all disposed to invite christians to come to a meeting where they will hear religion sneered at," said Bryan. The bible is to be the main course in the university which is planned, nad lal teaching of evolution is to be prohibited.

Sees Tide of Intolerance.

Darrow said in his departing statement: "My experience here has taught me that there is a fearsome tide of intolerance deliberately seeking to hamper thought and learning in America. Their effort is the same as the effort of medieval scholastics to seek to test new discovery all science by the bible."

Darrow advocated "liberal christianity," which he did not clearly define.

John Thomas Scopes, who was found guilty and fined $100.00, stays on at Dayton, and spends his time wondering where he is going to get a new teaching job.

Bryan Reverts to Type.

In statements issued after trial, Bryan and Darrow again crossed swords over evolution.

"Mr. Bryan has done me the honor to say that I am the finest product of evolution," said Darrow. "If I am, I am in direct anti-thesis to him. Mr. Bryan is not the finest of evolution, but he comes under the classification of those who revert to type.

"Mr. Bryan's statement shows some light on his feelings, I fancy no one in need of friends or help would have any uncontrollable impulse to fly to him. Mr. Bryan's convulsions seem due to the fact that I placed him on the witness stand. How much Mr. Bryan knows about the bible or anything else can be judged by his answers.

Pity For Bryan.

"Of course, I cannot help having some pity for Mr. Bryan for being obliged to show his gross ignorance by simple and competent questions asked him on the witness stand. However, I am inclined to think the public would forget it sooner if he stopped reminding them about it.

Judge Shielded Bryan's Ignorance.

"He answered my questions in the presence of the court, and it is rather interesting that the next morning the court of his own accord struck them from the record. I cannot help wondering why the court helped Mr. Bryan out of his dilemma, especially in the morning, and before any request had been made in open court."

Darrow Answers Bryan.

In reply to a series of questions asked him by Bryan, which the politician said he would have asked his opponent on the witness stand, Darrow said: "I do not believe the bible was written or inspired by god. I believe it should be taken as every other book. I do not believe in any supernatural christ as foretold in the old testament or revealed in the new testament."

"I do not believe in miracles. I believe the universe acts and always has acted in accord with immutable laws and that whatever force may be back of the universe has never violated these laws. I have never tried to impose my views of religion upon any human being. I have a right to my own views and would fight as hard to protect any other man's views as I would my own."

Shepherd in Indianapolis.

'RIDICULOUS' SAYS DARROW OF CAPITAL SUIT ON TEACHERS

(Special to The Daily Worker)

DAYTON, Tenn., July 22.— The religious evolution enmity between William Jennings Bryan and Clarence Darrow flamed anew here this afternoon over the filing of a suit in Washington, D. C., to enjoin the payment of salaries to science teachers in the district of Columbia.

"It's absolutely ridiculous," Darrow said.

"Well, the people are awakened to the conspiracy against Christianity," was Bryan's comment.

Gener[illegible] Strike of British Coal Miners July 31

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LONDON, July 23.—A general strike in the British coal fields was ordered today by the Miners' Executive Committee for July 31, the date on which the operators have given notice they will terminate the present wage agreement. The Miners' Executive Committee voted unanimously to ask the miners to lay down their tools.

NOT ONLY CHINA AND INDIA, BUT SOVIET ECONOMIC SUCCESS, LIES BEHIND WAR MOVES OF BRITISH

(By Ingrecorr.)

MOSCOW, July 8—(By Mail.)—An articles in the Pravda points out that the anti-soviet campaign in England is not only to be explained by fears for the maintainance of power over rising China and over India, but also by the quick development of the Soviet Republic which the imperialists regard as a danger.

The bourgeoisie leaves it to Kautsky to discover need in the Soviet Union, for it knows only too well that the Soviet Union is making rapid progress, that a good harvest is certain and with this a large export of grain and a growing import of machinery from abroad.

But the imperialists fear a strengthening of the Soviet Union and would like to prevent the development of industry and agriculture and in particular the export of grain. From this, not only the Russian peasant but also the English workers will suffer, for the lack of Russian grain export means the increase of bread prices, the increase of the cost of living and the growth of unemployment in England.

England Rejects Soviet Peace Offer.

The Soviet government has shown its willingness to come to an agreement again and again, the Soviet Union is the only country which has carried out a reduction in armaments.

The English rejected sharply the offer of Chitcherin, who declared the readiness of the Russian government to discuss various questions with England. Apparently the English imperialists have decided upon war. The future will show whether they will be able to carry their intentions into practice.

Reichstag Sustains Government.

BERLIN, July 23.— On a vote of confidence in the reichstag, with the reply to the French note on the security pact as the issue, the government was sustained 235 to 158. Thirteen members abstained from voting.

AS WE SEE IT

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY

THE current issue of the official organ of the United Garment Workers' Union has not a word to say of the scabbery it is practicing against the Amalgamated Clothing Workers' Union in Chicago. It exudes considerable moral indignation, however, over prison-made goods, presumably because the prison authorities do not insist on the contractors purchasing Rickert's scabby label. Kate Richards O'Hare is touring the country under the auspices of the United Garment Workers, exposing prison-made goods. Mrs. O'Hare would serve the working class almost as well if not better by exposing her strikebreaking paymasters.

ONE of the most revolting cases of cruelty that ever appeared in print in modern times is the story of the barbarous treatment meted out to three prisoners in one of the jails of Montreal, Canada. The unfortunates were sentenced to terms of imprisonment, in addition to thirty strokes of a lash, which is described as being capable of inflicting greater injury than the dreaded "cat o' nine tails."

FASCISTS ADMIT CRIMES AGAINST GERMAN WORKER

Murder and Spying Are Told in Soviet Court

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MOSCOW, U. S. S. R., July 23.—The confessions of the German fascists, Dittmar and Baumann, who entered the Soviet Union under orders from the German fascist group, "organization consul," reveal the murder, terrorism, spying, and provocation indulged in by that organization to prevent the workers of Germany from gaining power. Dittmar, arrested in the Soviet Union, who confessed to the court, told how he worked in the Ruhr, murdering, sending spies into factories, and plotting with the French against the German workers.

Baumann reveals how the fascist spies enter the ranks of the workers to promote bloodshed, and provoke attempts in order to have Communists arrested. This activity, he reveals, was carried on with the knowledge of the police and the government authorities.

The confession tells how the German fascists entered the Soviet Union to spy on the Soviet leaders and murder them.

A Spy Against Workers.

Dittmar is the real fascist type. Up to the time of his journey to Russia he was an active member of the German fascist organization consul. His chief activity consisted of professional spying and disrupting work within the revolutionary working class movement.

He declares that thru the treacherous attitude of the men behind him after his arrest in Moscow he had recognized that those who gave him his orders were actuated solely by mercenary interests.

In relation to his fellow accused Dittmar says verbally: "I have nothing in common with these paid spies of the Berlin police."

Exposes Fascist Murder.

The description of the activity of Dittmar in the organization consul brings new an interesting material to light; upon the relation between the German nationalist member of parliament Larringhaven, with the organization consul, upon the preparation and organization of the Firnaseus blood bath and the murder of the separatist leader von Speyer by the Heidelburg consul leader Eberlein. The most active espionage and provocating work carried on by the O. C. was, however, amongst the revolutionary workers.

Fascists Spy on Halle Workers.

Halle is given as the seat of the middle German O. C. Their chief field of activity lay in the brass work Villingen. The staff of the whole south German fascist movement is there. In Halle meetings took place continually in the Free Mason League of the students of the O. C., placed in the shops as ordinary workers with the directors of the works in order to receive the instructions of the latter. The accused gives the impres-

HOLD PROTEST MEETING AGAINST POLISH TERROR THIS SATURDAY NIGHT

An open air demonstration will be held under the auspices of the Chicago city central committee of the Workers (Communist) Party in protest against the visit of Foreign Minister Count Krzynski, member of the Polish white terror cabinet, at Division and Milwaukee Sts., on Saturday night.

It was on this corner that comrades Biedenkapp and Mareck were arrested last Saturday night, and kept in jail until Sunday morning.

Most of the other street meetings have been called off to allow speakers and party members to concentrate on this important protest meeting.

GARMENT MACHINES OPERATING WITHOUT SAFETY APPLIANCES

NEW YORK —(FP)— The state labor department has again suspended its ruling that guards must be installed on machines in garment factories to prevent accidents. The ruling is suspended till October, on the excuse that time is needed by employers' organization to submit designs for the new safety guards.

Australian Unions Demand U. S. Free Jailed Workers

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MELBOURNE, Australia, July 23.—When the armed imperialist might of the United States in the shape of the great Pacific fleet came to anchor yesterday in Melbourne harbor—with a detachment sent to Sydney harbor—the Australian capitalists and their followers were alone in welcoming the fleet.

Class solidarity of the Melbourne unions—protesting against the continued imprisonment by the United States government of great numbers of labor unionists, particularly the scores of I. W. W. imprisoned in California, resulted in a complete boycott of the fleet in so far as any public demonstration was concerned.

The street carmen's union walked out, and only the reactionaries would haul American sailors. The official reception committee was embarassed by a strike of marine firemen on the reception boat.

Dozens of unions have passed resolutions pledging non-participation in all parades and a refusal to supply the fleet with their product in some cases. The Australian I. W. W., which is a small propaganda group making little pretense of unionism, has worked with the Communists to stir the labor movement to protest the white terror of the American capitalists.

"We condemn the action of the master class in America or any other country jailing men for fighting for their rights, wages, conditions, etc. We also agre to the boycott of the American fleet or any other fleet and military system that will be used in the future if we don't act to crush the workers who produce the wealth of the world," read the resolutions of the Australian Coachmakers' Federation.

The Melbourne Wharf Laborers' Union, declining the invitation of the I. W. W. to join the boycott, nevertheless had the following to say as to its attitude:

"While the union realizes the significance of the visit of the American fleet to the Pacific and deeply regrets that a war gesture of such magnitude should be made so soon after the end of the 'war to end war,' yet it feels that the proposed boycott will not in any way tend toward the release of your members; rather the reverse.

SHOWS CONGRESS UNITES CHURCH AND THE STATE

Glorifies Ignorance, Intolerance, Claim

WASHINGTON, July 23.—A scathing attack upon congress for "glorifying ignorance and thwarting liberal education" was hurled today by Loren H. Wittner, who has filed suit in the district of Columbia supreme court to stop salaries of instructors teaching scientific theories in conflict with the holy bible.

"Congress is glorifying ignorance, intolerance and bigotry." Wittner declared.

Unites State and Church

"Congress is uniting state and church.

"Congress is confining education in the Washington schools to the teachings of the holy bible, written by men who knew nothing about natural science."

These charges were borne out, Wittner declared, by congress' action in passing the provision to the last district appropriation bill which forbids payments of salaries to instructors who teach "disrespect of the holy bible."

"Disrespect to the bible is being taught here, Wittner said, "by the teaching of natural science which denies miracles and the scientific theories of the bible."

Thru filing of his suit, Wittner said he hoped to place the federal courts

COOLIDGE HINTS AT ARMED SUPPRESSION OF HARD COAL STRIKE

SWAMPSCOTT, Mass., July 23.—That President Coolidge plans to use martial law to break the possible anthracite coal strike, is hinted at in statements issued from the summer White House here.

Coolidge is said to believe that the pressure now being put on the miners will compel them to give up their demand for a ten per cent raise, but if negotiations fail and a deadloc indicates a strike, Coolidge "has plans to resort to which his advisers think will end any declared strike in short order."

With the memory of Coolidge's use of troops to break the strike of the Boston Policemen's Union, which gave Calvin his first claim to notoriety, the anthracite miners may well expect to face bayonets and bullets of the capitalist dictatorship should they have to walk out on strike.

ORPHAN CHILDREN ARE 'BOUND OUT' TO YEARS OF HARD LABOR

HARRISBURG, Pa., —(FP)— If the new orphan's law going into effect this month in Pennsylvania is enforced it will be harder to bind small children out to virtual slavery. The 1925 act requires consent in writing of children over 12 before they can be adopted; adopting persons must be adult citizens of the community and hearings may be demanded in suspicious cases before adoption is ratified. In the past children have been "bound out" by adoption to years of hard labor in the homes and on the farms of strangers, whose only interest in the little ones was to exploit them.

EXPECT SCOPES CASE IN FEDERAL COURTS IN MONTH

Push Drive Against the Law's Constitutionality

DAYTON, Tenn., July 23 —The Scopes anti-evolution case will be carried into the federal courts within a month in a new attack upon constitutionality of the Tennessee law, it was announced here today by Dr. John R. Neal, chief of defense counsel.

This drive will be entirely distinct from the appeal to the Tennessee supreme court for a reversal of the conviction of John Scopes by a Rhea County jury, Neal said.

The federal attack, he added, will be based on the petition for an injunction restraining the trial of Scopes, which was refused two weeks ago by federal judge John J. Gore at Cookeville, Tennessee.

Bryan Will Be Eliminated.

In entering federal jurisdiction without awaiting the decision of the Tennesse state supreme court the interests of Scopes will be directed by Bainbridge Colby, former secretary of state, and mark his active return to the case. It also will mark the passing of a majority of the lawyers, who held the spotlight at the Scopes trial here. On the states' side, the law will be defended by state attorney general Frank Thompson and any other counsel he invites to his side. This may mean the elimination of William J. Bryan, who ranked as the prosecution's star counsel here.

Filing of the petition before Judge Gore, it was learned, gave the Scopes defense attorneys the right to a hearing before three federal judges on the constitutional issue. The defense will take advantage of this legal maneuver within the next month, after serving a required five days notice upon the governor of Tennessee and attorney general Thompson.

Dayton Back to Normalcy.

Dayton meanwhile returned to normalcy. Except for the flaming banner of Evangelist T. T. Martin, announcing "hell in the high schools," the town's smattering of "read your bible" signs and the "where it started" advertising at Robinson's drug store, there are few visual evidences of the trial. The streets have been cleared of the concessionaire stands which turned the town into a fair grounds midway and the crowds have departed.

Young John Thomas Scopes, who will return to his Paducah (Ky.) home Saturday for a month's vacation, spent the day motoring with his school friends and in visiting the old swimming hole.

Wm. Jennings Bryan alone remained of the vast multitude of visiting lawyers. He stayed merely to fulfil a speaking engagement at Winchester, Tenn., Saturday night at the request of Judge John T. Raulston, who presided at the Scopes trial. Bryan then will return to Florida.

Fight Law's Constitutionality.

In explaining the prospective move into federal jurisdiction Neal said: "Our principal purpose is to have the Tennessee law declared unconstitutional. If we await the Tennessee supreme court's hearing on our appeal of Scopes' conviction we might have our case turned back for retrial on some technical error and lose the opportunity for a direct test of the law's unconstitutionality. In the federal courts, the only issue raised was the constitutionality of the law and there we can get a direct decision."

This lash has eleven leather tails each with a knot on the end.

THE victims of this brutality were fattened for the ordeal, the prison authorities fearing they might not be able to stand up under the ordeal. The law did not call for their execution, only for torture. Every day for a week before the whipping was to take place, the prison doctor examined the men to learn if they were in good health. What a civilization? The thirty lashed were to be given in three equal installments.

THE victims were tied to a cross and the inhuman monsters who wielded the lash exerted every muscle to cut into the flesh as deeply as possible. When the last lash was delivered according to law, the men were taken from the cross and laid on a cot. But no soothing lotions were applied to give them relief from the terrible pain. On the contrary salt was rubbed into their wounds, also according to law. There they lay, groaning in agony. And as soon as the wounds heal and they are again properly fattened, they will receive ten more stripes and again ten more until they shall have received the thirty pronounced by the christian judge.

THE name of the jail in which this atrocity was committed is called the St. Vincent De Paul penitentiary. If, thru an accident of birth, William Jennings Bryan happened to be a catholic instead of a protestant, this flogging would sound like sweet music to his ears. There is nothing the real christian likes as well as inflicting pain on a fellow mortal and he usually digs up a good excuse for his sadism. This revolting cruelty is not new or novel. It happened that this particular incident came to the ears of a reporter who thought it was news. The catholics of Montreal think it is the pope's business. That's all.

CALVIN COOLIDGE sent a message to the convention of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, telling them what a fine collection of citizens they were. This will be gall and wormwood to the ku klux klan. Coolidge is a rock-ribbed protestant, but he is chairman of the capitalists' executive committee, which runs the United States. Therefore he must subordinate his religious prejudices to the interests of his masters and his own, of course. Religion is the handmaiden of business. There are millions of workers who have not yet realized this fact.

GENERAL DAWES is to join the Sioux Indian tribe, we are informed. The Indians are not noted for their loquacity, tho they have produced noteworthy orators. The general is not noted for his silence. The Indians talk when they have something to say. The general does not. It is suspected in some quarters that Dawes' decision to join the Indians was reached after pressure was brought to bear on him by Coolidge to "lay off" the senate. Cal does not want to take on any more enemies than he can avoid, but the garrolous Dawes will not stop talking. Perhaps the Indians have a recipe for some drug that induces silence and wakefulness. That's the drug for Dawes.

THE Dawes plan for Germany will not succeed unless the security pact, over which the powers are jockeying becomes a reality, says Foreign Minister Stresemeann. This pact is nothing short of an offensive alliance against Soviet Russia, initiated officially by England and backed by the United States. Fortunately the rivalry between the capitalist powers is so keen and their respect for the red army is so wholesome that they do not seem to be able to carry out their plans. At the present moment the prospects of the security pact are not good.

THINGS are going from bad to worse for France in Morocco. The arrival of the famous General Petain did not scare the Riffians in the slightest. On the contrary they welcomed his arrival by putting on a big offensive. Even the French bulletin writers are now compelled to admit that the French are retreating all along the line. Nothing came of the alleged agreement between France and Spain for joint action against the Riffs. The Spaniards are afraid to assist France even if anxious to do so, fearing England's wrath.

THE usual stories of Riffian cruelty to French prisoners are being retailed, but the Riffians know that those yearns will be forgotten if victory perches on their banners. Arthur Brisbane's airplanes are not as effective as Arthur fondly expected. And the army of American aces who were to show their appreciation to France for ancient reasons has not materialized. Newspaper bunk will not defeat the Moroccan tribesmen fighting for their freedom. And don't forget when you read stories about the Riffians or the Chinese in the capitalist press, that those stories are written by hired hacks of the imperialist powers. When a Chinese or Riffian victory is admitted, you may safely multiply that victory ten fold.

I. C. C. Rules for Van Sweringens.

WASHINGTON, July 23—Charges that the Van Sweringen railroad merger was not a transportation deal but was a stock manipulation project, out of which the two Van Sweringen brothers and their associates would realize "paper" profits in excess of $77,000,000, were ordered stricken from the record today in the proceedings now being held before the interstate commerce commission. This action was taken at the suggestion of Henry W. Anderson, counsel for a group of minority stockholders of the Chesapeake & Ohio railroad, which is opposing the proposed merger. Anderson said he planned to bring out allegations thru another witness, whose name be did not disclose.

DARROW THINKS HE HAD TWO JURORS ON HIS SIDE AT DAYTON

DAYTON, Tenn., July 23.—"Never again."

Clarence Darrow, famous criminal lawyer, never again will volunteer his services in a national case, he said today in a parting remark as he left for his home in Chicago. Darrow said he was thru as a "volunteer," but that he would always be willing to help the downtrodden or to respond to appeals for assistance.

Darrow confirmed International News Service dispatches that the defense anticipated a "hung jury" at the Scopes trial. It was because of this, he added, that he personally appealed to the jury to convict Scopes so the case might be appealed to a higher court.

"The state won ten of the jurors," said Darrow, "but I won the other two over to conviction. There is no doubt but that the jury would have disagreed if it had been permitted to decide on the merits of the case."

GENERAL FENG ASKS TREATIES BE SCRAPPED

Half-Way Measures Only to Deceive

SHANGHAI, China, July 23. — Marshall Feng Yu-hsiang is being quoted in the Chinese press today as opposed to any fake conference such as that proposed by the American imperialist government to consider Chinese customs revision.

Feng considers these are but half-way measures, not sincerely advanced to aid the Chinese people, but are merely put out as propaganda by the imperialists to try to stop the storm of revolutionary ferment now stirring the whole nation and also for propaganda by some imperialist nations against others, with no thought of real aid to the Chinese nation.

General Feng has asked the Peking government by no means to limit its action to a call merely for a customs revision conference as provided by the deceptive clauses of the Washington agreements between the nine powers and as proposed now by the United States, but that China should resolutely abrogate the unequal treaties, declare them all null and void, and propose to write entirely new treaties which shall contain no unequal provisions.

Barbed Wire Put Up.

Foreign troops are erecting barbed wire entanglements around the border of the foreign settlement, fearing that Chinese troops which are pouring into the Shanghai region, may either clash with each other on account of some being Fengtien troops commanded by Chang Tso-lin and some being the forces of Sun Yuang Fang, governor of Chekiang province, or that a unifying radical movement may bring them all upon the foreign settlement in an anti-imperialist movement.

The Peking government's minister of war is apparently backing Chang Tso-lin's troop movements against the governor of Chekiang.

Canton Class War Sharpens.

"Open Shop" Daily News Takes Vacation After Sham Battle with Crime

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

TODAY, the Chicago Daily News prides itself in the belief that its daily publication of summaries of proceedings of the criminal courts has accomplished much good. "Vic" Lawson's "open shop" sheet thinks that it has thus put crime on the skidway that leads to its abolition.

The score keeper at a ball game might just as well say that the players cease in their efforts because he tallies up the results of their various plays.

• • • •

Crime does not abate one iota because the Daily News tries to goad the capitalist judges into sending more alleged criminals to the gallows, or to long terms of imprisonment in the overcrowded state penitentiary. Most categories of crime are inherent in the capitalist social system, which the Daily News so militantly champions. But no confession to this fact will ever fall from the printed pages of this defender of profits.

• • • •

Every day thousands of workers gather outside the doors of the Daily News at Wells and Madison streets, awaiting the early editions with their pages of want ads. Those men want jobs. They seek those jobs with the intensity that can only come from an attempt to preserve life itself. They struggle for every job offered.

Many are pushed aside in the battle. Many are forced to steal to win a bite of bread or a cot in a cheap lodging house. The Daily News calls this stealing, that may be labelled petty larceny, grand larceny, burglary, highway robbery, or mere pickpocketing, these are all crimes. Sometimes they result in murder. Chicago leads the world with its record of murders. An investigation of the keenness of the struggle for existence in Chicago would uncover a vast fund of information as to the cause of crime in the nation's second city.

For 20 weeks the Daily News has published its summaries. Now this heroic offensive of this capitalist sheet is going to cease. The judges must go away on their vacations. John H. Passamore, clerk of the criminal court, will put aside his pencil and forget about crime statistics. Chief Justice Jacob H. Hopkins and State's Attorney Robert Crowe will go fishing. If the Daily News is to be believed, this vacationing should open the portals of the city to a renewed invasion of so-called criminals. Without the daily summaries to remind them of the terrors of punishment under capitalism, men, women and children will enter the ranks of criminals wholesale, if the Daily News is to be believed. But this will not take place.

Crime did not decrease with the publication of the Daily News' summaries. It will not increase with its going. If there is any decrease in crime this summer, as in past summers, it will be due in part, to the fact that large numbers of workers have found jobs in the harvest fields, or other casual hot weather employment.

In summer also, the thousands of homeless are not driven by the cold, in addition to hunger. It is possible to find a place to sleep somewhere in the open, that is preferable to a filthy police station cell, the county jail or the state's prison. But when the cold of the fall and winter come again, the jobless and the homeless will steal again, as they have done thru thousands of years that have seen a profit-seeking class living off the plunder of the many.

• • • •

When the producing many are given an opportunity to labor, to fittingly provide themselves with food, clothing and shelter, then crime will start on the downgrade. But that will never take place under capitalism. That will be left to Communism.

write to the American Federation of Labor protesting the inaction of that body in failing to agitate for the release of the I. W. W. members in the United States.

"The Melbourne Wharf Laborers' Union strongly protests against the continued incarceration of members of the working class in United States jails, and deeply deplores the inaction of American labor bodies and the indifference of the working class generally in that country to the fate of their comrades in prison."

In the body which corresponds to the central labor council of the American unions—the Melbourne Trades Hall Council—the following ringing resolutinos were passed, placing official approval on the boycott of the U. S. fleet:

Melbourne Trades Council Acts.

"1. That whilst desiring above all things to cement the bonds of friendship and good will between Australian labor and the American people, the Melbourne Trades Hall Council, recognizing that all war fleets are but the concrete expression of imperialistic force and violence which creates the incentive to incite national hatred and is a perpetual menace to civilization and international peace; and further in order to be consistent with our anti-war policy as declared at our 'No More War' demonstrations, recommends to all officers and delegates of the council to refrain from participating in any function connected with the visit of the American fleet.

"2. That in order more effectively assist in the effort to gain the release of the industrial and political prisoners lying in American jails, the officers of the council be instructed to communicate with the editors of American, Canadian and European labor papers, and call upon them to join in urging the American authorities to release all those political and industrial prisoners still lying in jaill."

springmakers. Books of 25 cent voluntary assessment stamps have been printed, and distributed, and strike benefits will be paid regularly henceforth. The workers were given $6.00 this week, and Uhlman stated that the benefit will be raised as soon as possible.

The Gibson company locked out the employes four weeks ago, after they refused to accept the nine hour day. The company employed six girls to replace some of the men and paid them thirty five cents an hour, instead of the regular union rate.

Shortly before the strike notices were posted that the employes must work nine hours a day. The men came to work on the eight hour schedule, and were locked out.

Police are still patrolling the factory entrance for the Gibson company, but to date no arrests have been made. The company is anxious to secure an injunction, it is reported.

Some of the other springmaking shops that are being organized are the Vance Spring and Wire company, the Gardner Spring company and the Chicago Coil and Spring company.

The blacksmiths, altho belonging to a different union, joined the lock out, and are doing their share of the picketing.

Mickelson Not Dying.

MEXICAN LABOR FAKERS BACKING ANTI-STRIKE LAW

Socialist in Theory, Capitalist in Deed

MEXICO CITY, July 23.—A commission in the Mexican congress which is controlled by the labor faker Louis N. Morones, known as the "Gompers of Mexico," has drafted a bill prohibiting strikes thruout the Mexican nation and providing for compulsory arbitration.

The traitorous character of the Morones leadership, already disclosed by his united front with the Calles government, Wall Street imperialist combination against the Communists, is further disclosed by this move to ban all strikes by national legislative enactment. In an interview, one of the Morones gang said:

Says Lion and Lamb have Mutual Interests

"We are satisfied that the interests of the workers require labor and capital to work amicably together, and therefore we stand for compulsory arbitration of labor disputes."

"While not denying that socialist unity might benefit humanity, we are convinced that Mexico must be developed by capitalism and not by socialism. Our bill is intended to encourage capital coming into Mexico by preventing strikes. We believe that capital can help labor much more than the Reds and Communists can help it.

"Readjustment, which is the same thing as the 'normalcy' advocated by President Harding of the United States, is now the program of the Calles government, and we are standing solidly behind Calles."

The radical elements, by no means without influence in the Mexican unions, are denouncing this stand as the rankest sort of class collaboration and betrayal by both Calles and the Morones labor traitor leadership of the interests of Mexico's workers to the octopus of Yankee imperialism.

MOTHER BLOOR CREATES STIR IN NORTHERN OHIO

Arrives in Steeltown Full of Fight

YOUNGSTOWN, O., July 22.—Ella Reeve "Mother" Bloor arrived in this city today, full of fight as usual, afte a hard week of campaigning for the DAILY WORKER. She speaks here tonight and Saturday proceeding to Cleveland on July 26 and in East Liverpool July 28 and 29.

On Sunday this agitator of nationwide reputation, continuing her plan of travel by which she pays not a cent of railroad fare, arrived in Cleveland from Toledo, making the 120 miles in two rides by auto.

In Cleveland Mother Bloor spoke to many crowds including those of Negro workers where the prospects for organization are splendid. On Monday a must successful meeting was held in Akron, O. On her arrival during a carnival, she found many floats of the B. & O. shops, advertising the supposed virtues of the labor hating B. & O. plan. At this "Hands Off China" meeting, John Bratten spoke with Mother Bloor, who finished her talk with an appeal for the DAILY WORKER which met with a ready response. Comrade Sell presided at the meeting.

Mother Bloor, 62 years of age, and untiring, arrived here from Canton, O. and speaking in an interview, told of the great response to the DAILY WORKER from all workers to whom she has spoken.

Capitalist newspapers in many cities have spoken columns of her spectacular trip of Communist organization, the latest being the Toledo Blade and the Cleveland Press on her recent arrival in those cities. This feature is further notice of the great Communist daily she is representing.

00 Families Now Seeking New Homes After Fire in Detroit

DETROIT, July 23—Two hundred families at Linwood and Gladstone avenues, made homeless by the $500,000 fire which swept the neighborhood yesterday afternoon were preparing today to take up new quarters or to remodel their charred homes.

The fire wrecked an unfinished five-story apartment on Gladstone avenue, two two-family flats across the street and burned out parts of two other apartments, a garage, several stores and 15 homes in the vicinity.

The fire started in the basement of the apartment under construction when plumbers tipped over a blow torch, igniting tar.

Getting a DAILY WORKER sub or two will make a better Communist of you.

ZIONIST BARGE NO PLACE FOR HUNGRY TUMMY

Ship Had Doctor But No Undertaker

By ART SHIELDS,
(Federated Press.)

NEW YORK, July 23.—Everything is kosher on the S. S. President Arthur that is carrying its fourth cargo of ardent Zionists to Palestine and two Rabbis, hired by the American-Palestine Line, Inc., give benefit of clergy to the travelers, but stewards who told their story in the Federated Press office, report the grossest profiteering and the most flagrant violation of marine laws by this orthodox outfit.

The Line's advertising portrays palatial rooms, swimming pool and all the luxuries of travel de luxe, but all this proved to be the bunk, say the seamen. There was no swimming pool; there was frequently no water even to flush the lavatories and passengers climbed to the top deck in vain for refuge. The ice machine was not even tried in the tropical Mediterranean weather and there was, on the return trip, a shortage of such food as the ship possessed.

Taking It Out on Punches.

A famine resulted on the way home from Naples, last port of call. Passengers and crew lived on potatoes, bread, meat, coffee and tea, with smelly meat that the butcher for necessary reasons carved up on the forward hatch rather than below. The firemen, underfed, would come up sick from the fireroom and towards the last the men from this department formed the habit of taking a poke at steward and second steward whenever these worthies came by. On one occasion the chief steward saved himself by sitting tight behind locked cabin while the entire "black gang" cried for him outside. The firemen were praticularly angry because the LaFollette Seamen's Act supposedly guarantees specified nourishing foods and because the steward had failed to lay in a supply while in the port of Naples, one of the cheapest food markets in the world.

LaFollette Act Dead as Bob.

Navigation laws were ignored from the day the ship sailed with the crew far below the number required by the same LaFollette Act for safety at sea. There were 35 men short in the steward's department alone and in consequence, the white coated men worked 16 hours a day—and at wages 5 to 10 dollars below the Shipping Board scale. Life boat drills were gone thru half-heartedly without any attempt, say the seamen, to swing the boats from the davits and test their fitness for a shipwreck crisis.

The letter of the law, was kept as far as requiring a doctor to be included on the ship's staff but this healer had office hours for the crew, an hour in the morning and one in the afternoon and the sailor unfortunate enough to be sick or injured out of office hours was unfortunate indeed.

Ship In Her Dotage.

The President Arthur is a veteran ship that has reached the status of a tub, in sailor's parlance. Built originally for the North German Lloyd in 1900 she was seized by the United States government during the war, and in 1921 called out of line for the scrap heap. But at the last moment the veteran was saved by the purchasing price of the American-Palestine Line, Inc. The ship is not considered safe for winter travel in the Atlantic and the government has ruled it must keep off deep water in winter so it is expected to run as a Mediterranean boat that season.

The ship is unorganized and the line does not want any union. The backers of this shipping venture are considered to be devout religionists and do not stress any desire for profits in their appeal for patronage from co-religionists. Jacob S. Strahl is president. On the President Arthur's maiden voyage with the Palestine banner last March, she was sent off at the pier with the greetings of Rabbi M. S. Margolies.

FARRINGTON'S MACHINE INCLUDES CROOKS WHO LOOTED UNION FUND FOR DEATH BENEFITS OF MINERS

By ALEX REID.
(Secretary Progressive Miners' Committee.)
ARTICLE III.

It has been well remarked that Farrington seems to have a great partiality for thieves, thugs, and fakers for friends, (by their company you shall know them), and a few examples of the tribe may not be amiss at this time.

Mr. Bouge, an ex-local official of the miners' union, a friend and confidant of Farrington, with an ex-deputy sheriff and notorious crook and embezzler by the name of Lee, got away with $2,500.00 of the miners' funds of burial benefits representing the insurance due to the dependents of supposedly deceased miners. But—these miners were still alive!

Lee was one of the most contemptible sluggers and "gatmen" that the Farrington machine used against the miners. This same gunman was arrested in Belleville after the strike of the miners and searched in jail, and on his person was found the tools of his trade.

Sheriff's Badge and Death Certificate.

Prominent on the person of this faker Lee, was a large gun, a sheriff's badge, and a miner's fake death claim for $250 from the district, which Lee had just collected before he went out slugging the miners. Of course, Lee and Bouge were arrested on account of the fake death claim being exposed. A fake face had to be put on the case to save the Farrington office, and the birds found themselves in jail, but not for long.

A squeal went up from Lee and Bouge as soon as they found themselves behind the jail bars. Rumors were rife in Springfield that others from the district officer would be next and many expected to see the chief faker himself in jail counting his thirty pieces of silver over and over again, but they were doomed to disappointment. They failed to reckon with the resourcefulness of Frank.

Another Faker to the Rescue.

Steve Sullivan, a flunkey friend of Frank's and a board member from Springfield, hearing that the two thieves in jail were going to squeal if they were not immediately released and had threatened to expose those who had made it possible for them to get away with the money as insurance benefits for "dead" men, rushed to the jail and had them released at once. Plenty of time has been given to Farrington to have the money returned to the union but they were never compelled to cough up a nickel of the miners' money and today the thieves retain the respect and friendship of their friend Frank.

Women Arrested in Mine Strike.

ATLANTIC CITY, July 23.—Organizers from the northern West Virginia coal fields report to United Mine Workers officials attending the coal conference in Atlantic City the following conditions in the strike zone: Ten to twenty thousand men striking; families of 1,200 miners living in barracks since evicted from company houses; injunctions issued against wives, daughters and mothers of miners, with 1,000 arrested to date; as many as 2,000 arrests of men and women occurring in a single day, the same pickets sometimes arrested two and three times in the same day, in short, the conditions of Logan county are being repeated in the northern field. For the entire state the union has been defendant in 5,000 lawsuits in the last 17 months.

Raditch Drops Opposition.

BELGRADE, July 23—The members of the Pashitch-Raditch coalition have taken the oath of office. He was arrested as the leader of the peasants' party, opposed to the fascist Pashitch. Raditch's opposition to the Jugo-slav constitution has now ceased, it is reported.

Tells of Hoe Co.

To the DAILY WORKER:—I have been a constant reader and supporter of the DAILY WORKER and believe that your paper is doing a great good towards organizing the workers, and the trade union movement.

You often make comment on the various strike situations thruout the country and their progress from time to time. But I wish to call your attention to a strike that has been in progress for the past two years, of which I do not recall reading anything about or concerning it in your paper since an injunction has been granted the company against the workers in the month of December, 1923.

The strike I have in mind is one against the R. Hoe Co., Inc. Printing press manufacturers of New York City involving 1200 machinists and apprentices of the I. A. of M. These men have been battling and have stood the test for the past two years against capitalistic oppression. They are still fighting this battle in spite of the fact that President Johnson and his dirty associates in Washington have sold them out.

They are putting up the struggle of their lives which means the life or death of this particular industry in the trade union movement.

Do you not think that these men are deserving of some thot or consideration in your paper? No doubt, that it might help to renew their vigor from time to time until a victory has been achieved.

Yours for the downfall of capitalism.—Harry Newton.

LEWIS WAGES SHAM BATTLE WITH BOSSES

Bathing Beauties Far More Engaging

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., July 23.—In this cool and comfortable summer resort, far away from the presence and influence of the coal miners, the sham battle is being fought right lustily to make the membership of the United Mine Workers of America believe thru the capitalist press reports, that John L. Lewis, traitor of a thousand sellouts, is "battling bitterly against heavy odds" for the interests of the coal miners.

Nothing could be further from the truth. Lewis does not battle the operators. He reserves all his fighting for the left wing of the U. M. W. of A. represented by the Progressive Miners' committee. Lewis does not engage in any "bitter discussions" and "heated sessions" exist only in the heated imagination of the capitalist news writers, who in this instance, however, cannot be blamed except for their acceptance of the story of the sessions as given out by the conference.

There is nothing "heated" about the conference. The cool breezes from the Atlantic ocean waft away the sun's rays. The luxurious hotels and the bathing beauties along the borad walk, far from annoying John L. Lewis, hold his pleased attention far more than do the interests of the coal diggers slaving in the pits underground, risking their lives for a niggardly wage or—waht is even worse—tramping about the country out of a job because Lewis and his friends, the operators, agree there are 200,000 too many miners.

The capitalist press is broadcasting stories of violent scenes in the conference rooms, with Lewis standing at bay, fighting desperately to prevent the operators from winning the argument and defeating the anthracite miners of their demand for a ten per cent raise in wages.

Lewis Afraid of General Strike.

The very idea that Lewis sought to raise the issue of the bituminous miners in the anthracite conference is pure poppycock. He hasn't the guts to do it, in spite of the fact that the needs of the miners make necessary the unity of the miners thruout the industry with a contractual recognition of their mutual interests. Lewis had the chance many times before to bring up the question of a general contract for the whole industry, with a general strike if turned down. He never had the guts before and no miner believes he has changed by going down to watch the bathing beauties at Atlantic City.

The only reason the operators are claiming that it is being brot in, is by stretching the fact that the chief lame duck among the U. M. W. organizers, Van Bittner, sent a telegram from West Virginia, to Secretary of Labor Davis, that predicted a general strike in both anthracite and bituminous fields if something was not done to stop bituminous operators from violating the agreement.

Operators Begin Objecting Early.

The miners of the pits, however, guffaw heartily at the idea of Van Bittner mentioning a general strike, remarking that his very soul shrinks from any sort of strike and would be withered up by the thot of a strike of all coal miners of the nation. It is thot, indeed, that his telegram was sent merely to give the operators a talking point over which to rave and to prevent the matter getting any further by murdering the infant idea in the cradle.

Lewis has "demanded" with a mouse's voice, that the salaries of paid coal company officials be published. The Progressive Miners' committee have long demanded this, and in addition that the profits, running up to astronomical figures, wrung from the sweat of the anthracite miners be published and that the millions more concealed in royalties and salaries be disclosed. If profits were revealed, the miners' demand for even twenty per cent would be seen to be modest indeed.

COMMUNIST INTERNATIONAL IN APPEAL TO EX-SOLDIERS OF THE WORLD WAR AS VICTIMS GATHER

MOSCOW, July 1.—(By Mail.)—The executive of the Communist International has issued an appeal to all ex-soldiers and to the workers and peasants of all countries which declares:

"In Paris the participants in the world congress of the international war victims are assembling, the representatives of the millions and millions who were victims in the imperialist world war. Which of you can ever forget the inhuman sufferings of the late world war?

"What have the toiling masses profited by the war? You were hailed as heroes, the war mongers from the bourgeois and social democratic camp promised you golden mountains. And today millions of war cripples are beggars, they can be seen in every town. And millions of war widows and orphans are unable to satisfy the most modest demands of life.

"Not a month passes but what there is some new attack upon the already low pensions and allowances paid by the state to its victims. And there are on top of that daily hindrances of a bureaucratic, nationalist, religious or counter-revolutionary character in the drawing of the allowances.

"With the assistance of the parties of the Second (Socialist) International, the bourgeoisie in all countries have systematically deprived the working class of all those concessions which the latter won in the revolutionary struggles of 1918-19. At the same time the upper sections of the bourgeoisie are becoming ever richer at the cost of the proletariat.

"The advance of Anglo-American capital in the form of the Dawes plan has resulted in the final impoverishment and political suppression of the toilers, and this must be felt still more sharply by the victims of the war.

"Your struggle can only be successful if you carry it on upon the basis of the proletarian class war against the existing capitalist imperialist economic order. The workers and peasants of all countries already know that the whole world bourgeoisie, the greed of the capitalists and large landowners and their governments, the criminal nationalist and colonial policies of all the capitalist powers, in short the whole system of world imperialism, is responsible for the world war.

"Do not all signs point to a repetition of the international crime? Is there not war today? In Morocco the French imperialists are carrying on war against the Riffs. The significance of the war is nothing but to prepare French imperialism with a favorable strategic point against England in the next world war.

"Or is that which is at present going on in China not the most shameful war waged by the English and Japanese imperialisms against the toiling masses of China? The repeated collisions of the great imperialist powers upon the economic and political fields will lead inevitably to a new world war which will be carried on with much more horrible means than was the last world war.

"Against this horrible prospect there is only one way—the merciless class struggle of the international proletariat against world imperialism, against the whole policy of exploitation and robbery and against the sabotage of the struggle of the proletariat by the leaders of the Second (Socialist) International. Do not let yourselves be frightened by the magnitude of the struggle, for it is a question of your future happiness or the slow decay of all sections of the working masses.

"Do not let yourselves be deceived by the phrases of the leaders of the Second (Socialist) International who speak of peace, but who vote for the war budget of the Moroccan war.

"Struggle against the calumny and the indictments of the bourgeoisie against Soviet Russia which carries on the only real policy of peace. The Executive of the Comintern sends its fraternal greetings to the International Congress of the War Victims which is called upon to become an important demonstration of the exploited and oppressed of all countries against the preparation for new imperialist war crimes of the imperial world bourgeoisie."

MOB STORMS HOME OF STATEN ISLAND NEGRO, HE REFUSES TO MOVE

NEW YORK, July 23—white neighbors of Samuel L. a Negro living at 87 Fairview Ave., West New Brighton, Staten Island, have been subpoenaed to appear before the Richmond County grand jury to expain their part in the efforts to intimidate the Negro.

Two attacks have been made on Browns house, a mob breaking windows and damaging the property. Brown, who is a letter carrier, refuses to move from the property.

Schooner Safe After Collision with a Freighter in Fog

NEW YORK, July 23.—Altho crippled by a collision in a thick fog with the freighter Edward Luckenbach, sixty miles south of Ambrose light, an unidentified three-masted schooner, at first believed to be sinking, was reported safe today.

The crew of the crippled vessel took to the lifeboats immediately after the crash, but returned to the schooner when it remained afloat. Offers of assistance were declined. The captain of the vessel said his ship had suffered no serious damage.

Actors' Equity on Job Against Fake Foreign Promoters

NEW YORK—(FP)— Chorus girls who seek their fortunes in Europe and in Central and South American countries have brought Actors Equity Association into international action, Dorothy Bryant, executive secretary of the actors' union, relates in Equity's magazine.

Crooks tours is what she calls some of the dodges by which American chorus girls are lured to cabarets and theatrical positions in other countries where standards differ from union-guided American theatrical circles. Girls are fooled by foreign promoters who pretend that they will give the world to the girls and turn tail at Equity's suggestion that their standing be couched for by an American consul in their native land.

Many chorus girls are saved fruitless trips by Equity's preliminary investigations and by their union's insistence that two weeks' pay and return fare be deposited by the producer before he takes his cast out of the country.

Duluth, Minn., Labor Joins "Hands Off China! Stand by Russia!" Cry

DULUTH, Minn.,— Approximately 1000 workers attended the demonstration at Fairmont Park. They were addressed by C. A. Hathaway, comrades Miller and Kannesto.

The following resolution was adopted:

"Resolved, that this audience after hearing the speakers this afternoon demands that the capitalist government of this country keep its hands of China, and be it further.

"Resolved, that we pledge our aid to the Soviet Government of Russia in its fight to protect the interests of the workers and oppressed people thruout the world.

SHOWS CONGRESS UNITES CHURCH AND THE STATE

Glorifies Ignorance, Intolerance, Claim

definitely on record forbidding congress to "foist the religion of the holy bible upon the schools and stop the forces of bigotry from gaining possession of school curricula."

Justice Siddons has ordered the defendants in the suit, all fiscal agents of the city, to show cause on next Tuesday why an injunction should not be granted to halt the salaries.

"We are going to fight this thing thru to the supreme court and get a final decision," said Wittner.

He has brought the suit in federal court with the hope that it will reach the supreme court more speedily than the Scopes' case in Tennessee.

He's All For Speed

"The injunction process is faster, and I think it may get into the supreme court early in the winter," he said.

He conceived the idea of a "test" case here, Wittner said, immediately after John T. Scopes was indicted in Dayton, but did not press it pending the outcome of the Tennessee trial.

The federal government became more directly involved in the case today when it was learned that the treasury officials who are being sued will be represented by Attorney General Sargent. The department of justice thus will be placed in a position of defending the law or showing that the teaching of science does not show disrespect to the bible.

Believe There Is Free Speech.

Frank R. Stephens, corporation counsel, who will handle the defense in the local evolution suit today expressed unofficially the opinion that the amendment to the appropriation bill violated the first amendment to the constitution, guaranteeing the freedom of religion, speech and press.

Thus the defense is put in the rather paradoxical position of assailing congress' action while at the same time attacking the injunction.

The bill's "rider" was enacted by the house on May 3, 1924. It was sponsored by Representative John Q. Summers, republican, of Washington. Not more than 20 members were on the floor at the time and there was but the briefest debate. The provision was not questioned in the senate.

Plans to Dismiss Case.

Stephens said he would move to dismiss the case when it comes up in court.

"I have detected several serious errors in the complaint," Stephens said. "These cannot now be corrected and I think they will furnish us [illegible] ample grounds to have the complaint dismissed. If necessary we will also be prepared to show that no disrespect to the bible is intended in the teaching of science in the local schools."

Call Darrow in Washington Case.

Clarence Darrow was called on today to assist in Washington's "evolution case."

In a telegram to the noted lawyer who handled the defense of John T. Scopes in Tennessee, Loren H. Wittner, who brought the suit here to "free the schools of bigotry and ignorance," declared:

"With the approval of congress, the forces of intolerance are confining the education of Washington children to the teachings of the holy bible which denies all natural science. To liberalize education I would appreciate suggestions from you, Dudley Field Malone and Arthur Garfield Hays in my suit in the District of Columbia supreme court."

Wittner, who is a great admirer of Darrow, said he hoped William Jennings Bryan would be prevailed on to "take the other side here."

Both Darrow and Bryan indicated that they would not come to Washington when the injunction is to be heard next Tuesday.

Soviet Russia as Seen Thru British Working Women's Eyes

The following is a preliminary report issued by the delegation of British trade union women that visited Russia recently. A more complete report will be published shortly. As will be noticed, those workingclass women are not in dread of the "awful" dictatorship, which capitalists, labor fakers and even some self-styled revolutionary syndicalists stand so much in terror of. They know it is a dictatorship of the workers. That's enough for them, not being petty bourgeois sentimentalists or spittoon philosophers. Here goes the report.

"The main purpose of our visit to Russia was to study the conditions of life of the women and children. At the same time, we also paid close attention to the conditions of life in general.

"After spending almost ten weeks in the U. S. S. R., we have collected a mass of highly interesting material, which we are now engaged in classifying and writing up for an official report which we hope to issue in about four or five weeks. In the meantime, however, we consider it to be advisable to issue a preliminary statement of our general impressions.

"After investigating conditions in numerous factories in many parts of the Soviet Republics, and after personal talks with workers of all trades and grades, including peasants and agricultural workers (some of these conversations we intend to reproduce in our report), we have no hesitation in saying that the Soviet government not only has the enthusiastic support of the vast majority of the workers and peasants, but that both these classes of workers look upon the present government as essentially their own.

"There is certainly a dictatorship in Russia, but it is a workers' and peasants' dictatorship. The Russian Communist Party is undoubtedly the directive force, but it is the workers and peasants thru their elected Soviets or Councils that rule.

Women in Industry.

"Women are encouraged, as far as possible, to enter all classes of work; they are encouraged to become skilled workers in every branch of industry, and for equal work they receive equal pay. In all apprenticeship schools attached to the factories, boys and girls are working side by side.

"The entry of women into industry is facilitated by the fact that most factories have nurseries and kindergartens attached, where the women can leave their children in safety. Here the children are looked after and fed in most cases free of charge.

"Every woman factory worker gets two months' leave of absence before and after the birth of a child, with full pay. In addition, an allowance is made in money or kind, usually the latter, to provide for the baby's clothes, etc., and free medical attention is provided. Women clerks and brain workers generally get six weeks before and six weeks after.

Works' Canteens.

"A special feature of factory life is the works' canteens, which provide meals for the children and employes. This is being encouraged by the Soviet authorities and trade unions as one method of freeing the woman from her domestic drudgery. In addition there are also communal and co-operative dining rooms, which diminish the domestic responsibility of the working woman.

"Attached to most factories is the 'club', which plays an important part in the entertainment and education of the workers in the evenings. In order to give the women an opportunity to participate in educational circles and trade union meetings, the children are catered for by the provision of special accommodation and qualified attendants.

"A minimum of two weeks' holiday (with pay) is made statutory, added to which are a number of religious and national holidays. Two weeks extra is granted to workers in unhealthy or dangerous occupations.

"The organization of rest homes, where workers may spend their vacation, is a unique development of present-day Russian life. These homes are for the most part the former palaces and country houses of the Russian princes, nobility and rich merchants. Thus health resorts in the Crimea, Caucasus and other parts of the country, which the workers had never dared hope to see formerly, are now peopled by workers and peasants during the summer. These rest homes are entirely free of charge, all expenses of traveling are met, and the worker is in receipt of full wages during his period of rest.

Health Institutes.

"A system of sanatoria and health institutes has been organized, and is being extended, for the treatment of various diseases, such as tuberculosis, nervous, heart and other complaints. A number of cases were noted where workers are being treated for general debility due to industrial fatigue. The period usually spent at those institutions is six weeks; but, if necessary, a further period can be spent there. During the whole time they are in receipt of full wages and treatment is entirely free of charge.

"Some of the factories we visited were very well equipped; in others the equipment was very much out of date, but in most a real effort had been made to introduce improvements in equipment, ventilation and in everything appertaining to the health and protection of the workers.

"In many districts new and greatly improved houses for workers and peasants are being built, and modern sanitary arrangements are being introduced, which will completely revolutionize the conditions of life of the people. Garden cities with the American and British type of houses are being constructed for the workers out of the profits of industry.

"Making Good."

"An enormous amount of work still awaits the Soviet authorities, not only in the restoration and improvement, public health and particularly in the construction of a proper drainage system. Nevertheless, what has already been done in most of these directions proves that, even unaided, Soviet Russia is making good, but the process is necessarily a slow one and entails much temporary suffering.

"If, however, Soviet Russia could obtain the necessary credits, a large quantity of machinery and general equipment, which she would obtain from Great Britain would provide employment for our own workers, would certainly be used for the benefit of the Russian people, and at the same time would yield profits without undue risks to those providing the necessary capital.

British Workers' Thanks.

"Finally, we wish to place on record that we found that the workers, both men and women, in every part of the Soviet Union that we visited, expressed keen appreciation of the moral and practical support manifested by the British working class in fighting against intervention, and against the blockade of Russia. They value most highly the fraternal relations already established between the Russian and British workers, particularly as a first step towards the establishment of the international unity of the working class.

YELLOW SCAB TAXI CONTROL GIVEN BLOW

Police Persecution of Unionists Halted

(From a Worker Correspondent)

NEW YORK CITY, July 23.—Taxicab drivers of this city are rejoicing over the victory that was won by the Amalgamated Taxi Association, in securing a temporary injunction, restraining the police department from supervising and licensing taxicabs and taxicab drivers in this city.

The injunction was sought on the ground that the police department had no jurisdiction, because the appelate division had decided that the home rule bill, by which the police had gotten their power to supervise the taxi industry, had been declared unconstitutional.

Under Other Control

Phil O'Brien, president of the Amalgamated Taxi Association, in a statement to a reporter for the Taxi Weekly, a current trade paper, had this to say, "A chauffeurs book and badge are issued to him by the department of licenses. In many instances they were obtained before Mr Jaly (Deputy police commissioner in charge of taxicabs now) was placed in charge of the licensing and supervision of taxicabs and hack drivers. The department of licenses alone therefore has the right to take away the book or badge.

A Yellow Scab Idea

The notorious taxi police bill, according to a majority of the taxicab drivers in this city, was passed by the board of aldermen, so as to give the open shop Yellow Taxi corporation, a chance to monopolize the taxi business here. At a protest meeting held by the Amalgamated, previous to the passage of this bill, O'Brien proved that relations of Mayor Hylan were employed or were doing business with the yellows, and under the most favorable conditions. The officials of the Yellow Taxi corporation will no doubt mourn the loss of their police taxi bill.

Washington News Is Scarce

WASHINGTON, —(FP)— Everyone must have noticed that news out of the national capital has been very scarce during the last few months. Some may think that it is because department heads and other government officials are away on vacations. Enlightenment comes from Swampscott, however. It is President Coolidge's orders. He thinks the country welcomes a respite from the flood of news that usually comes from here, and that by curtailing it public attention can be centered upon the prosperity of industry, business and commerce.

Cotton Crop Declines

WASHINGTON, July 23.—A decline of about 751,000 bales between June 25 and July 25, is indicated by the July 16 condition of the cotton crop of the United States, the crop reporting board of the department of agriculture announced today.

But the final outturn of the crop may be larger or smaller, as developments the remainder of the season prove more or less favorable to the crop than usual.

Record Wheat Acreage in Argentina.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 23—The wheat acreage of Argentina for 1925-26 is larger than that of any preceding year according to a cablegram received by the United States department of agriculture from the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome. The acreage sown is estimated at 18,500,000 acres compared with the harvested area of 15,977,000 acres in 1924-25.

Injunction Against Peaceful Picketing.

NEW YORK.—An injunction against "peaceful picketing" has been issued by Supreme Court Justice Tierney in behalf of the Leeds Shoe Co., Inc., and affecting the members of the Retail Shoe Salesmen's Union of New York. Tierney berated the unionists from the bench and refused to modify the order in behalf of peaceful picketing.

Disregard Union Rules.

To the DAILY WORKER: I am a brother of Local Union 66, of the Carpenters' Union. I was sent by the gentleman I was working for (excuse me for calling him that) G. Emery, the superintendent, and A. Watson, the foreman, to put in a garage floor. We did the job in two and a half days. Also put in a driveway.

The job was outside the city limits, therefore our union calls for a half hour allowance to take the car to and from work.

I told the men what the job calls for, and they said, "To hell with your union." That was pretty rich. Both these gentlemen carry a card in the Carpenters' Union. Fraternally, N. F., Cleveland, Ohio.

German Fascists Admit Their Crimes

sion of a particularly clever agitator, above all because he has mastered the Marxist theory and because also he has seen the Russian revolution.

Hindenburg Takes Part.

During his activity in Munich, he learned to know Captain Ehrhardt personally. Dittmar described the hotels Royal and Bavrische Hof as the centers of the O. C. in Munich. In these hotels numerous banquets were given in which Ludendorff, Hindenburg and the Crown Prince Rupprecht took part.

The evidence of Dittmar upon his almost successful attempt to make his way into the Berlin trade mission of the Soviet Union as an employee presented new proofs of the provocative role of Bozenhardt. Dittmar then makes sensational statements upon his first acquaintance with Kindermann whom he describes as the mental leader of the group. This acquaintance took place thru the agency of Rose who has just arrived from Germany as a witness, an active member of the O. C. and leader of the economic department of the Berlin university.

Baumann Came As Spy.

The prosecutor stresses the necessity for carrying the process still farther for explaining fully the political significance of the trial and above all to clear up the relations existing between the German governmental authorities and the fascist organizations up to 1924 and to deal with the organization and the activity of the fascist organizations, in particular the O. C.

Kindermann in his attitude is a mixture of a hot head and a conscious fascist. He is continually called to order by the court for his challenging attitude.

The witness Baumann was sent to Russia by German fascist organizations independently from the group Kindermann, Walscht, Dittmar and is also under arrest on account of his own activity.

In the third session of the second day of the trial the hearing of Herbert Heinrich Werz, alias Baumann Ehe, according to his own statements has come to Russia as a spy under the orders of the O. C.

He makes sensational declarations upon the terrorist and provocative work of the O. C. He was made a member of the organization in the winter of 1922, by the ex-company commander Wilhelm Eduard von Mallingrath.

Committed Acts of Terror.

After the Ruhr occupation he received from the Munich high command of the organization the order to drive the workers into the arms of the French by provocation in the rear of proletarian demonstrations, for instance by explosives. With seven other members, amongst them Mallingroth, he undertook a terrorist act against the general staff of the army of occupation in a villa near Essen.

The room of the general staff was attacked from three sides. Each of the attackers fired his whole magazine thru the window. Bauman received a bullet in the thigh. Mallingroth a bullet in the breast and a bayonet wound.

After that, preparations were made to blow up the railway tunnel from Cologne to Aachen. Explosives were transported from Holland over Nasastricht-Falkenburg to Herzogenrath into the glass factory in which Mallingroth was working as an ordinary worker. Then followed preparations for an attempt upon the separatist leaders Smets and Kaiser in Cologne.

He was arrested three times by the occupation authorities and was in prison together with the murderer of Graf, Rennert and six police sergeants later also with Jarres.

Murdered French Agent.

He also took part in the murder of the French agent Marianne de Tilsot. In June, 1923, he was given provocative work amongst the separatists by the O. C., and made the personal acquaintance of the separatist leaders Mathes, Dorten and Tietz. On bloody Sunday in Dusseldorf, he gave the signal as pre-arranged, by shouting, "Long live the Rhinish Republic," for the attack of police and the disguised fascists. Later he became a watch commander of the separatists.

The O. C. had a direct front line in the Ruhr district which ran from the Dutch border over Geilenkirchen, Duren and Stellberg on the Mosel. This line was provided with eight arsenals from which 14 regiments could be armed. The arms were hidden in factories and land estates. The artillery depot was in the brown coal mine Future in Rothberg near Eschweiler.

Feared the Workers.

All the munition dumps were undermined with electrically exploded dynamite as the O. C. feared occupation of the dumps by the workers. The organization regularly held weapon and field exercises.

Blew Up Railroad—Blamed Communists.

It carried out the blowing up of the line Cologn-Aachen (Langerwehe) which the bourgeois press blamed onto the Communists.

Leading O. C. members stood in direct connection with the French occupation authorities, von Wieck, von Darsquen.

French and O. C. Against Workers.

Baumann declares that an agreement was made between the French occupation authorities and the O. C. to act together against the workers in case of any movement from the left. The O. C. member von Wieck was murdered by Baumann personally acting under the instructions of the organization in Munich on account of treachery.

Entered Communist Party as Spy.

In the autumn of 1923, he received instructions of the O. C. to enter the Communist Party of Germany. In order to achieve this he took part in the emergency work as a worker in the district of Aachen-Heilen. He there succeeded in becoming chairman of the shop committee of the emergency workers' colony.

In accordance with his orders he had carried on a provocative activity in the shop committees' conference in Honningen in the beginning of August. The success of this activity was the demonstration of the emergency workers on the following Monday before the police presidium in Aachen which led to a blood bath with many wounded.

Baumann declares that on this occasion he saw the police fling hand grenades from the windows of the Aachen police presidium upon the demonstrators. After this demonstration he succeeded in entering the middle Rhinish organization of the Communist Party of Germany. The orders of the O. C. were to discover all particulars of the proletarian factory hundreds and their arms and to set up as close a relation with the leaders of the C. P. G., above all with the Central Committee, as possible.

Formed Terrorist Group.

Baumann let it be known in the C. P. circles that he was persecuted by the O. C. and with this excuse he traveled to Berlin. There he carried on provocative activities amongst the revolutionary fugitives. Under orders of the O. C. he formed a terrorist group to murder Ebert and Seeckt.

The attempts were not to be carried out, but the arrest of the terrorist group was to lead to the compromising of the Communist Party The Central Committee of the Communist Party, however, removed him from the Berlin party circles.

Arrested in Moscow.

In all his travels, he remained in permanent connections with the O. C. Later on he traveled to Leningrad and after a short time he was arrested in Moscow. In Leningrad he wormed his way into the Smolny in order according to his instructions; to make observations there.

The instructions of the O. C. did not include attempts, but were for the observation and investigation relating to leading politicians, Stalin, Trotsky, Kamenev. Baumann declares to have felt that he was sent as the advance post and pioneer of a terror group. He declares that he has often met Captain Ehrhardt personally in the Munich Hayrische Hof under the name of Hans Herbert von Wickinger

LOS ANGELES WORKERS HURL PRO-CHINA CRY

Voice Their Protest with Cheers and Cash

By FRAPIESA.

LOS ANGELES, Calif.—Last night Los Angeles workers, from the Old and New World, assembled at Music Arts Hall, 233 South Broadway, and launched their protest against the barbarous crushing of the Chinese people by imperialist powers. They demonstrated that the bulldozing rulers of this city, assisted by a wave of hot weather that has been flowing, as from the mouth of hell, upon the sweltering community have failed utterly to suppress the spirit of liberty in them. Enlisted even unto death in the cause of freedom, they hurled the defi: "Truth, crushed to earth, will rise again!" They showed themselves to be stronger and more determined than before the recent anti-labor laws were passed.

Stalwart Audience.

Men and women present were different from those who usually attend such meetings. They were on an average under 40 years of age. Ten years ago such an audience would be composed principally of industrial derelicts who had learned their lesson too late to profit by it. Last night's audience indicated a vast improvement in the working class of Los Angeles, showing that the stalwarts are spending less time at base ball games, prize fights, etc., and more at the struggle to save themselves from the industrial junk pile. The average man in this audience would be physically a match for an enlisted soldier and mentally much his superior.

Absence of Mexicans.

Men and women from every important county in Asia, Europe and America were present but it was easy to observe that there were few Mexicans. To impulsive persons this might appear to be discouraging. But it is actually gratifying. It shows an immense, fertile field that offers itself for devleopment. There are 1,000,000 Mexicans in Southern California, Arizona, New Mexico and Texas and 500,000 of them are adults, the worst exploited element, lacking only organization to turn upon the exploiters and square accounts.

Mexicans form a great potential factor in the revolutionary movement of the Southwest. They are, by force of necessity, Communists. If properly approached and informed, they will lend themselves to every manifestation against injustice. At such a meeting as that held last night they would have been forceful participants.

But it is well to remember that a reserve is essential and that the Mexicans are untrained industrial fighters awaiting instruction.

Four Organizations Call.

Representatives of the Kuomintang (Chinese), Japanese Workers Association, American Civil Liberties Union and Workers Party addressed the meeting and voiced the sentiments of these four organizations. Resolutions, uniting in one ringing protest the indignation and resentment of the four, were approved unanimously by the audience calling for the withdrawal of foreign troops from China, for the abolition of extra-judicial powers of consuls, for industrial justice and for general reform in that country along lines of modern progress.

Funds were raised in short order for forwarding to the aid of the Shanghai strikers. Co-operation of the Workers Party of America with the workers of China, as well as all other countries, was pledged. Before the meeting terminated it became clearly outlined that nothing had been left undone to show the beasts of prey of imperialism that the workers of Los Angeles are prepared to wage war upon them in behalf of the oppressed anywhere and everywhere all over the world.

Frisco Party Notes

Four hundred people listened to Tom Lewis, at Third and Minna, San Francisco. Forty copies (all on hand) of the DAILY WORKER were sold. As many more could have been sold. James H. Dolsen spoke on the same night to an equally good crowd at 10th and Broadway, Oakland. The previous Saturday a good meeting was held at 20th and Mission, Can Francisco.

Cooks and Waiters No. 44, at their last meeting, passed resolutions condemning the unjust conviction of comrades Crouch and Trumbull. Painters' Union No. 19 also passed similar resolutions.

Lithographers' Union, of San Francisco, held a picnic at Congress and Springs near San Jose. District organizer Tom Lewis of the Workers Party was their principal speaker. The members were highly pleased and Lewis has been invited to speak before the union.

Plans will be brought before the Workers Party English branch of Oakland and the Alameda county city central committee this week for more extended street meetings as feeders for regular Sunday night propaganda meetings in a hall. Oakland has, for some time past, been without such meetings.

CONGRESS OF INTERNATIONAL RED AID IN MOSCOW SETS ITSELF TASK OF ENLISTING PEASANTS IN WORK

MOSCOW, (By Mail)—The main work of the International Red Aid is achieved in the Soviet Union, the only country where the workers can work freely in the interests of the victory of the world revolution. It is sufficient to say that in the Soviet Union for every million inhabitants there are 35,000 members of the IRA, while in the whole of Western Europe only 1½ thousand and in the whole world except Russia not more than 350 members of the Red Aid are in one million inhabitants. For this reason it is clear what great significance the congress of the Red Aid of the Soviet Union has for the whole of our international movement.

This congress of the representatives of four and a half million members of the I. R. A. organization in the Soviet Union was the object of great attention and expectation of many million victims of capitalist suppression in Western Europe. The work of the congress was influenced by the news of the unheard of terror in Bulgaria. This unfortunate little Balkan country, which formerly groaned under the yoke of Turkish despotism and is now strangled by a reactionary of Bulgarian origin.

Britain Aids Zankov Terror

Crucified Bulgaria is under the iron heel of the imperialist dragon because the Bulgarian speculators, supported by the Wrangel bandits and their own military, do not carry on their bloody occupation quite on their own, but with the permission, or better, with direct support of the people of the London stock exchange.

The congress settled its work with the full consciousness of the importance of its task. It utilized the occasion to throw a glance backwards and to prepare the tasks for the future.

Work Among Peasants.

One of the most important problems of the congress was the carrying on of the work in the villages. If we consider that the whole revolutionary movement on a world scale relies on the solution of the problem of drawing the millions of the peasants into the revolutionary clarifying storms, we will understand how important and significant, from th epoint of view of the I. R. A., is the penetration of its organization into the Russian villages.

The I. R. A. is a political organization which gives itself the task of gathering the broadest masses of the population under the banner of class solidarity. The fact, that the I. R. A. is not simply a philanthropic society, can be seen by the following figures: 88 per cent of its officials are Communists and 12 per cent are non-partisans.

On the whole the organization comprises the non-partisan masses for of the 4½ million members in the Soviet Union only 16 per cent are members of the C. P. R. and the remaining 84 per cent non-partisans. This is quite clear when one takes into consideration that the direct task of the I. R. A. is just to draw the non-partisan masses into the movement and lead them to such a level of class consciousness that guarantees the success of the main task of the I. R. A.—the establishment of a red ambulance.

Composition of I. R. A.

Unfortunately the I. R. A. in the Soviet Union, with regard to its social composition, is still far from being a representative of the social structure of the main groups of the population. According to approximate calculations of 4½ million members of the I. R. A. 1,750,000 i. e. 39 per cent are workers, 1,350,000 i. e. 29 per cent are employes while there are only 990,000—22 per cent—peasants and 225,000, i. e. 5 per cent—are red soldiers of whom actually most are peasants.

Thus there are less peasants than employes in the I. R. A. in a country where nine-tenths of the population are peasants. It is quite clear that the I. R. A. must concentrate now on the winning of the peasantry, because it is only quite in the beginnings of this work. This not for the reason that the peasants might have no sympathy for its aims and tasks, actually the peasants not only look at the I. R. A. with confidence but are ready even to support it.

Numerous observers of the villages have stated that the I. R. A. is one of the most popular public organizations and that the poor peasantry continuously approaches it. The congress had therefore the task to define in detail the concrete possibilities ofr the penetration of the I. R. A. into the villages so that next year the results of this work will show themselves by the intrusion of the millions of the Russian peasants into the organizations of the International Red Aid.

Landis Shown Tax Dodger

Judge Keneshaw Mountain Landis, chief mogul of baseball, neglected to file his personal property taxes and was penalized 50 per cent on his last year's schedule, it became known today when figures on the fashionable Hyde Park district were disclosed. Judge Landis was only one of many Hyde Parkers to neglect to permit the assessor within their portals or to notify the board of the amount of their personal property. Judge Landis was assessed on $3,375 personal property.

Homeless Los Angeles Family Forced to Live in City Jail

By L. P. RINDAL.

LOS ANGELES, July 23. — This is "good, old summer time" on the shores of the Pacific Ocean. Peace, harmony and happiness are all supposed to reign supreme along these calm, sun-kissed waters.

The following incident is one of hundreds:

William Bowman, 19, his wife, 18, and two small children, Mary and William, 16 months and 6 weeks old respectively, are all "guests" at Central police station, where they sought refuge the other day. Why? Because the family is homeless, penniless and destitute, and the father for four long, weary months has sought work in vain, the slave market was overcrowded. Therefore they stay in jail; the girl-wife and the children in the matron's quarters, and the young husband sleeps in a cell at night. During the day he is looking for a master, walking his feet off as he has no money for carfare. He is a radio mechanic, but even the air is monopolized.

The couple have been married two years, and up to about four months ago lived with Bowman's stepfather and his mother. Then the mother died, and the stepfather went away. Friends cared for the family for a while; finally the friends could care for the little family no longer, so the jail was the only place open for them.

The only wish of the young father is to earn enough to take his girl-wife and his little babies from the jail.

Meanwhile little Mary, 16 months old, and her babe brother, William, just six weeks old, may glance out thru the bars of the jail and see a flicker of the sunshine, but—

Down on the beach little children play and laugh in the sunshine. And not even the echo of their laughter can penetrate the jail.

ST. LOUIS MEET CHEERS 'HANDS OFF CHINA' TALK

Chinese Workers in Big Audience

ST. LOUIS, Mo., July 23.—A very successful "Stand by Russia, hands off China" mass meeting was held in St. Louis last Friday.

The meeting took place on the lawn of the Labor Lyceum and was attended by a large crowd of people among whom were many Chinese workers.

Kuomintang Speaker Stirs Crowd

In addition to Comrades Mikalasky of the Workers Party and Barney Mass of the Young Workers League there was a speech delivered by S. Joeling, local president of the Kuomintang party.

His speech was roundly applauded thruout and when he concluded with the words "It it time the workers of all countries unite to overthrow these oppressors" there was a storm of applause.

Chinese Workers Like Communist Talk

Comrade Mass, who delivered the main speech, held the crowd for over one hour. His speech which was well organized and well delivered was enthusiastically received by every one present.

Especially was this thrue of the Chinese workers, who seemed to be well posted on recent events and seemed to recognize many historical facts relative to China which were brot out in their true light by Comrade Mass.

Comrade Michelic, who acted as chairman, concluded the meeting with an appeal for support of the movement for Chinese liberation and opposition to imperialist wars. The meeting was a splendid success.

Mass Speaks to Curlee Strikers

On the following day Comrade Mass spoke to the Curlee Clothing company strikers and was well received. After Comrade Mass finished the strikers applauded for nearly fifteen minutes.

CUT GOVERNMENT WORKERS PAY IN WASHINGTON, D. C.

125,000 Underpaid Toilers Are Hit Hard

WASHINGTON, July 23.—J. R. McCarl, general comptroller of the United States has issued an order arbitrarily cutting the pay of about 125,000 government workers already underpaid. By this order, allowances that have been made for expenses of field employes, such as commutation for quarters, sustenance, etc., is declared illegal and will not be allowed after June 30, 1926.

Such allowances have been made by the various government departments for years. They constitute a regular part of the pay of employes whose duties take them out into the field, such as thousands of farm demonstrators and forest service employes, to say nothing of those who work in the geological survey, fisheries and other branches almost too numerous to mention.

Congress Opposes Wage Increases.

If this order stands, and experience has shown that McCarl is a "czar" when it comes to paying out government money, then the field employes will have no recourse except an increase in salary in the next appripriation bill. Getting an increase in a salary out of congress is about as easy as getting a chick out of an infertile egg.

Bureau chief may recommend it, department heads may go before congressional committees and ask for it, director lord of the budget bureau may even incline his head to indicate that he is not opposed, but unless the government workers have a powerfully strong political pull, which most of them have not, congress sets a stern face and orates about the high pay and easy hours of Uncle Sam's workers, and turns down their application.

Having just increased their own pay envelopes from $7,500 to $10,000 a year, congressmen will probably feel that the possibilities of the federal treasury have been about exhausted so far as other pay rolls are concerned.

To make it easier for congress to refuse to grant salary increases to make up for the allowances that McCarl has taken away from the government workers, there is the classification act, passed a year ago, which prescribes for the grading of salaries and makes it almost impossible for government employes to get better pay unless they are put in different grades from those prescribed. If that were done some bureau chiefs say that McCarl would have another excuse for cutting off the extra pay.

SOCIALIST INTERNATIONAL AIDS ZANKOV MURDER RULE, REFUSING SUPPORT TO FIGHT ON FASCISTS

VIENNA—(By Mail)—The bloody terror of the Bulgarian hangmen's government is at present at its culmination point. To the 6000 murders after the attempt are added day by day new death sentences and executions by the court martials. The terror increases in connection with the increasing pauperisation of the working masses and large numbers of workers and peasants and the best elements of the Bulgarian intelligentsia are wiped out.

The unheard of cruelties which take place in Bulgaria, have brought the working masses into movement, also those who are still following the Second International. Especially the English workers, whose class consciousness and international solidarity makes very gratifying progress, have raised very energetic protests against the Bulgarian terror.

Socialists Side With Zankov.

The growing movement of the working masses in connection with the fact that the Bulgarian social democrats continuously support the Zankov regime, forced the Second International to take a definite stand. It called a Balkan conference at Prague which treated the problems of the Balkans.

The statement adopted at this conference contains a full excuse for the shameful attitude of the Bulgarian social democrats and, thus for the Zankov terror and the only progress of this conference in comparison with the decisions of the Balkan conference in Bucharest of March, 1924, is the fact that now the Second International has to admit definitely that the Zankov rule is a rule of white terror. Besides the statement contains many lies the most important of whichh we wish to expose here.

1. The affirmation of the Second International that the individual responsibility for the present conditions in Bulgaria cannot be stated with certainty is proved wrong by the establishment and the actions of the Zankov government.

Rule of Murder.

This government which conquered power by a military coup d'etat with the assistance of the Macedonians and the Wrangel bandits, altho the parties supporting it had only a fourth part of the parliamentary votes, and which overthrew the peasant government of Stambolliyski, which was democratic and sympathetic to the workers and peasants, is already proved by this fact as a purely fascist government. It started with the murder of the peasants' leaders and with the oppression of the labor movement.

2. The statement that the socialist party of Bulgaria "which is between two criminal and violent groups fights one as well as the other with great energy" is a lie. It fights only against the Communists and the members of the Peasants' Unions. The social democrats have actively participated in the Zankov putsch and were represented in the Zankov government by Kasakoff. The real role of the Bulgarian social democrats is furthermore proved by the following quotations:

Socialists Excuse White Terror.

After 20 months of Zankov terror the social democratic organ "Narod" published the following cynical excuse of the white murders:

"Before the war a human life was precious and the whole country was sad when the press reported some murder. Now, after the war, it appears as if we all with guns in our hands go to hunt human beings. Our society is demoralized, we are all mentally ill, the mental values are suffocated in blood. Bloody, indescribably bloody is our epoch."

On April 23, 1924, Tchernekov made the following statement on behalf of the social democratic fraction in parliament:

"In its striving for conquests the imperialism of Moscow found a good co-operator in the union of the followers of the united front. (Communists and peasants); therefore the Bulgarian army leads mainly a patriotic war against the actions of foreign enemies and their internal agents. Our place can only be in the ranks of the defenders of the nation."

This is the "fight with great energy" of the Bulgarian social democrats in parliament against Zankov. The social democratic leader Pastuchov, former police minister, welcomed the shameful sentence of the Sofia court against Sadgorsky, Koeff and Friedman, "with feelings of complete satisfaction."

Socialists Mouth Fascist Lies.

3. The statement of the Second International contains the lie of Zankov, which has been long proved incorrect, that "the violent elements among the Communists and agrarians undertake attempts, murders and robbery." All attempts that have taken place have been acts of desperation of tortured masses and the fights of bandits are those of peasant groups who have been driven into the mountains by the persecutions and destructions.

4. The "amnesties" are a swindle of Zankov for the deception of the foreign countries. Only those prisoners were released who in any case were not guilty or had received only small punishments. A great number of those amnestied were murdered before their release or brutally tortured. In some cases the amnesty was only a trick to induce the emigrants to return. After their return they were murdered, as for instance the Sofia lawyer, Dr. Pashov in April, 1925, who was murdered with his wife, the doctor Pashova.

5. The Second International approves explicitly of the Zankov murders for it demands only the "stopping of the executions without trial," i. e. less diplomatically expressed, of the open murder without a judicial cover. The trials in Bulgaria are nothing but legalized murder. Trials in which witnesses of the defense and lawyers can hardly dare to speak because they are threatened with murder by the fascists, in which with immense speed hundreds of death sentences are passed are nothing else but murder.

Complete Surrender to Zankov.

6. The alleged strengthening of the Bulgarian social democrats is only the consequence of the suppression of all revolutionary workers and peasants' groups from the elections. The mandates of the united front of the Communists and peasants were declared annulled with the agreement of the social democrats. Furthermore, the property stolen from the revolutionary organizations was given to the social democrats. Besides the social democrats could only get their mandates by means of negotiations with the government parties. Despite all this the increase of social democratic votes is small and it would be completely without significance without the above mentioned circumstances.

7. The promise of the socialist international that its affiliated parties would support the Bulgarian social democrats, means under these circumstances the complete support of the Zankov bandits.

LORD'S BEGGARS MUST QUALIFY AS PANHANDLERS

Proletarian Gets Job With 'Redeeming Army'

"What the hell have you been doin' for two long hours, coming back with a lousy thirty-six cents?" This was the way a go-getting collection sergeant of the "redeeming army" (of the lord) greeted a worker who covered two blocks rattling a can and imploring the passerby to come across for the greater honor and glory of god and for the good of his creatures.

It happened this way. A worker who noticed a determination on the skinny covering of his belly, to move perceptibly towards his back bone, a form of amalgamation to which the particular worker was not committed, wandered down the slave market, alies Madison Street between Halsted and the Canal, looking right and left at the legends that told of men wanted for various jobs from slinging hash to driving mules.

The worker was out of work, a not uncommon condition for a worker in a rich capitalist country. And when the optics of this particular unexploited potential wage slave saw an invitation on the premises of the North Western Labor Agency at 625 West Madison Street, to come in and pick his job, things began to brighten up a little and his belt decided to maintain the status quo ante bellum at least for the time being. The workless slave smelled garlic, pork chops and onions.

Fancy the joy of this proletarian when he was offered a situation, not a dirty job mind you. A position with a drawing account and a fat commission, was handed to him for the paltry sum of two bucks. And fearing that our wage slave might find the occupation monotonous he was given a commission as drummer in the "redeeming army."

Was Handed a Can

Our friend repaired to a Mr. Evans with headquarters at 1517 Ogden Ave. There was no "lord" around there, in fact nobody who looked even as enlightened as William Jennings Bryan. Mr. Evans instructed the job hunter to betake himself to the headquarters of the "redeeming army." He was given a tambourine and instructed to knock at doors and solicit funds. Being accustomed to performing useful labor our friend was anything but successful at this capitalist sport of getting something for nothing. The 36 pennies in his can after covering two blocks convinced the hero of this story that he was not destined for the ministry.

Lord How That Man Could Pray!

He decided to return to his captain and when the latter looked into the pot and saw the scanty collection his rage was terrible. He swore by the living, dead and crucified Jesus that he never had the misfortune to hire such a worthless panhandler. "You are not worth your weight in dung." he said. "If I tied that can to a yellow dog's tail and let him run down Green street, the bums would at least fill it with tobacco juice if nothing else. Get to hell out of here."

The indignant worker threw his can and all that was in it at the lord's sergeant and had a good mind to kick hell out of him in the bargain. On second thought however, he remembered his dignity and decided to return to the agency where he was given the "situation" and demand the return of his fee of two dollars. After considerable redtape he got back his two dollars.

BUILDERS AT WORK

It Takes But a Few to Do a Good Job

Detroit Does It This Way

Just a few good comrades, receiving the assistance of trade unionists and other workers from the shops, have stirred up the auto workers of this city, with meetings at various shops over the strike at the Fisher Body Pant 18.

The real posibilities of the situation developed by the Left Wing group of the Metal Trades, are due only to these Detroit fighters and good DAILY WORKER Builders. At the head of them were Edgar Owens, whose splendid work for the "Daily" has helped to make Detroit a "Daily Worker Town" and Al E. Goetz, City DAILY WORKER Agent, whose efficient leadership and good stories were a great factor in the success achieved.

For three days when their stories of the strike were front page news, 600 copies of the DAILY WORKER went to the strikers and were sold. Again (and as always) it was the DAILY WORKER by which important work at the factory gate was done BY MEANS OF THE DAILY WORKER.

INDIAN LEADER IS HEAD OF THE TRADE UNIONS

Served Many Years in British Prisons

NEW YORK —(FP)— Information reaching the friends of freedom for India is that Pundit Motilal Nehru succeeds C. R. Das, who died last month, as president of the All India Swaraj Party and the All India Trade Union Congress. Nehru, until now vice president of the independence party, was selected for the higher posts at a special party meeting at Calcutta, July 16, attended by Mahatma Ghandi.

The new head of the Indian movement is considered to be as aggressive a leader as Das himself and his choice is believed to indicate that the great railway strike in northern India will continue to receive full support from organized labor of the nation and that the independence movement will be pushed forward. Nehru comes from the aristocracy, but his devotion to the movement, say Indian exiles in New York, is attested by the years of prison—most of 1919, 1920, 1921 and 1922—he spent for the cause and by the fact that the greater part of his hereditary fortune as a prince of the United Provinces in northern India has been given to the movement.

Compulsory Patriotism

The Turks have learned a lot since they decided that they could get along without a Sultan and that perhaps the Sultan, not being a Sultan any longer, could manage to live without the luxury of a castle full of female companions. Not so very long ago, Turkey was looked upon with the same contempt that the capitalist powers now bestow on China. Citizens of foreign countries who felt like disporting themselves in contravention of Turkish law, did not have to worry about Turkish courts. They would be tried, if at all, by courts set up by their own governments.

But times have changed. Turkey looked pretty sick after the world war. The Sultan was getting along alright tho, being on Great Britain's payroll. But the rest of the Turks did not fare so well. Then things began to happen.

Greece, egged on by England, started in to take over as much Turkish real estate as possible, while France supplied Turkey with the wherewithal to make things hot for the Greek ruling class, and unfortunately for the misguided workers who wore their uniforms, and used their guns on the equally unfortunate Turkish workers and peasants who were not fighting for themselves.

The whole thing wound up with the Sultan and his harem being put on board ship and the captain was given orders to come back minus the same cargo. The Greeks also were deported. Now the Turks are acting like other nations, hence this comment.

Recently they came to the conclusion that airplanes are a necessary part of governmental equipment, so they set about collecting money for building purposes. They looked around and saw banks, oil companies and various other good and wealthy institutions that were drawing riches out of Turkish soil; and they decided that those institutions should be mighty glad to help in this goodly work, seeing that they were accustomed to pledge their loyalty to the Turkish republic and express pride in its development.

But strange to say, when the Turkish government suggested that a check would be welcome and not a paltry one at that, those patriotic institutions howled loud and long. The Standard Oil company was told that no less than $60,000 was expected of it. That was almost as much as it had to pay for getting the skids greased for Doheny and Sinclair in the Teapot Dome and Elk Hill steals, but it will shell out. A French bank must part with $10,000. The Turks are learning, but it is not good manners to make the capitalists pay even to defend their own loot. They are not used to such treatment.

The Poor King!

King George of England may be sending in his application to one of his many poorhouses unless wealthy Americans stop drinking his champagne, according to news dispatches from London. With one million and a quarter British workers out of employment and a big coal strike in the offing, it might be advisable for the king to call in Calvin Coolidge and take a course in domestic economy from the hobby horse jockey of Vermont.

If this editorial is read on the Chicago gold coast, it is possible that a collection may be taken up to replenish the royal coffers and to preserve the United States from the charge of being a nation of deadbeats. What are the facts?

The story says that no less than 12,000 guests were at one garden party in Buckingham palace. It costs the king half a million dollars a year to do the right thing to his guests. Those parties swallow money. For instance, the liquor is not served up in small eye-openers. Thousands of quarts of champagne are poured into great glass jugs fitted with gold lids bearing the royal insigna.

The king might as well have his fling while he may. At the rate things are going in England today his majesty may soon be grateful for a drink of near beer.

A Costly Disrupter

One of the most efficient disrupters on the payroll of the American Federation of Labor, is Paul J. Smith, who figured so prominently in the attacks on the labor movement in Minneapolis, Seattle and Great Falls. He succeeded in hurting the movement in Seattle and Minneapolis but the boys in Great Falls, ran the lickspittle out of town in good Montana fashion, to the great benefit of the trade unions. It would be an exaggeration to say that he did not do harm even in Great Falls, but had he not been given the bum's rush, things would be worse.

The financial statement of the A. F. of L. for the three months ending May 31, shows that this official agent provocateur, used up $1,141 in smashing unions, by the expedient of driving radicals out of them. It is the general view among those who saw Smith in action, that what he receives from the Green budget is only a small part of his income. The service he renders the capitalists is worth a good deal of money to them and they know a good thing when they see it.

One of those who will be interested in reading this item concerning Smith's quarterly disruption fund, is Bill Winterrowd, of Great Falls. Bill will be the first to agree that Smith wasted his time in that city.

"Small Gum Paper Labels"

The above title precedes an expenditure of $240.00 in the financial statement of the American Federation of Labor for the three months ending May 31, 1925. This sum was charged to the account of the United Garment Workers, the strikebreaking agency which distinguished itself and is still doing so, in the local strike conducted by the Amalgamated Clothing Workers against two scab clothing concerns.

No doubt the $240.00 worth of "small gum paper labels" were intended to decorate the product of the International Tailoring Company and its subsidiary the J. L. Tailor Company, should the strike-breaking policy of the United Garment Workers turn out successfully. But thanks to the splendid fight waged by the members of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers and to the publicity campaign conducted by the DAILY WORKER, the efforts of the scab herders are bound to fail, and the "small gum paper labels" are liable to prove a dead loss.

DEATH KNELL OF SIGMANISM IN NEEDLE UNION

Members Pledge Money to Carry Fight Thru

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, July 23—To say that yesterday's gathering of chairmen of the cloak and dress shops was as expected would be a mistake. No, it apears that nobody expected such a successful and enthusiastic gathering.

Chairmen of the cloak and dress shops, just as the widest masses of the cloak and dressmakers, have lately indicated one thing, and that is whenever they are called they immediately respond. They come in time and at the indicated places. And what is more important, they do not come to hear nice speeches; the cloak and dressmakers want action. They have shown that they can carry out everything demanded of them. They are ready to throw all their strength into this struggle against the corrupt machine of the reactionaries.

Several thousand chairmen of cloak and dress shops filled up Cooper Union right after work. In a few minutes the big hall was overflowing and the police closed the doors, while great masses were still streaming from all sides. Representatives of the Joint Action Committee immediately secured Manhattan Lyceum, and that was quickly filled.

It was not for nothing that the chairmen came from all the shops. They did not come to sit quietly; they came with consciousness, to decide plans of action, to mobilize all their forces in order to end Sigmanism in the International.

The first one who spoke in Cooper Union was Abe Goldberg, the chairman of Local 9. After a few introductory words from him, the gathering heard a very interesting report from Boruchovich, manager of Local 2. This report showed clearly the watchfulness of the Joint Action Committee in defending the interests of the cloak and dressmakers against the terror of the Sigman machine, and from their friends the bosses. The report also showed how far the masses are supporting the Joint Action Committee in carrying out their decisions and ignoring the machine heroes, who have nearly excluded themselves from the union.

In the period of the last two weeks, the report said, the Joint Action Committee had held 200 shop meetings of the cloak department. Action was taken on 42 complaints and 10 discharge cases.

In the dress department, 75 shop meetings were held; 150 complaints were attended to, and 200 shops were visited.

Three shops are now on strike, because certain active members of the union were, on orders from the machine, discharged from their jobs. The shops are picketed, and mass demonstrations are carried thru every morning.

Mirror of Sigman's Gangsterism.

On the platform appeared a mirror of the gangsterism with which Sigman machine hopes to defeat the cloak and dressmakers. A member of Local 2, by name of Stubakewich, who is one of the active union members who were discharged from Freiderich's cloak shop, was attacked yesterday morning by a band of gangsters, and badly hurt. With his bandaged wounds on head and face, he appeared on the platform to tell a few facts of his own experience, which he had at the strong-arms of the machine agents.

His appearance made a deep impression on the gathering, and the faces of the masses lit up with anger.

Chairmen Call for Action.

After that a great number of chairmen spoke, among whom were Kanovich, Barnstein, Kessler, Arankratz, Radich, Feinberg, and others.

Their speeches were noteworthy. There was no doubt expressed in any of their words. Now is the time to make an end of the rule of the hooligan-machine in the union. We can and will carry it thru. This was the tone of all of their speches. Every one of them called for action. Each one made an additional proposition and proposed further plans to carry this thru—and when one yelled out that the best means is to make a stoppage in the shops, there was stormy and continued applause.

Ammunition Is Needed.

It is understood that among the different proposals the question of ammunition was also not forgotten. The Joint Action Committee needs large sums of money in the struggle against the gang. They cannot move without money. And one of the chairmen proposed to collect a voluntary tax of $5 per member. Another one proposed that this should be collected at the time the workers receive their wages. Both proposals were applauded.

SEVEN MINERS TRAPPED BY BLAST WHILE THEY ARE BATTLING BLAZE

(Special to The Daily Worker)

ROCKWOOD, Tenn., July 23.—Feverish efforts were being made by a party of volunteer workmen this afternoon to rescue seven miners who were entombed in the Roane Iron company coal mines here at 2 o'clock this morning by an explosion which resulted sortly after the men penetrated the mine to fight a fire.

Grave fear was expressed for the safety of the seven fire-fighters who were trapped by the explosion.

GARMENT BOSSES DEMAND PAM END ALL PICKETING

Amalgamated Defends Right to Strike

The high priced lawyers for the International Tailoring Co. pleaded and almost wept before judge Hugo Pam, Room 941, County Building, beseeching him to issue an injunction to restrain the striking members of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers employed by the company, from picketing.

The lawyers for the garment bosses demanded the injunction on the ground that the Cuthberson anti-injunction law was unconstitutional, and it was agreed to make a test case of the International's bill. J. J. Neiger, in his argument before the court, charged that any picketing, peaceful or otherwise, "is unconstitutional as it has a tendency to destroy a man's property rights and his constitutional guarantees."

At a late hour the bill was still being argued with Joseph Schlossberg, secretary of the Amalgamated, an interested spectator.

The bill for an injunction, which was read by the bosses' lawyer Zaburak, declared that the International Tailoring company is "absolutely unable to carry on its business. Large numbers of orders are being cancelled because the company is unable to fill them. The company is suffering heavy loss daily."

Judge Pam agreed that "all questions shall be brushed aside for the purpose of ruling on the constitutionality of the Cuthbertson law."

"The company has a number of guards around the premises," Zaburak admitted. He then made his charges of "violence" against the pickets, charging that "The employes are forced to quit after working one, two or three days because they are afraid of the pickets."

J. J. Neiger, another of the International's numerous array of lawyers, then read the Cuthbertson anti-injunction law which prohibits the issuance of an injunction against peaceful picketing. "This is an astounding array of constitutional invasions by the legislature," he said. "The defendants are using it as a cloak and a shield to commit their depredations."

"Murderous Riots."

When Neiger became rather violent in his denunciation of the strikers, William A. Cunnea, lawyer for the Amalgamated, called him to time. "I don't see why counsel has to use such language," said Cunnea. "When there is no jury present. We are arguing points of law."

Neiger had declared "now, after all their murderous riots, they want to stop this injunction."

When Neiger said, "There is no legal, lawful right of peaceful picketing in this state," Judge Pam said, "Two years ago I was appealed to to issue an injunction, and I made a ruling, permitting peaceful picketing. I permitted the strikers to circularize and even visit the homes of workers to persuade them, if they went in just numbers of one or two. THERE ARE SOME METHODS THE ORGANIZATION HAS THE RIGH TO EMPLOY."

"Maybe Yes; Maybe No:" Pam.

Judge Pam, however, said he might issue an injunction against "acts of violence." He does not seem anxious to take the drastic step of declaring the anti-injunction law unconstitutional, and thus outlaw peaceful picketing. He appears, however, willing to issue some sort of an injunction to the International Tailoring company.

Cunnea pointed out that his demurrer defends the constitutionality of the Cuthbertson law. The wild charges of "violence" placed against the pickets will not be argued until Judge Pam has ruled on the constitutionality of the law.

"We are perfectly willing to make a test case of this application," Cunnea said. "We will answer the charges of the company against the strikers after the constitutionality of the law has been ruled upon."

The bill for an injunction stated that the International Tailoring company "has been in business since 1898. They were doing a large and profitable business before this strike." The picketing, the bill stated, was carried on by "several hundred strikers at one time," and "all of the employes went out on strike. The employes have to edge and worm their way thru the pickets."

"On June 29, an agreement was entered into with another union, the United Garment Workers of America, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. The picketing has prevented us from carrying out the agreement with this union."

Joseph Schlossberg, general secretary of the Amalgamated, on his way from the east to St. Louis, where the Amalgamated is conducting a strike against the Curlee Clothing company, stopped off in Chicago and spoke at yesterday's strike meeting. The International Tailoring company, Schlossberg said, was trying to condemn the strikers to starvation. The employers, he said, prefer violence. The Amalgamated will carry on the strike to a finish, and the whole membership of the Amalgamated is behind the fight.

"It is a test for our organization," Schlossberg said, "and we accept the challenge and will meet the test."

The New York Strike.

Schlossberg told the DAILY WORKER that on Monday the Amalgamated won the strike against the Silverstein Clothing company in Rochester, N. Y. He said that a temporary injunction has been issued against the International Tailoring company employes in New York, and a hearing on a permanent injunction against picketing will be heard in the courts this week.

"With the industrial conditions as they are at present," Schlossberg told the DAILY WORKER, "with the widespread unemployment, the employers have that advantage, but I am confident in all our strikes we can handle the situation."

A picnic is being arranged for the strikers, at which entertainments, refreshments, and even carfare will be free to the strikers," it was announced. The exact details of the "blowout" will be given out at Monday's strike meeting.

JOHNSTON EXPELS ANDERSON IN WAR ON MILITANTS IN THE MACHINISTS' INTERNATIONAL

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 23.—It is learned that "B. & O." Bill Johnston, charged with having stolen the election as president of the International Association of Machinists from his opponent, J. F. Anderson, in the recent union election, has taken desperate action to try to stop the revolt of the rank and file against him and his class collaboration leadership, and has begun with the expulsion of his rival candidate, Anderson, from the union.

AMERICA PUTTING ITS PROPAGANDA MACHINE TO WORK ON BRITAIN

WASHINGTON, July 23.—The plans of Secretary Kellogg to get the powers into a conference on Chinese affairs have now advanced to a point where consideration is being given to the form of the joint note which will be sent to the Peking government, it was stated officially today.

Japan, France and Great Britain have expressed general approval of the American suggestion, while disagreeing in some respects as to details, the statement of Kellogg adds. These statements are under suspicion, however, as pressure on England, unfounded in fact. The same applies to Coolidge's sudden desire to end the opium traffic, and his plan to hold up objecting nations to public scorn.

Rum Chaser Engines Destroyed

BAY CITY, Mich., July 23.—Firemen were still playing streams of water on the ruins of the Defoe Boat and Motor Works shops today, following an all night fire which caused damage estimated at $500,000. Sixteen Deisel oil-burning engines which were to go into government rum chasers were destroyed.

EXPELLED I. L. G. W. OF NEW YORK TO SPEAK HERE SAT.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK CITY, July 23.—The Joint Committee of Action of the three big locals of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, representing sixty per cent of the New York workers in that trade and a growing number of left wing workers in the other locals of New York, are carrying their grievances against the autocratic expulsions of their whole executive boards to the entire membership of the I. L. G. W. U. thruout the country.

The New York City membership of the I. L. G. W. is refusing to recognize the expulsions, declaring that the Sigman gang controlling the Joint Board has sold them out to the bosses and the governor's commission which brot in an award giving them nothing but hokum.

The suspended locals and their 71 expelled executive board members are carrying the fight to other cities. Louis Hyman, Portnoy and Zimmerman are to speak at a great mass meeting of Chicago garment workers in Chicago at the Ashland Auditorium on Saturday afternoon.

Other meetings are being arranged for in Philadelphia, on July 28, and Boston, on July 30.

RIFFIANS TAKE 2 FRENCH POSTS WITH GARRISONS

PARIS, France, July 23.—The Riffians scored marked successes against the French invaders. The French fort at Osila was captured by the Moroccans. It is less than sixteen miles from Taza. The Riffians were supported by three tribes who were formerly held in line by the French.

The fortified post of Rihana has been admitted by the French war office, with the surrender of the entire garrison.

GARMENT BOSSES USE A. F. OF L. NAME TO GET ANTI-STRIKE WRIT

The International Tailoring company, in applying before Judge Pam's court yesterday afternoon for an injunction to restrain their striking employes from picketing, invoked the name of the American Federation of Labor to aid them in outlawing the strike of the members of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

"On the 29th of June," the bill stated, "The International Tailoring company made an agreement with another union, the United Garment Workers of America, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. The picketing prevented the company from carrying out its agreement with the United Garment Workers."

CHICAGO WORKERS SHOW SOLIDARITY TO RUSS, CHINESE

Hit Citizens' Military Training Camps

"A historical alliance is being consummated between the oppressed colonial peoples and the revolutionary workers all over the world! Soviet Russia and rebellious China no longer stand alone in their struggle against world imperialism," declared Manuel Gomez, chairman of the mass meeting held in the North West Hall to protest against the renewal of attacks on Soviet Russia and the suppression of the struggle for freedom against the Chinese.

The meeting, which was held under the joint auspices of the Workers Party and the Young Workers League, was a "Stand by Soviet Russia! Hands Off China" meeting, combined with a protest demonstration against the Citizens Military Training Camps, a campaign against which is being carried on by the Y. W. L.

H. V. Phillips, organizer for the American Negro Labor Congress, expressed the solidarity of the Negro workers with the victorious workers of Russia and the fighting people of China. "The next war is approaching swiftly, but this time the imperialists of America will not so easily get the Negro to sacrifice himself as cannon-fodder for capitalist profit. The attacks of General Bullard on the Negro ex-service men has awakened thousands of Negro workers and ex-soldiers."

"The Citizens Military Training Camps are just one more instrument in the hands of the American imperialists to build up a powerful military and naval machine for the advancement of capitalist interests," said Max Shachtman, editor of the Young Worker, speaking for the Young Workers League. After analyzing the purpose of the C. M. T. C., Comrade Shachtman pointed out who was back of the camps, and its relation to the menace of new world war. "This time the voice of revolutionary protest is being heard thruout the world, in the spirit of Liebknecht. They thought they had killed Liebknecht, but new ones are arising everywhere." The mention of Jacques Doriot and the fight of the Communist Party of France against war in Morocco brought cheers and great applause.

Chinese Speaks

The great number of Chinese workers and students who were present listened as attentively as the rest to an appealing speech by T. J. Jui, of Canton, and the Virginia Military Academy, who expressed his gratitude to the Workers Party for the support it was giving the struggle of his countrymen. "China is looking to Russia for aid, and it is being supported like by a rope across a deep ravine. The imperialists are trying to cut that rope with a knife and kill both of its enemies, and the workers of the world are tearing the knife away from the rope." Comrade Jui was greeted by a real demonstration.

Thurber Lewis traced the struggle of the Chinese workers against imperialism thru the last century and pointed out the world significance of the fight of colonial peoples against world imperialism, which indicated the death-knell of the bourgeoisie.

"This is only a beginning," said J. Louis Engdahl, editor of the DAILY WORKER, in the concluding speech of the evening. "This is a beginning which will end up when we have tens and hundreds of thousands to demonstrate on the streets, in the largest halls of the city, in every city of the country; when we have our Negro comrades, our Chinese and Mexican comrades, marching together with the white workers in determined opposition to the war mongers. We greet the day when the red flag flies on Canton, the harbinger of the red flag which will yet fly over the capitals of every nation in the world, the symbol of the World Union of Soviet Republics."

MUSIC - LITERATURE - DRAMA

By WILLIAM F. KRUSE.

"The New Theater and Cinema of Soviet Russia," by Huntley Parker, Phapson and Dodd, Publishers, (England.) $8.75.

A most interesting and sympathetic treatment, thru English liberal spectacles; well printed and profusely illustrated. American workers will value it more for its wealth of information than for the attempted tracing of origins and inspirations, as, for instance, the green and red garlands on Moscow's buildings during great mass demonstrations to a "truly medieval spirit." The division of the present day Russian theater into left—center—right, the first led by Meyerholt, the second by Lunacharski, the third by Stanislavsky, is helpful, and the search for understanding of what lay beneath the radical changes made by the ebullient workers is at all times very sympathetic.

Movies Speedily Improve.

The study of the centrists of the theater is an interesting sidelight upon the characteristics of the same element in politics—the settings and trappings of the new order are adopted and even developed or refined, but the plays themselves are all old—classics of the "better" plays of contemporary times.

Altho it is the latest thing of its kind, there are many places where its information is already hopelessly antiquated. This is particularly true of the section on the motion picture, and is an unconscious tribute to the speed with which the Russian cinema is overcoming its problems. For instance while the Leningrad picture houses are praised for their survival of pre-war splendor, the Moscow movie theaters are described as "dirty and lousy," resembling junk piles in lumber yards, where high prices prevail for inferior service.

This may have been partly true three years ago, but it is not so today, nor was it a year ago, or even two years ago. Moscow houses are not yet up to the standard of those of America, nor even to those of Berlin or Leningrad, but they are clean, comfortable, well-decorated, and have excellent musical programs between acts and altogether fine social atmosphere. To those mentioned by the writer should be added the beautiful Academy of Music where the better films, often of scientific or educational nature, find their premiere.

Should Win Understanding.

The deficiencies of this part of the book are due to the time that must have elapsed between the collecting of the information and its publication. Thus in writing of the government film trust, "Goskino," he speaks of the "new" head, Mr. Lieberman. Since Lieberman there have been many revolutions in Russian movies.

The time is fixed by the mention of taking pictures of the Social-Revolutionaries' Trial. One of the charges that led to the removal of Lieberman is said to have been his failure to push the exhibition of these newsreels of the trial in deference to the feelings of his Menshevik friends among the defendants.

An amusing slip is the use of the world-renown photograph of Karl Liebknecht doing military prison work—but here the figure at the wheelbarrow is credited to some big man in the Soviet movie world.

All in all this work is an interesting contribution to the ever expanding literature on Soviet Russia and should win sympathy and understanding in liberal circles.

SIGMAN FAILS TO STOP MEETING

RED ARMY OF SOVIET UNION IS READY TO REPULSE ALL ATTACKS AGAINST WORKERS' REPUBLICS

(By International Press Correspondence.)

MOSCOW, July 10.—(By Mail.)—The campaign of the English reaction against Soviet Russia, the preparations of the English government to establish a united anti-Soviet intervention front, form the chief points of interest in the political life of the Soviet Republics.

The newspapers point out that at present English intrigues are proceeding in all Europe for the purpose of drawing the dependent governments into the anti-Soviet action.

The Isvestia reports that the English government has made a proposal to the Latvian foreign minister that Latvia should take part in the anti-Soviet intervention. The English fleet according to this proposal will occupy the Baltic ports, whilst Latvian troops take part in the action against the Soviet Union.

The same proposal, it is said, has also been made to Poland and Esthonia. It is further reported from authentic sources that special representatives of the general staffs of England, France, Czecho-Slovakia, the Baltic States and Rumania will take part in the maneuver of the Polish army at the end of August near the Ukrainian frontier. At the same time a military agreement is to be concluded between Poland and Czecho-Slovakia against the Soviet Union and Germany.

Russians Discuss British Threats.

The imperialist threats of England occupy the lively attention of wide circles of the working class and peasantry of the Soviet Union. Today a mass meeting of the Red Army soldiers of the Moscow garrison addressed a declaration to M. V. Frunse, Peoples Commissar for the Army and Navy, in which, amongst other things, they said:

"We are strong and we are always prepared to fight. At any moment we are ready to take up our situation for battle and to smash back those who attempt to distrub the peaceful reconstruction of Soviet Russia."

Will Defend Revolution.

A declaration of the same meeting was sent to the Central Committee of the Communist Party of Russia which said that in case the firm peace policy of the Soviet power should be in vain and the Soviet Union be compelled to defend itself by force of arms, then the Red Army of the Soviet Union would be prepared to prove its readiness to fight for the achievements of the November, 1917, revolution.

AS WE SEE IT

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY

MUSSOLINI is in for more trouble as a result of the attempted assassination of Deputy Amendola, the leader of the Aventine opposition, so-called because they have refused to participate in the parliament which is controlled by Mussolini, but following an ancient custom retreated to the Aventine hill. The occasion for the new burst of violence on the part of Mussolini's assassins was the exoneration of General De Bono, of the death of Matteotti. The Aventine opposition published documentary proof that Mussolini was a criminal participant in Matteotti's murder and that the exoneration of one of his tools was an obvious whitewash.

THE fascisti gunmen immediately got busy, and Deputy Amendola, was left for dead, after being pummeled for several minutes by fifteen fascists. That he got away with his life is due to his powerful physique and to the feeling on the part of his assailants that he was dead. This is liable to be the straw that will break the fascist camel's back. But Mussolini will not go down without a bitter struggle. The rope awaits him and he might as well sell his life as dearly as possible.

COMMENTING on Mussolini's regime, the Chicago Tribune, declared that the days of dictatorships are over and that Mussolini was very much of a washout ever since he accomplished the only good deed of his career, and that was, the overthrow of the reds. The Tribune says that Lenin and Mussolini, once they seized power, spent the rest of their time trying to maintain it. This is sheer nonsense, but it may go down with some of the Tribune readers. It is true that Mussolini has been attempting to pose as a Lenin, but in this he is about as successful as a moron

BETRAYED SHOE WORKERS CALLED BY T. U. E. L. TO UNITE AGAINST WAGE CUTS AND LONGER HOURS

By TOM BELL

(Special to The Daily Worker)

BOSTON, Mass., July 24.—The wage cutting campaign of the shoe manufacturers continues uninterrupted in this district. The union leaders are not supplying a program to the workers for fighting the wage slashing. On the contrary the officialdom of the Boot and Shoe Workers' Union are refusing to fight the bosses on this issue.

In Haverhill, where the Shoe Workers' Protective Union holds sway, an "impartial arbitrator" whose salary of $10,000 a year and expenses is paid half by the union and half by the bosses, has been deciding for some time if the wages of the work-

China Appeals to Green of A. F. of L. for Help

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 24.—William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, has received a cabled appeal from the Canton South China Republic, appealing thru the American labor movement for aid in the struggle of the Chinese people for national liberation from foreign imperialist oppression.

"We demand the keys to our own house!" the cablegram begins in its appeal—"not for revision, but abolition—of the treaties of violence thrust down the throat of China by the imperialist powers. The abolition of unequal treaties will at once cut the vicious roots which have been nourishing all our evils. Peoples of the world, we appeal to you for justice!"

Addressing the head of the A. F. of L. whose approval of the Coolidge proposal for a conference of the nine powers to "consider the possibility" of mere revision of the unequal treaties, has aided the scheme of American imperialists to check the rising tide of national revolution with promises of future favors the Canton government, controlled by the Kuomintang party, takes issue with the hypocritic demand of Coolidge that "China must put her house in order" before the treaties can be even revised.

"We are certain," says the cable to Green, "that so long as the unequal treaties exist, China will not be able to put her house in order.

"Therefore we demand that our international status be changed on the basis of equality with other nations. Our people demand nothing but what they are ready to accede to other nations—equality in international relations, independence in the exercise of their sovereign rights."

'B. & O. BILL' PLANS POGROM OF EXPULSION

Intends to Oust All Radicals from Union

Having stolen the election from his opponent, J. F. Anderson, "B. and O. Bill," the ex-Salvation army drummer, who claims to be president of the International Association of Machinists, issued a ukase which calls for the expulsion of all members of the Workers Party and Trade Union Educational League from the organization.

Johnson has already expelled Andesson and it is reported that "Salvation Sal" intends to expel every prominent supporter of Anderson before he gets thru. But it is not believed that he will have an easy job.

The Fake Executive.

The executive council, by grace of fake ballots, having met in Washington, decided to warn all locals that they must expel all Communists under pain of losing their charters. The council also decided, we learn from the capitalist press, that a complete reorganization of the field staff would take place and that several organizers and local business agents would be dropped. This means that all organizers and business agents who supported Anderson will be taken off the payroll.

Endorse Company Unionism.

Among other decisions reached by be Johnson crowd was the endorsement of the B. and O. class collaboration plan and a decision to spread it to other railroads.

Johnson and Davison have a lot of union funds at their disposal and they have no intention of relinquishing their graft to a rank and file majority. But it is reported that the rank and file have not yet said the last word. "Salvation Sal" may soon learn the lesson that is now being taught to Sigman.

CHICAGO WORKERS WILL RAISE PROTEST AGAINST WHITE TERROR IN POLAND

Today, when the Chicago city council officially welcomes Count Alxeander Krzynski, who is representing the Polish government, the workers of Chicago will raise their voice of protest against the imprisonment, torture, flogging and murder of thousands of workers and peasants in Poland by the government of the bourgeoisie.

It will be an open air demonstration under the auspices of the Chicago city central committee of the Workers (Communist) Party in front of Smulski's Northwestern Bank, at Division St. and Milwaukee avenue.

It was on this corner that Comrades Biedenkapp and Marek were arrested last Saturday night, and kept in jail until Sunday morning.

All other street meetings have been called off to allow speakers and party members to concentrate on this important protest meeting.

BRITISH MINE OWNERS FORCE GREAT STRIKE

Million Miners Fight Wage Cut Attack

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LONDON, July 24.—British capitalism grows more apprehensive hourly, in spite of the hope extended by the call of W. C. Brigeman, First Lord of the Admiralty, to get both the coal operators and the coal miners together to avert a walkout of 1,200,000 British miners already ordered to begin at midnight one week from today.

After the order to the miners of all districts to cease work on July 31, the executives of the Miners' Federation announced that they had placed their case in the hands of the General Council of the Trade Union Congress. The council has asked for an interview with Premier Baldwin.

The order to call all miners from the pits of Great Britain was issued after the coal operators, persisting in their tearing up of the contract, and persisting as well in their demand for a wage cut and for longer hours, had posted at the pit heads in South Wales and elsewhere, defiant notice that on August 1, they would reduce wages and lengthen the hours.

How the mine strike may involve the whole of British industry by the joining in of the new great alliance and the support of the Trade Union Congress, may be seen in the expression of the London Times editorial today, saying that the strike would be a "disaster of immeasurable magnitude."

Workers' Family Wiped Out.

SUPERIOR, Wis., July 24—E. T. Wettmaack, section hand, and his four children, were burned to death early today when fire destroyed a Soo Line section house at Harlin. Mrs. Mettmark was badly burned and was taken to a hospital. She may not recover. The fire was caused by the explosion of a kerosene lamp.

JOINT BOARD OF NEW YORK A. C. W. BEGINS POGROM

Hires Sluggers to Beat Up Members

NEW YORK, July 24.—In Arion all in Brooklyn a meeting was called of Amalgamated Clothing Workers, Local 2 membership to discuss important union questions. The main item was the strike in the International Tailoring company, the negotiations of the union with the manufacturers on the agreement, some plans of the New York joint board of the Amalgamated, and other matters.

The tailors came. But at the entrance they were met by a guard of sluggers and police, who were present to prevent the entrance of anybody not kosher. To the same meeting later on came some members of Local 5 who thought they would be permtited at the meeting to hear the action of Local 2. It is generally permitted for members of one local to attend meetings of other locals without the right of vote. But since most of the members of Local 2 were not permitted inside, the few members of Local 5 were certainly not admitted.

Police and Gangsters Attack A. C. W. Members.

The members of Local 5 kept quiet, but the tailors of Local 2 protested. Their argument was that they are members of the local, and that the questions to be decided affect them also.

And so the gangsters got to work. One tailor, whose name could not be learned, was murderously beaten up. Others also received goodly portions. And as if that was not enough, the police finished the job. They did not arrest the gangsters. Instead, a group of those who were not admitted were beaten up and arrested.

Police arrested Sam Lipzin, Nelson, Julius Lifshitz, R. Gabel, Isen, Gross, Schwartz, and Levin. They were all held at the police station, where the time of trial was set for Thursday morning.

Joint Board of Amalgamated Exposes Itself.

This act presents itself as a good example to show what the joint board machine of the Amalgamated in New York is capable of. The leaders of the joint board argued for a long time that the board has no money. Lately the board has also decided to put a tax upon the membership of two and a half dollars.

But they still find money in the union treasury to pay for strong arms to attack their own membership. And still more, they permit themselves to carry thru such a job even at a time when the union is on strike against some firms, and when the power of the tailors has to be united in order to defend the strikers in the struggle against the injunction bosses.

Cold Wave Hits Madrid.

MADRID, July 24.—Madrid shivered today in an unseasonal cold wave, accompanied by snowfall. Open air shows closed up and winter furs were worn on the streets.

Paying the Price.

SCRANTON, Pa., July 24.—Today's coal mining casualties include Walter Namulski, with a broken back from fall of roof and Joseph Rokue, with severe abdominal injuries from the same cause.

LEADERS OF LOCALS 2, 9, 22, NEW YORK COUNCIL OF ACTION TO ADDRESS GARMENT LABOR TODAY

Afraid to allow the rank and file to hear the story of the betrayal of the New York Ladies' Garment Workers by the Sigman-Peristein machine, their local lieutenants of Chicago, in cahoots with the management of the carmen's union hall, the Ashland Auditorium, were able to cancel the agreement for the rental of the hall, despite the fact that a deposit had been paid and a receipt received for same.

However, the meeting will be held in the Workers' Lyceum, 2733 Hirsch Boulevard. Hyman, Portnoy and Zimmerman, leaders of the Joint Action Committee of the New York garment workers, will tell the story of how the Sigman-Peristein-Feinberg gang have hired east side sluggers and gunmen in a last desperate attempt to retain their strangle hold upon the organization.

Seventy-seven regularly elected officials of the three largest locals of New York have been arbitrarily removed and a reign of terror is now being conducted to try and force the rank and file to accept a gangster leadership. This is being resented vigorously and successfully.

The "crime" that the seventy-seven officials have committed was to point out to the rank and file that the agreemnet reached between the Sigman-Peristein-Feinberg combine, the millionaire socialist lawyer Hillquit, and the governor's commission was a bosses' agreement and against the interests of the dressmakers, urging them to refuse to accept it, at the same time putting forward a number of demands that would alleviate the conditions of the workers and strengthen the organization.

Of course, Sigman says they were removed from office because they allowed a Communist to speak from their platform on May Day. This flimsy and ridiculous excuse deceives no one, but brings out clearly the desperate straits that the Sigman machine finds itself in.

They Know Peristein.

The Chicago Ladies' Garment Workers know Peristein and his long record of disruption in Chicago. This needs no rehearsing. Most of the members know Sigman and Feinberg almost as well, but if they don't, Zimmerman, Hyman and Portnoy will enlighten them at the meeting Saturday. These three represent the future type of American trade union leadership that is gradually pushing itself forward in the mining, metal, clothing, building industries, etc.

The Chicago garment workers should turn out en masse to this meeting, join the more than thirty thousand members of New York in protest against the disruptive and demoralizing activities of the Sigman-Peristein-Feinberg machine. The Chicago members of the I. L. G. W. U. must demand:

The reinstatement of the seventy-seven illegally deposed officials of Locals 2, 9, and 22 of New York City.

The immediate resignation of Sigman, Peristein and Feinberg.

In order to get to Workers' Lyceum, take any car to California Ave., North and Hirsch Blvd.

CARRY FIGHT ON SIGMAN TO CHICAGO

New York I. L. G. W. Talk General Strike

NEW YORK CITY, July 24.—Chicago members of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union will be urged to join in the demand for the resignation of President Morris Sigman, when members of the Joint Committee of Action of Locals 2, 9 and 22, of New York address a mass meeting in the Workers' Lyceum, 2733 Hirsch Boulevard, on Saturday afternoon.

Louis Hyman, chairman of the Joint Committee of Action, and C. S. Zimmerman, its secretary, will tell of the suspension, trial and expulsion of the Executive Committees of Locals 2, 9 and 22; the raids on Locals 2 and 9; the beating up of pickets by representatives of the Joint Board, and the way in which workers are being discharged because of their sympathy with the suspended locals.

Sigman Machine Must Go.

"We are coming to Chicago," says Mr. Hyman, before leaving today for Cleveland, "to let our members know the true causes of this fight, and just what has happened since we were suspended on June 11. When they learn the truth, I am certain they will all join with us in our fight against our corrupt officials and their powerful political machine, and will back us in the demand that not only President Sigman, but Vice-Presidents Peristein and Feinberg and all their henchmen must go.

"We shall ask the workers to help with the defense fund that will enable us to continue this fight to a finish; and we shall call on them to denounce not only the action of the New York Joint Board, but the policy

KOHN BOASTS OF 'CO-OPERATION' WITH THE BOSS

Bars Daily Worker Reporter from Meet

The annual convention of the Upholsterers' International Union drew to a close with the main accomplishment being the consuming of food at a banquet in the Cameo room of the Morrison Hotel, at $2.50 per plate for rank and filers, and a moonlight excursion on Lake Michigan.

The main subject up for consideration was raising of the salary of President William Kohn, from $5,000 to $10,000 per year. All resolutions presented which demanded organization of the unorganized were referred to the usual "committee." These resolutions explained that organization was badly needed in Chicago, which boasts less than one hundred members, and in the south, according to the delegates.

Kohn Talks for Himself.

Kohn replied to the rank and filers that he had the power to do this organizing and would do it if he saw fit.

The DAILY WORKER reporter was requested by Kohn to "Get to hell out of here before you're thrown out," when he appeared at the convention. Kohn evidently is afraid that a real worker will slip into the convention and expose the workings of his well-oiled machine.

At the banquet Kohn delivered a flowery address, in which he shed tears over the demise of Samuel Gompers, but told the 150 persons present to be of good cheer, "William Green is just as good."

Wills Is Also at Banquet.

The one thing that Kohn deplored was the tendency of some of the upholsterers to demand better working conditions. He urged them to "cooperate," evidently meaning with the bosses, and boasted that he had prevented several strikes. These strikes were stopped by the simple expedient of accepting the terms of the bosses.

"Pinkhaired" Charlie Wills was another speaker at this banquet, and he took occasion to rant about the wonderful officials in the Upholsterers' Union.

Kohn said he heard William Green make a speech some years ago in which he said that those who do not co-operate with the officials of the union would be thrown out, and that is the way he wanted to run the Upholsterers' Union.

A rank and filer walked into the convention who had just been fired for helping to organize a union. He was an employe of Glabman Brothers, Inc., rug, furniture and linoleum dealers. This worker had helped organize twelve out of the fifteen employes into the Upholsterers' Union. The next day he was fired.

Get No Organization Aid.

"What did they tell you at the convention," he was asked by the DAILY WORKER. "Did you make a speech on how you organized the union?"

"No, the only thing they did was to ask me to buy a ticket for their banquet, at $2.50. The delegates get in free."

When asked what help Kohn or the international officials give in organizing the trade, the worker answered, "Nothing whatever."

Strike Till Scabs Are Fired.

BOSTON, July 24.—Strike of all the building crafts tied up the new Watertown high school job for an hour till the contractor took off non-union electricians. Threat of similar action forced the removal of non-union electricians from the new Coolidge school at Watertown and the Lake street school at Arlington, both suburbs of Boston.

BETRAYED SHOE WORKERS CALLED BY T. U. E. L. TO UNITE AGAINST WAGE CUTS AND LONGER HOURS

ers should be cut.

In Lynn the workers have been corralled into the Boot and Shoe and demands for cuts have been submitted to the state board of arbitration by the bosses. In some factories a "graded price list" has been introduced. This means that those workers making the cheaper grades of shoes are paid less than those employed on the high-priced shoes.

The Old Bunk of Steady Work.

The bosses are appealing to the workers to help them run their factories steadily by accepting wage cuts. Unemployment aids the bosses in putting this bunk over, and the union leaders are doing nothing to offset it.

In this situation the National Committee for Amalgamation in the Shoe and Leather Industry has issued a leaflet calling on the shoe workers to fight militantly against wage cuts. This campaign, initiated by the Trade Union Educational League National Committee, has the endosement of the militants in the various shoe centers.

Following up the distribution of thousands of these leaflets it is planned to hold mass meetings in the shoe centers, and rally the shoe workers for the fight against wage cuts, the organization of shop committees to lead the struggles, and the amalgamation of the many shoe unions.

The leaflet is as follows:

SHOE WORKERS, FIGHT WAGE CUTS!

Only By Militant Strikes Can You Maintain Your Standard of Living.

To all Boot and Shoe Workers:—The bosses are getting ready to cut wages. In Brockton, Mass., one of the largest boot and shoe centers in New England, the employers are posting notices and distributing leaflets asking the workers to accept a reduction in wages. The reason given is that the wages of the boot and shoe workers are too high.

In Lynn the manufacturers have succeeded in forcing the workers into the Boot & Shoe as the first step toward wage cuts.

Already the bosses have gone to the State Board of Arbitration seeking wage cuts. A graded price list has been introduced in the Lynn factories by agreement between the bosses and the Boot & Shoe officialdom. The bosses promise the workers "steady work" if they accept wage cuts. This lie is being used merely to reduce the standard of living of the Lynn shoe workers.

In Chelsea the bosses are setting the prices and fire workers who refuse to accept them. The Boot & Shoe officialdom does nothing to help the workers fight these wage cuts and does not even talk of taking the matter to the bosses' State Board of Arbitration. The Chelsea shoe workers today are unorganized and at the mercy of the bosses.

In Boston where the Boot & Shoe dominates the situation, the bosses are using the existing unemployment to slash wages. The workers are told that when the factories open up $25 a week will be the standard wage. Prices are set by the bosses and the workers are told to accept them or quit the factory.

In Haverhill the bosses are demanding wage cuts. The so-called "neutral arbitrator" is on the job and wage cuts will be put into effect unless the workers struggle militantly against them. To rely upon negotiations with the bosses only is to invite wage cuts.

All over the New England shoe industry the bosses are crushing down the workers' standard of living. They are determined to squeeze more profits out of the hides of the workers by wage cuts.

Too Low Wages—Too Much Speed-up.

The bosses say that to consent to a wage cut is a guarantee of steady work. This is a lie. The real trouble is that the boot and shoe workers, like all workers under capitalism, get too low wages. In addition to low wages, the workers have been speeded up until the average time taken to make a pair of shoes is only 54 minutes. In 1916 it took one hour and 42 minutes of one man's time to make a pair of shoes. The bosses get the difference in the labor cost. The bigger profits in the shoe industry that come from the speeding up in the boot and shoe making go into the pockets of the bosses.

For the workers, the bosses offer wage cuts, altho we are working almost twice as fast as we were in 1916.

One pair of shoes, 1916—102 minutes.

One pair of shoes, 1925—54 minutes.

The bosses feel that they are able to make us take wage cuts because we are not organized as well as they are. They have powerful and rich companies and combinations. They control, along with their class, the government, and all means of swaying the public mind. They are strong and militant.

Too Many Unions—Not Enough Unionism.

On the other hand, our unions are weak and demoralized. There are too many unions in the same industry, and only a small fraction of the workers are organized. We must amalgamate these unions and we must put on big organization campaigns that will sweep the workers into these unions. These things we must accomplish if we are to maintain and advance our wages and to better our working conditions.

There are 1,542 boot and shoe factories in the United States, but 14 per cent of these factories can produce 65 per cent of all the boots and shoes needed. This shows how the bosses have centralized their power. It also explains why thousands of shoe workers, willing to work, have to walk the streets unemployed while their families hunger in misery.

Amalgamate or Perish.

If we do not organize the unorganized, amalgamate our unions into one great industrial union, and fight all wage cuts, the bosses will make us work for anything they see fit to give. They will close half their factories and with cheap labor working at breakneck speed, the rest will make enough boots and shoes for the nation. The less wages we get the more money we make for the boss. The faster we work the larger the bosses' profit.

Resist Wage Cuts!

We must resist the threatened wage cuts. Wherever the bosses attempt to put them into effect, we must reply with strikes. Organize shop committees to unite the scattered unions and the masses. The longer we fail to make a fight for our wages and working conditions the less we will have left to fight for. The longer we allow our ranks to be divided, our unions to be weakened by differences of opinion and by ambitions of the officials, the sooner will the iron hand of the boss and the boss' government clamp around our necks.

Fight all wage cuts!

Instead of wage cuts— higher wages!

Instead of a lot of little unions—one great industrial union!

Instead of longer hours—shorter hours!

Instead of dissension and division—amalgamation!

Instead of isolated action—a united front of all boot and shoe workers!

No wage cuts for the Boot and Shoe Industry!

International Amalgamation Committee for the Shoe and Leather Industry of the Trade Union Educational League.

U. S. LAWYERS IN EFFORT TO STOP RELIGIOUS FIGHT

"Evolution Case" in the Capital Not Popular

WASHINGTON, July 24.—The full force of the legal department of the federal government will be exerted to avoid a clash between religion and science in the national capitol's "evolution case" scheduled to be heard in the district of Columbia supreme court next Tuesday, it was learned.

With this end in view, the defense will seek to have dismissed on legal technicalities the suit brot by Loren H. Wittner seeking to stop salaries of teachers inculcating "disrespect to the holy bible."

Call It Mere Taxpayers' Suit.

The government has been brot into the case by the naming of Frank White, treasurer of the United States, as a defendant. A representative of the department of justice, under the direction of Assistant Attorney General Letts, will be on the defense staff.

In addition to numerous alleged minor flaws in the petition itself, the defense is planning to concentrate on having the case thrown out on the grounds it is a taxpayers' suit and involves no material personal interest on the part of Wittner. The defense will contend that the supreme court has decided that a taxpayer, without a personal interest, cannot enjoin public funds.

On the part of government attorneys there is admittedly a strong desire to prevent if possible a recurrence here of anything like the Scopes trial in Tennessee.

Would Stifle Religious Clash.

Wittner's petition opens the way for a possible far-flung battle between religious and scientific beliefs, and the defense wants to stifle that clash before it can gain headway in the federal courts.

Therefore, the government will handle the case purely from the standpoint of law and the right of the treasury to pay salaries to teachers, in conformity with the decrees of congress. The question of whether natural science is right or wrong, or is disrespectful to the bible, will not be forced in the government's pleas.

If the petition is thrown out on technicalities, as the defense predicts it surely will be, Wittner will face difficult barriers in getting a decision from higher courts on the conflicts between religion and science, it was pointed out. His appeal would have to be on his right as a taxpayer to enjoin public money, thus freeing higher courts from passing on religious-scientific theories, or even deciding what constitutes disrespect to the bible.

Transfer Fight to Congress.

Whatever may be the outcome of court action, it appeared certain that the conflict between science and religion would be transferred to the legislative battlements of congress this fall.

Notice already has been served that an anti-evolution bill, similar to the Tennessee law, would be presented. It is now being drafted by Walter White, superintendent of schools of Rhea county, Tennessee, and a prosecutor of John T. Scopes.

An effort also will be made to place congress again on record as favoring the present provision which forbids teaching of disrespect to the bible in Washington schools. It even may be sought to make the provision stronger and more far reaching.

Watch and Clock Makers' Union in Organization Drive

An organization campaign has been launched by the Chicago Watch and Clockmakers' Union thru which it is hoped to bring large numbers of new members into the organization. All watch and clock makers not organized are asked to drop in at the union's headquarters, Room 44, 68 W. Washington St., and get into the organization.

Conditions are exceedingly bad in the unorganized sections of the industry. Reports from Freeport, Ill., center of the watch making industry, tell of workers compelled to labor for a mere pittance of $20 and $25 weekly, upon which they are expected to bring up their families and send their children to school. Overtime without pay is also imposed upon these workers.

Some of the reasons for joining the union are pointed out as follows:

We inaugurated the 44-hour week.

All good watchmakers belong to the union.

All good shops are union shops.

We provide our members with good positions.

We have a minimum wage scale of $45, $50 and $55.

We have a death benefit of $200 for every member in good standing.

Local Union meetings are held every first and third Thursdays of the month at 180 W. Washington St., 4th floor, at 6 p. m.

"Hands Across the Sea!" Must Be Labor's Slogan Until This War Is Won

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

TODAY, American workers, in all industries, may well profit by the courageous militancy of British labor ready it seems, to launch a general strike that will cripple all activity of the capitalist order on the islands.

Labor in Great Britain is face to face with wholesale wage cuts, similar to the crisis confronting the working class in this country.

On two successive days there came the news first of the threatened strike of the quarter million textile workers in the Rochdale (Yorkshire) mills, and second, the strike call of the million coal miners to go into effect July 31. No hesitancy here. Just action. The action of workers determined to fight and win.

• • • •

The terrible plight of the coal miners, linked with that of other workers, and the determination to fight it to the finish, has given birth to the Quadruple Alliance, that has great promise of success, where the Triple Alliance of 1919 failed.

With the slogan that the time has come for the British workers to "strike together," the Quadruple Alliance is cementing the forces of the coal miners, the railwaymen, the transport workers and the machinists. How the class collaborating American officials of labor must gasp when it is announced that these British unions have pledged their mutual solidarity "notwithstanding anything in their agreements and constitutions to the contrary, TO ACT AS DIRECTED BY THE GENERAL COUNCIL OF THE ALLIANCE".

It is significant that the only objection came from J. H. Thomas of the railwaymen, one of the chiefs in the "socialist" cabinet of the labor premier, J. Ramsay MacDonald. His was the only discordant note. His motion of opposition did not even receive a second.

• • • •

The British workers can be depended on to take care of this weak link in their united front. There were too many such weak links to make the Triple Alliance, in 1919, a success. These past experiences will help mend any breaches in the Quadruple Alliance before it goes actively into battle.

The workers have also been taught that they cannot depend on the parliamentarism of the MacDonald "socialist" type, that only helped fasten the chains a little tighter about labor's limbs. In fact, it was the MacDonald ministry that paved the way for the conscription of British railway labor during strikes.

Thus the British workers are without illusions as to the real nature of the war between themselves and their exploiters. They know it is a class war that brings the social revolution in its wake. The miners know they are lost without the support of the workers in other industries. And they know that there is nothing that will help them so much as a simultaneous strike by the coal miners of France, Belgium, Germany and the United States.

British imperialism also knows the meaning of the growing crisis. The Baldwin ministry is fully conscious of what it is about in trying to form a Baltic bloc against the Union of Soviet Republics. It is only one front on which it seeks to bulwark its tottering rule. Other weak spots are in Egypt, in India, and especially in China. British tory rule is also tremendously anxious to bring Germany into the League of Nations and cut, if it can, any sympathetic relations that may exist between Berlin and Moscow, and they are not a few.

All these complications give world importance to the rapidly developing clash between labor and capital in Great Britain.

• • • •

The left wing in the American labor movement must begin the fight now that will halt even a single ounce of American scab coal going to Great Britain. This is not only the affair of the coal miners, both in the union and non-union fields, but also of the railwaymen, longshoremen and seamen who will be called on to transport the coal intended for strike-breaking purposes in Great Britain.

Labor's left wing must also fight to have a large part of the copious funds of the rich unions diverted in support of the British unions, some of which face the battle with depleted treasuries.

"Hands Across the Sea!" should be the slogan of all American labor in this fight.

"INVESTIGATION" OF MURDER OF TWO POLISH REDS IN CHARGE OF WHITE TERROR JUDGE, TORTURE CONTINUES

WARSAW, Poland, July 24.—According to information received, the investigations in connection with the murder of Comrades Baginsky and Vetcherkovitch by the secret police agent Murashko, have now been concluded. Rudmitsky has been appointed as prosecutor in this case, being especially appointed by the ministry of justice. The lawyers Nedzelsky and Shuley will be the counsel for the defense.

The wives of the murdered comrades have presented a civil claim for 10,000 gold marks. The lawyer Duratch will speak on behalf of the wives of Baginsky and Vetchorkevitch, who recently arrived in Moscow. The case will be heard in August in the town of Novogrudke.

The relations of political prisoners have approached the minister of justice with a complaint against the ill-treatment of prisoners confined in Lodz prison who commemorated the anniversary of the shooting of the young Communist, Comrade Engel, and have demanded the appointment of a special commission of investigation.

The prisoners were beaten to such an extent that they had to be sent to the hospital on special motor ambulances. During the interviews those arrested refused to mention the names of those who had been beaten, to avoid this savage treatment being repeated.

REUTER NEWS SERVICE LIES ABOUT CHINA

Capitalist Press Not to Be Believed

By ART SHIELDS

(Federated Press Staff Correspondent.)

NEW YORK, July 24.—(FP)—A fighting piece of labor journalism is the Shanghai Crisis which has crossed the water with its first two issues. The Shanghai Crisis is published in Chinese and English editions by the students of Tsing Hua College at Peking in the interests of the strike and the contents of the paper show that these lads are real up and at 'em scrappers.

The June 10 and June 14 issues to hand tell the story of the early days of the great struggle and the story of the atrocities of the British troops is illustrated by a loose leaf picture of the corpses of five of the martyrs calculated to stir the blood of readers to more intense resistence.

Shot Without Warning

Shooting down of the strikers was a cold blooded massacre without any warning the Chinese could understand, the paper shows. Inspector Everson of the police is quoted as testifying before the British Assessor that he sounded his orders to disperse and his commands to fire, in English—a form of speech the Chinese crowd could not understand.

Meaning is given to the attack on "truth-twisting" newspapers in a warm editorial in the June 10 issue headed Reuter vs. Truth. Of this huge press association which is to Europe and the Far East what the Associated Press is to America the Shanghai Crisis says:

Capitalist New Service at Work

"The most terrible instrument of perverting truth is the Reuter News Agency, an integral part of British imperialism and an indespensible aid of the British foreign office. It reports in full one-sided versions of Police Inspector Everson, an English officer, who was most directly responsible for the killing of May 30th, without saying a word about the manifestos of the Chinese, not even the officially recorded testimony of the students at the inquest."

"It practically controls the transmission of news from China to most parts of the world. Therefore, the reading public abroad, particularly Englishmen in England, will have no opportunity to learn the truth of the Shanghai massacre. And the perversion of truth will seem truth to them because it is Reuter's perversion."

Plate Printers' Union Happy Over Printing Money They Don't Get

WASHINGTON, July 24.—(FP)—The International Plate Printers and Die Stampers Union of North America is holding its thirty-third annual convention at the Shoreham hotel here. Forty delegates from the United States and Canada are attending. The meeting was called to order by Walter A. Burke of Boston, international president.

Lots of Nice Paper Money on Tap

Thomas J. McQuade, chairman of the executive committee of the Washington plate Printers Union informed the convention that the bureau of printing and engraving that employes the largest number of plate printers of any establishment in the country, is entering upon "halycon days" with more work assured than ever before in its history. There is no prospect for a let-down, he said for at least a year.

Under the present regime, he said a reserve stock of 40 million sheets of paper used in printing currency has been accumulated that will be allowed to age properly before it is used so as to avoid putting "uncured" currency into circulation. Mr. McQuade declared this was an economy because it will make paper currency last longer in circulation.

James E. Goodyear of Philadelphia, secretary of the international union reported the treasury in excellent shape, and president Burke declared that the organization was in a generally prosperous state.

HIGHEST AIM IS TO FIGHT COMMUNISM

Springfield, Mass., Like Dayton, Tenn.

By WM. SIMONS.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., July 24.—Springfield, Mass., is quite a reactionary town. They have balked the running of movies showing conditions in Soviet Russia. At the Lenin Memorial meeting in 1924 the hall was filled with cops, after the mayor had threatened to prohibit the meeting.

Capitalist Press Principles.

The Springfield union has achieved fame since then by placing its creed at the top of the editorial page. It calls it "a patriotic creed." "To these purposes of the sentinels of the republic the Springfield union subscribes:

"To maintain the fundamental principles of the American constitution.

"To oppose further federal encroachment upon the reserved rights of the states and of the individual citizen.

"To stop the spread of Communism.

"To prevent the concentration of power in Washington thru the multiplication of administrative bureaus under a perverted interpretation of the general welfare clause.

"To help preserve a free republican form of government in the United States."

We're on Top.

These five points form a pyramid, with one and five as a base, two and four balancing on the next step, and point three is at the peak. To prevent the spread of Communism becomes their highest aim, and so it is. They attempt to sandwich the point in between the others, but they cannot conceal that this is their primary object.

Recently the writer spoke at the post office in Springfield on the subject, "Hands off China," and the only comment they made the next day was that instead of talking entirely on China, the speaker referred to conditions in this country and paid his respects to the local press. A crime to talk about conditions in America.

The challenge of the union has been met with the institution of open air meetings, and an intensification of party activity in Springfield.

BUILDERS AT WORK

DAILY WORKER SELLS QUICKLY.

(By L. P. RINDAL, Builder-Worker Correspondent)

Los Angeles, Calif., July 19, 1925.

Today, Sunday, the writer sold 50 copies of the DAILY WORKER (sent from Chicago). Only a few hours work. The paper went like hot cakes. Organization, and willingness to work, is all that is necessary to get thousands of DAILY WORKER readers in this city.

Communism the Thing.

A restaurant owner, George E . . . . , who has just renewed his Sub. for one year said: "We used to be S. L. P. comrades and webbiles, didn't we?—But now Communism is the thing.—That's better yet. That's evolution," he added.

It may be that fear of this kind of evolution is the strangest incentive back to the monkey trial in Tennessee. But, anyhow, there is no monkey-business connected with George's red tendencies. He makes his dining-room a center for "dangerous" propaganda.

Man Broke But DAILY WORKER Sold.

The next place visited was a pool hall. "I am broke," said a slave, "No work".—"Then you have time to read", was the answer. "Take the paper!"—"Thanks".—Another man in the same place did not like to see anyone get something for nothing. He said so too. And, seemingly, for this reason alone bought a copy for himself.

How New Readers Are Made.

The cost of these two copies was 4 cts. Received 5 cts. Profit (have heard of that word before) 1 cent.—Nothing out. In this way (because the first man was not turned down) two men became acquainted with our daily. And a reader today may be a communist tomorrow, or the next day. This is only one example out of many of a similar character experienced yesterday and before.

Mexican Sister Organ Popular.

But the greatest surprise of the day, however, was to see how quickly the Mexican sister organ could be sold. The supply of 60 copies did not last as long as a snow-ball in h-ll. The Mexicans seem to be hngry for the message it brings to the masses—in their own tongue.

A Challenge.

Members of the English Branch, L. A. (especially comrades Spector, Eisenberg and Airoff) are hereby chanllenged to a paper-selling contest. So rush another order, Comrade Loeb!

PRIZE RUSSIAN ART EXHIBIT AND VETCHERINKA IN CHICAGO AUG. 22-23 FOR INTERNATIONAL WORKERS' AID

An exhibition of Russian "koustarni" work, which won first prize at the Panama-Pacific World's Fair, and which has graced the art galleries of many of our principal cities, will be made available for the first time to Chicago's workers at a two-day exhibition and "vetcherinka" to be given at Workers' Lyceum, 2733 Hirsch Blvd., on August 22 and 23, for the benefit of the International Workers' Aid

Beautiful Art Collection.

The exhibition includes thousands of dollars worth of rare old laces, bedspreads, table covers, tapestries, jewelry, as well as authentic copies of some of the most famous paintings in Russian galleries. The non-essential embroidered frippery of the leizure class woman is contrasted with the wondrously rich creative taste of the peasant woman whose blouses and aprons are the marvel of the whole world. A feature of the exhibition is a whole series of puppet dolls, costumed true to the life of various castes of the old Russia, and made by the first artel of the Moscow Art Theater.

The first night, August 22, will be "Ukrainian Night," and all arrangements are in the hands of the Ukrainian branch. There will be, for entertainment, a 20-piece Ukrainian mandolin orchestra, in costume, as well as a chorus and a group of dancers. Recitations and songs will be given in inimitable native style.

The second night, August 23, will be "Russian Night," in charge of the Russian branch, and here too the program will include music, song and dance native to revolutionary Russia.

"Capusta" and "Piroshki"

Refreshments on both nights will be likewise out of the ordinary to non Russian elements. For those who bring along a husky appetite there will be delicious "galobsy," chopped meat wrapped in "capusta" cabbage leaves, and then cooked. For those who ordinarily must content themselves with a sandwich, there will be instead real "varenki," or rolls containing chopped filling, and of course, for the humming birds there will be "piroshki" of three kinds, jelly, cheese or raisin. It goes without saying that real Russian "Tchai" wil be dispensed from steaming samovars, and that home-made "varenie" will be donated for the occasion to sweeten the event and the tea.

All in all, this is going to be one of the most alluring social events ever held in Chicago. A good, unique program; a splendid educational treat in the exhibition; tasty and intriguing eats; real Russian-Ukrainian atmosphere; and an excellent cause—international workers solidarity. Invitations will cost only 25 cents. When the capacity of the hall has been sold out, efforts will be made to stop further sale, but there is no guarantee against crowding. Those wanting to see the exhibition in greater detail and comfort, are advised to come early Saturday or Sunday afternoons. Competent guides will explain the exhibition periodically and in detail.

EFFORTS TO DIG OUT ENTOMBED MINERS GO ON

ROCKWOOD, Tenn., July 24.—With two bodies already recovered, rescue workers here today renewed their efforts to reach the other entombed men, who were trapped by two mysterious explosions in the Roane Iron company's mine here Thursday.

The victims were identified as Claude Tindle and Raymond Watkins, their bodies being horribly mangled by the explosion.

The men were found nearly 500 feet from the scene of the explosion, and were believed by rescue workers to have been blown that distance by the explosion.

The eight men now entombed are believed to be dead, mine officials assert.

CARRY FIGHT ON SIGMAN TO CHICAGO

of the officials of the International.

Not Merely a Local Matter.

"This quarrel is not a local matter; it is a fight for control of our union by the rank and file which has been going on all over the country for years. With the Chicago members behind us we shall be certain of victory."

Sigman Seeks Support Only From the Police, Bosses and Gangsters.

Not a day passes in the struggle of the cloak and dress makers in which there are not important incidents.

On the one hand there is still on the order of the day the report of the governor's commission. It appears that on this report not only the workers are gagging, but also the contractors. On the other hand, there are continually new developments in the struggle against the corrupt machine of the union, which becomes sharper every day.

Regardless of the fact that the Sigman machine has settled for itself the question of the recommendation of the governor's commission, regardless of the fact that this machine has also carried thru the fake referendum, the question is far from settled. If Sigman and his machine can satisfy themselves with the "favors" of the commission, the cloakmakers have shown they will not be able to swallow them.

General Strike in Offing.

The sentiment for a general strike is spreading and it is clear that if this sentiment should reach a little further, a strike will surely break out. It is also certain that if a strike will break out from the mass itself, then that strike will surely wipe out the official rule of the Sigman machine from the union. And such a strike will also have the necessary power to dictate new working conditions for the cloakmakers.

The cloakmakers are not the only ones who cannot swallow the "favors" of the governor's commission. Those favors are also choking the contractors. Tuesday evening the contractors' association had a stormy meeting on the question of whether they should accept the decision of the commission.

According to that decision the contractors also have received blows against their interests. The jobbers, who are the big capitalists, have won everything. The main demands of the contractors, as, for instance, the establishment of a standard cost of labor, were rejected.

The meeting of the contractors decided therefore, to send out the decision of the governor's commission to a referendum vote.

Arrests, Fights, and Other Incidents.

Seven workers were arrested Tuesday morning near the shop of Metches and Herbert, 164 W. 25th St. This firm attempted to test the power of the Joint Action Committee of the suspended locals, demanding of the workers in the shop that they should obey the orders of the Sigman-Feinberg machine. The workers declined. The bosses attempted to discharge all who refused, saying they wanted to see who is who.

The workers thereupon showed whom they stand with. Of the 30 workers, only a few cutters remained scabbing in the shop. All others went out on strike and picketed the shop.

Sigman's Backers a Fine Lot.

And so the Sigman machine concentrated on this shop all its strength. And what does it consist of? Police, gangsters, paid strong-arm men. Seven pickets were arrested near the shop, but no dressmakers came to work. The arrested are Sasha Zimmerman, secretary of the Joint Action Committee who works at that shop, Abraham Lupin, Kove, Greenberg, Anna Solomon, Emma Cohn, and another girl. All were released on bail pending trial Thursday.

In the court yesterday also was the trial of the two gangsters who attacked George Stupekevich Tuesday. At the hearing in the court it was shown that the gangsters are not even formally cloakmakers. They declared that they were chauffeurs. But when they were asked for their licenses they said they didn't have them.

Gangsters' Trial Postponed.

The lawyer of the machine-gangsters demanded of the court that they should be fined for disorderly conduct and the case dropped. But the lawyer for the Joint Action Committee said no, that to this proposition he could not agree. He demanded a trial because if not the gangs will be at their work again, and it is very undesirable that gangsters who do not even have a formal relation with the union should attack workers in the streets. The judge postponed the trial to the 5th of August. In the meantime, he ordered an investigation of the records of the two Sigman servants.

The supposed enemy of Communism and lover of scabbing, Mr. Feinberg, manager of the Sigman Joint Board, has sent a letter to the bosses requesting their active assistance. He requested in this letter that the bosses should not permit in their shops representatives of the workers who do not show credentials from the machine.

SKRZYNSKI, FOREIGN MINISTER OF POLAND, IS TOLD CHICAGO WORKERS WAR ON POLISH REACTION'S TERROR

Alexander Skrzynski, the minister of foreign affairs in the Grabski terror rule over Poland, who has been feted by American exploiters since his arrival in this country, will receive some straight talk from the workers of Chicago when he arrives in this city today.

The accompanying letter will be sent him by the Chicago Conference to Aid Political Prisoners in Poland, protesting against the bloody oppression of the Polish masses by the government of the Polish capitalists and landlords. The conference consists of labor unions, fraternal and sick benefit societies, educational groups, branches of the Workers (Communist) Party, and other working class organizations. The letter declares:

Demand Freedom of Prisoners!

Chicago, Ill., July 25, 1925.

Alexander Skrzynski,

Minister of Foreign Affairs,

Republic of Poland.

Dear Sir: Taking advantage of your presence in Chicago, the Chicago Conference to Aid Political Prisoners in Poland hereby submits to you this open letter in regard to the imprisonment of over 8,000 workers, peasants and members of national minorities—Ukrainians and White Russians—for their part in the struggle for bread and freedom; for belonging to workers', peasants', and even purely educational organizations.

The government of which you are a representative and a member is responsible for the imprisonment, torture, flogging and the murder, open and secret, of thousands of unarmed workers and peasants.

These facts are reported not only by the illegal workers' and peasants' publications, but also by the semi-official Polish press. They prove that a monstrous and systematic white terror is being carried on by the government of which you are a member.

Your government is treating the imprisoned workers and peasants worse than common criminals. Thruout Poland hunger strikes have broken out, as the result of the denial of even the most elemental rights to political prisoners, as your colleague Thuggut has admitted.

We, the Chicago Conference to Aid Political Prisoners in Poland, raise our voices in protest against these barbarous acts of the government of the Polish bouregoisie, in order that the Polish worker and peasant masses may know that we are with them in their bitter struggle, and the American workers, learning of the persecution of their brothers may, in the name of international working-class solidarity, join in condemning the official reception extended by the U. S. government to the representative of the oppressors of the Polish proletariat.

We hope that the working class of Poland will in the near future open the doors of the prisons and free the heroes of the workers' struggle.

Freedom for political prisoners!

The Official Report of

RUSSIA TODAY

The British Trade Union Delegation to Soviet Russia

The official report of the British Trade Union Delegation to Soviet Russia, including trade union leaders and experts who travelled to every section and observed every phase of Soviet life.

A most complete report, with graphic charts and maps covering Politics, Finance, Army, Religion, Education, Trade Unions, Wages—by a Non-Communist, impartial and official body of British Labor.

WM. F. DUNNE

Editor of the Daily Worker says:

The British Trade Union Delegation to Soviet Russia in a unanimous report has told the story of the Russian Revolution in language that trade unionists can understand.

It is a great story, told in matter-of-fact language, the story of millions of workers and peasants marching towards Communism over all obstacles; it is history hot with the breath of the struggle in the style of a convention report . . .

Revolutionary Russian and stubborn, slow-moving Briton both call to the American worker from the pages of the British delegation's report.

Sigman on the Toboggan

When Sigman, the self-made Czar of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, decided to expel the elected officials of Locals 2, 9 and 22, in New York, for celebrating May Day, the international holiday of labor and other "crimes" of a similar nature, it is quite possible that he did not expect that he was signing his own death warrant as head of a once powerful labor organization. Yet that is just what Sigman did.

There is an old saying that "those whom the gods wish to destory they first make mad." This does not apply to Sigman, tho his action in normal times would be considered that of a first rate lunatic. However, he was in a position where he had no choice, except between two evils. Naturally he chose the lesser one.

Sigman, by a series of treacherous acts had lost the confidence of the membership. For years he has cloaked his treachery more or less successfully by raising the cry of "Communism," as so many other fakers have done. But like the boy in Aesop's fable who raised the cry of "Wolf," until it outlived its usefulness, Sigman depended too much on his "red fire." After all, crooks are discovered sooner or later. It is fortunate for the members of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, that they saw thru Sigman in time, before he had succeeded in ruining an organization that he could not rule.

The Sigman machine has rung the changes on dictatorship in Russia, a dictatorship of the many over the few, of the producers over the non-producers. Yet Sigman disfranchised 60 per cent of the membership in New York, knowing that if he allowed majority rule, he would not hold his office five minutes. He is now in the same position as old Tom Rickert of the scabby United Garment Workers, and there is nothing the filthy scab Rickert has not done that Sigman will not do.

The members of the I. L. G. U. are determined to put an end to Sigmanism. They have stood a good deal from the traitors who have dragged the union along at the tail of the employers' chariot for years. The members are now learning that the Communists whom Sigman has been expelling from the unions are not the disrupters. They have learned who the disrupters are and they are going to get the gate.

Other labor fakers who think they can get rid of the Communists in Sigman fashion should take a warning before it is too late.

Officer 4011

Who owns the Chicago police force? If you had been on the picketline near the manufacturing establishment of the International Tailoring Company last Thursday evening you would have very little difficulty in finding an answer to that question.

As our readers must be aware there is a strike on against that clothing company because of its refusal to sign a contract with the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, the union refusing to accept a reduction in wages. The striking employes are on the picket line morning and evening endeavoring to prevent scabs and prospective scabs from taking the bread and butter out of the mouths of the former employes of the clothing company who insisted on a decent standard of living.

This is what happened last Thursday evening: A scab was floundering around the street and screaming with terror as hundreds of strikers gathered. The excitement brought a flivver load of officers to the scene. One of them, officer 4011, pulled his gun and seized one of the strikers, sticking his weapon into the pit of his stomach. The striker was quiet and made no effort to resist the officer. The latter however, not satisfied to make the arrest, which was the limit of his obligation in the situation. Without the slightest provocation he struck the worker in his custody forcibly with the gun on the left side of the face near the temple. The blow might have killed the man.

The striker was stunned and turned pale, but did not murmur. His conduct was in striking contrast to the babbling of the scab who ran for protection to the uniformed thugs.

A plain clothes thug came along, and he also jumped on the striker hiting him with clenched fist square on the jaw.

Both brutes took the worker along and held him in the International Tailoring Company building. While they were taking him away the plain clothes officer was heard to mutter: "You will get all that is coming to you."

And it looked as if he did. When he was taken out from the building to the patrol wagon, he was deathly pale and unable to speak.

Who owns the police force? The strikers on the picket line will not take long to answer.

The American sailors, mostly workers, had to go to Melbourne, Australia, to learn that there are class war prisoners in the United States. Here's hoping that this knowledge will help guide them in the future.

Start now reading the British trade union delegation's report on "Russia Today." It will appear in daily installments until completed. Read it yourself and get other workers to read it.

It is reported that Calvin Coolidge wants Dawes to shut up about the senate and also about the republican party nomination for 1928. There is a rift in the loot somewhere.

It looks as if Sidney Hillman never had the experience of sticking his nose into a buzz saw. Remember what happened to Tom Rickert, Sidney!

We predict that before "B. and O. Bill" Johnston gets thru, expelling the Communists from the union, that he will be a much older if not wiser faker than he is now.

The newspapers say that the Bolsheviks have slaughtered seventeen more monarchists. Good! But where the devil are they getting them all?

They say that Sigman, self-made czar of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, is on pins and needles those days.

The cause of the British coal miners is the concern of world labor.

Fake Letter of Bosses Exposed

INTERNATIONAL TAILORS INDULGE IN ORGY OF VIOLENCE, DE NOVI SLUGGED, GIRL PICKET IS INJURED

Made desperate by the solidarity of their striking employes, the International Tailoring Company indulged in an orgy of violence against the picketing members of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers. While William A. Cunnea was fighting off the application of the garment bosses in Judge Pam's court for an injunction to prevent picketing, the police arrested and slugged Mike De Novi, business agent for the Amalgamated, clubbed another worker, Joseph Cerurj, with the butt of a revolver, and so badly injured Frances De Spenza that she required medical treatment.

The International company pasted a fake "telegram" on the Peoria street side of their building, near Jackson boulevard, which purported to convey the information that the New York strike of the Amalgamated was broken. The Amalgamated officials immediately exposed this hoax and branded it a lie.

Seven pickets were arrested in all, including two girls. Frances De Spenza's hand was badly cut by the police who handled her roughly when they arrested her. The doctor gave her a certificate showing that he had given her medical treatment, and action will be taken against the police violence. Another picket was arrested yesterday morning. Others arrested were Pasquale Camera, Mary De Spenza, and Peter Korach.

The fake "telegram" posted by the bosses, with the printed letters pasted on a telegraph blank, said:

"J. L. Reiss, International Tailoring company,

"847 West Jackson Blvd., Chicago,

"Everything satisfactory, cutters working regular time. Can handle fifty orders or more daily. Each house needs orders.

"R. H. Reiss."

Below the telegram, in red pencil, is written, "Somebody Lies, who is it?"

The Amalgamated officials quickly showed who lies. Isadore Rothbart, business agent for the pants makers, said: "We have just received word that in spite of the injunction taken out by the International in New York, the strike there is one hundred per cent effective.

"Such bluffs of the bosses cannot break the solidarity of the strikers. They know that this is just another desperate effort of the International to break our ranks. They cannot do it. The telegram lies."

A police sergeant confided to one of the strikers that they had four patrols waiting in readiness, and if the injunction were granted, wholesale arrests would be made. Thus do the police obey the bosses.

Officer 4011 Slugs Stiker.

One of the strikers was severly beaten over the head with a heavy revolver by Officer 4011, on Green street shortly after five o'clock. A scab was rushing madly about the street and howling for protection, as hundreds of garment workers and other people in sympathy with the strikers gathered. The scab appeared to have bumped into something hard as the lower part of his face was discolored.

When Officer 4011 came along he grabbed one of the strikers and stuck his gun in his stomach. The striker made no effort to get away or resist the officer. But the latter was not satisfied with making an arrest. Evidently he wanted to show his hatred of the strikers. He lifted his revolver high over his head and struck the defenceless striker over the temple with the heavy weapon.

Police and Scabs.

The striker put his hand to his face but was so stunned by the blow that he was unable to speak. He would have fallen to the ground but for the policeman holding him up.

Another policeman or company gangster in plain clothes came along. This brave man took another wallop at the striker who was held tightly in the grip of the uniformed officers. The onlookers weer angry but made no move. Workers weer heard to say that the police and the scabs were working hand in hand. It is the general impression that at least some of the police are on the payroll of the International Tailoring Company.

Strikers Cheer Victims.

As the wagon took several strikers away from the building there were loud cheers from the strikers. This is certainly a militant group of workers. Three old ladies, members of the union, walked up and down the street. As the wagon was carrying the girls away one of them, she is 65 years old if she is a day, went over to the policeman and shouted: "It is an honor to be taken away in the paddy-wagon for a cause like this."

Her comrade nodded assent. This is the spirit that is noticeable on the picket line. It is a winning spirit.

YANKEE SAILORS HEAR OF JAILED WORKERS IN U. S.

Australian Labor in "Warm Reception"

MELBOURNE, Australia, July 24—Fifteen spectators watching the parade of sailors from the U. S. fleet from the veranda of a movie house, were injured when the balcony under them fell into the street.

This is attributed to the labor union boycott on participation in any demonstration of greeting to the fleet as protest against America's continued imprisonment of workingmen for membership or action in the labor movement, as is the street car strike and the strike of the marine firemen whose refusal to man the official reception boat prevented the Australian reception committee from going out into the harbor to greet Admiral Robert E. Coontz's flagship.

Posters are pasted all over the city and leaflets given out to the American sailors by the Australian Communist Party, the I. W. W. and the radical union elements, telling the U. S. sailors of the imprisonment of Tom Mooney, the I. W. W. of Centralia, Washington, and California, Sacco and Vanzetti, Rangel and Cline and the anti-labor laws of American states.

Admiral Coontz in his address to the reception committee, expressed his delight at the "warm reception" given the fleet.

BRITISH TEXTILE UNION CALLS OUT 133,000 IN BATTLE ON WAGE CUTS

LONDON, Engfiland, July 24—The first strike in the series which theatens to tie up all industrial England this summer began today when 135,000 textile workers walked out at Leeds, Bradford, Halifax and Hudderseld in a fight against a five per cent wage cut.

The strikers refused arbitration offered by the ministry of labor and left the mills, seriously disorganizing the geat textile industry in the north of England.

Early reports today are that mounted police dispersed a crowd of 500 strikers gathered outside a mill in Leeds. There weer no casualties.

GARMENT BOSSES ASK JUDGE PAM TO OUTLAW A. C. W. STRIKE, FLAUNT STATE LAW, INVOKE A. F. OF L. NAME

The application of the International Tailoring Company for an injunction to prohibit their striking employes from picketing, which is now being argued before Judge Hugo Pam, room 941 county building, openly flaunts the state anti-injunction law. The bill for an injunction demands that all forms of picketing cease, and calls the Cuthbertson anti-injunction law unconstitutional.

Quotations from the bill, which complains that the Amalgamated strikers prevented the bosses from carrying out an agreement with the United Garment Workers, the American Federation of Labor scab union, follow:

"19—Your orator further represents that the defendants in committing the acts, injuries and grievances, as above set forth and charged against them, are relying upon a certain alleged act of the general assembly of the state of Illinois for their justification, to wit an act entitled, 'An act relating to disputes concerning terms and conditions of employment' which is as follows."

The Cuthbertson anti-injunction law is then quoted.

"20—Your orator further represents that said supposed act of the legislature is unconstitutional and void that the said defendants against your orator have not been and cannot be made lawful by the said supposed act of the legislature aforesaid; that the same controvenes and is in direct conflict with the constitution of the state of Illinois and with the constitution of the United States."

The bill then asks the judge to restrain the striking union members—

"From picketing or maintaining any picket or pickets at or near the premises of your orator or along the routes followed by the employes of your orator in going to and from their homes, and to and from the place of business of your orator.

"From patrolling, or congregating in front of or near the premises or the homes of the employes.

"From watching or spying upon places of business of your orator or upon the employes.

"From soliciting or inducing, or attempting to induce or influence persons not to enter or continue employment with your orator.

A. F. of L. Scabbery Exposed.

"Your orator further charges that on June 29, 1925, your orator entered into an agreement with the United Garment Workers of America, a voluntary organization, regarding the terms and conditions of employment of its employes.

"The defendants and other persons confederating with the defendants, and whose names are to your orator unknown, further unlawfully combined to force and compel your orator to abrogate said last mentioned agreement by the unlawful means herein above set forth."

CONFERENCE CONFLICT IS STILL WARM

But China Is to Be Plundered, Anyway

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 24—State department officials give out a story that America has received advices from practically all the nine leading powers favoring the Chinese conference proposal of Secretary Kellogg's.

Japan is said to have assured Washington thru Ambassador Matsudaira, that Japan favors convening the customs conference as well as the extra-territoriality commission.

Great Britain, however, leads the opposition, now formally and flatly stating its opposition, then intimating that if its imperial interests are not to be challenged by the U. S., it will not object to the American proposal.

The fixing of responsibility for the Shanghai massacre upon the British police troop commander by the Peking diplomatic corps, added to the objection of England, but the boycott on British and Japanese goods ordered to begin on August 1 by the Chinese chamber of commerce, has also had its effect.

Back of the conflicting reports of the policies of the imperialist powers toward the American proposal, was, of course, a unanimity of opinion that under whatever conditions the conference was called, they would not be such as would really release China from her imperialist oppressors.

British Labor Party Publishes Appeal of Canton Government

LONDON, July 24—The Labor Party publishes the text of a 1,500-word manifesto cabled by the Canton Nationalist government to the British Labor Party protesting against and denouncing "the exploitation of China by imperialist powers," which, it declares, prevents China from developing herself on independent nationalist lines.

Hunt Slayers of Spinsters.

HUDSON, N. H., July 24.—Two autoists in a battered car were sought today as the slayers of two aged spinsters, Miss Helen E. Gillis, eighty, and her sister, Miss Georgia Gillis, seventy-seven, who were clubbed to death in their little white farm house here. Police believe robbery was the motive.

RIFF LEADER OFFERS PEACE TERMS TO FOES

Demands Freedom for the Riffian State

PARIS, July 24.—According to a story published in the Quotidien, Abd-el-Krim is willing to grant peace terms to France and Spain, the main features of which are the following:

The Riff state shall be granted independence and that Krim shall have the title of Emir. Sultan Moulay Youseff, the imperialist tool shall have spiritual rulership over Morocco.

The Riff territory shall extend to the Quergha river and should include the towns of Larcha, Arzila and Teuan. The Riffian nation shall have the right to maintain its own armed forces.

Paper Victories.

In view of the tremendous opposition to the Morocco campaign, prevailing in France, it is expected that Painleve and his socialist supporters will have difficulty in refusing to treat with the Riffian leader.

Since Petain went to Morocco the war ministry press agents have been predicting French victories as soon as the field marshal got into action. According to plan the victories are coming in—over the wires. These paper victories are not taken very seriously by a public that was fed on lies during the four years of the world war.

Seek New Anti-Riff Frontier.

MADRID.—French delegates to the Franco-Spanish conference wish to establish a new frontier between the French and Spanish zones in Morocco, according to the newspaper debate today. The French also demanded that they be allowed to pursue the Moroccan rebels in both French and Spanish zones, a right which Spanish troops would have reciprocated.

BRITISH TRADE UNION SOVIET REPORT BEGINS

Historic Document to Run in Daily

The first instalment of the official report made by the British Trade Union Delegation that visited Russia in November and December of last year, begins today in the magazine supplement of the daily. It is no exaggeration to say that this is one of the most important documents published in recent history.

This report is signed by men whose names are household words in Great Britain, on the continent of Europe and thruout the world. None of them are Communists, and for this reason their report on a country government by a Communist Party is all the more valuable.

Members of Delegation.

The members of the delegation are Herbert Smith, president Miners' Federation of Great Britain; Ben Tillett, general secretary of Trade Unions since 1889; John Turner, associated with socialist movement since 1884; John Bromley, M. P. general secretary of the Locomotive Enginees and Firemen's Union; Allan A. H. Findlay, president Engineering and Building Trades Federation; A. A. Purcell, chairman of delegation, president of the International Federation of Trade Unions; Fred Bramley, secretary of delegation, general secretary Trade Union Congress.

In an advisory capacity were Harold Grenfell, formerly ranking naval officer, now member of the Independent Labor Party; A. R. McDonel, formerly employed by the foreign office and in the consulate service; George Young, formerly in the diplomatic service. Author of many works on foreign affairs.

The report created a sensation in Great Britain and was assailed by the capitalist press and the yellow socialists. No worker should miss the opportunity to read for himself the story told by this representative delegation.

Bank Bandits Caught.

VENICE, Ill., July 24.—One bandit was shot and perhaps fatally wounded and three others captured after they had robbed the Venice State Bank here this morning and in making their escape, encountered a squad of detectives passing thru the city.

THE dictatorship of the fascists in Italy would not last twenty-four hours, if it had to depend on Mussolini alone or even on his cutthroat army. It survived until now because it had the support of the big industrialists. They financed it in its youth and they have nourished it ever since. But the damn thing can't work because the days of the dictatorship of capitalism are numbered, whether open or masked. It is the dictatorship of the few over the many, that is slipping in Italy.

BUT an entirely different situation exists in Russia. There we have a dictatorship of the millions of workers and peasants exercised thru the Communist Party. For what purpose? Not to set up a dictatorship as the model form of government for all time, but as a means whereby the robber system of capitalism shall be supplanted by production for use, and to insure that this transformation can take place with a minimum of disorganization. In fact, if we take democracy to be the rule of the majority, this dictatorship in the Soviet Union is the most democratic government in the world today.

BUT the Communists are not playing with words or interpretations. They say it is a dictatorship and that furthermore the workingclass movement in all countries will inevitably pass thru this stage before a classless society is attained where all will be producers and government as we know it now will disappear, because all governments are and have been organs of suppression, the suppression of one or more classes by one or more other classes. Naturally, when all classes disappear, there will be no further need of suppression. The dictatorship in Russia is the servant of evolution. The caricature that exists in Italy is trying to hold back the wheels of progress.

THE Italian dictatorship is doomed to failure. Even its original supporters admit that things look anything but bright for it now. This does not mean that the capitalists in other countries will not adopt the same method that Mussolini adopted rather than see the working class ride into power. They will. Drowning men grasp at straws and if anybody is foolish enough to believe that the capitalists in all countries will not resort to violence rather that surrender their easy graft, that person does not even read the newspapers.

EVEN England, long heralded to the four winds as the motherland of democracy has a rapidly growing fascist organization, financed by some of the leading tory politicians and landowners. Prominent army officers are at its head and it has now reached the stage where it marches armed through the streets and breaks up working class meetings. And it does so with impunity. While the opposition to Mussolini in Italy does not come entirely from the workingclass, the time will arrive when many of those leaders who are now fighting the black shirts will fight the dictatorship of the workers just as vigorously. Mussolini was right when he told his petty bourgeois opponents that after fascism would come Communism. Yes, if not immediately, at least in the not far distant future.

Brookhart Gaining Over Democrat Steck in Ballot Recount

WASHINGTON, July 24.—Daniel F. Steck, democrat, will fail in his effort to oust Smith W. Brookhart, insurgent republican of Iowa, from his senate seat if he is not able to pick up votes faster than he has thus far in the recount here, it was indicated today.

Brookhart so far has gained ten votes over Steck with about one-tenth of the ballots counted. Friends of Brookhart were jubilant over the progress of the recount and predicted that the insurgent senator would increase his majority of 1,400 over Steck. Approximately 150 ballots have been challenged, two-thirds of them being Steck ballots with an arrow opposite his name.

PREFACE

The Delegation representing the British Trades Union Congress left London on November 7th, 1924, and travelled to Moscow. After a stay there it went on to Kharkov, the Don Basin, Rostov, the Caucasus, Baku, and Tiflis. Thence it returned by a different route to Moscow, and, after a second stay there, came home by Leningrad, arriving back in London on December 19th.

One of the advisory delegates spent another ten days studying rural and political conditions in the Ukraine and Moldavia, and came home by Odessa and Constantinople.

During our journey from London to Moscow we travelled through Belgium, Germany, Lithuania and Latvia, and through the agricultural districts of Russia to Moscow, arriving in Moscow on Tuesday, November 11th.

The journey was not without incidents of an interesting character even before we arrived at the Russian frontier. At Berlin, we were informed that the official delegation appointed by the Government of Germany to proceed to Moscow for the purpose of discussing a trading agreement between Germany and Russia was to occupy another portion of the same train in which we were travelling. No detailed comment is necessary to indicate what we considered to be a remarkable coincidence, namely that having just left our own country after a severe attack on the Labor Party because of its attempt to arrange a trading agreement with Russia, we should on our way be joined on the same train by the official representatives of a country which for many years has been our most successful competitor, especially in Russian markets—representatives who were charged with the special task of promoting the trading interests of their own country.

On our way to Russia we were mett at Riga (Latvia) by the official representatives of the Soviet Government. The Ambassador and other officials who received the Delegation at the Russian Embassy in the name of the Soviet Government expressed the hope that our investigations would enable us to obtain the facts and convey the truth to the workers of our own and other countries.

After this brief first introduction to Russian representatives we proceeded to Moscow accompanied by official representatives of the All-Russian Trades Council and some of the officials attached to the Moscow Trade Union center.

The first impression we received in Soviet Russia was on our arrival at the frontier station of Sebezh. The entrance into Soviet Russia at the frontier was marked by a specially constructed arch upon which were displayed on a red cloth covering, various mottoes with which we were well acquainted in our own language. These declared the international solidarity of the workers, and informed all who entered this new country that the main purpose of Russia was the building up of an economic system which would eliminate the capitalist. Here we were also introduced to representatives of Russia's Red Army. It was the first time that the majority of the members of the Delegation had seen an army raised and organized by workers for the purpose of defending a State controlled by themselves.

The present frontier town of Sebezh was formerly an almost unknown and unimportant village consisting of 500 individuals. It is now becoming an important frontier center, and building operations for housing the people were in progress. The first building to be erected after the workers' houses had been built was the workmen's club. This club had been erected by the workers themselves in their spare time as a volutary contribution to their own cause. We saw the first attempt at a library, the first lecture room, and the first form of rural education which have ever been known in this area, and we were here also confronted with an important economic fact. We were privileged to inspect eight enormous railway engines, newly constructed, up-to-date, with all the modern appliances for heavy transport service, there being the first instalment of a contract order given to Sweden for 180 of the same type. We could not avoid noting the great importance of this first lesson, and we regretted very much indeed that we were not able to bring the British electorate to this spot for the purpose of reconsidering their decision at the last election. We had no doubt that our engineering employers and also the shareholders and investors in engineering works would have required a few hours' solitude for the purpose of considering their position in view of this manifestation that if Great Britain will not take the opportunity for commercial extension of the Russian market, other countries, including Sweden, France, and Germany, will be before us, and at a later date it will be no longer a question of election decisions to keep out of Russia but of commercial competition to get in.

At various centers our train was pulled up for the purpose of enabling us to receive a welcome from the officials and representatives of the Soviet Government and workers' unions. The space which would be necessary to convey to the mind of the reader our rapidly accumulated impressions would occupy many pages of this report, and in this, the introductory section we can only give the barest outline of our experiences at way-side stations of Soviet Russia. There were demonstrations of enthusiastic workers—men and women—with banners flying, beautifully embroidered with gold and silver mottoes artistically designed and very impressive. Our deepest impressions were received in relation to the bands of children known as "Young Pioneers," who were lined up to take the front place in these receptions. Their singing of revolutionary songs reminiscent of the folk-songs of our country, were inspiring but melancholy and full of depth. We seemed to be called back through the centuries of persecution, and we felt that through this revolutionary music we could hear the wailing cry of a people long oppressed brought into contact with a glimpse of freedom and hope for a better future.

The children appeared to us to be happy. They were undoubtedly well-cared for. Their eyes were bright and full of young life. We saw no signs amongst them of extreme poverty, and it appeared to us that a special effort was being made to make the lives of the young happier and more pleasant by the changes which had already been made. As a contrast to these, we noticed, standing among the representatives of the present generation, many old people who had evidently passed through a period of great trial, oppression, and persecution. They bore on their faces indelible marks of the terrible conditions of the past and the scars of war. The haunted expression of persecuted men was still left in their eyes, and the contrast to us was a most eloquent expression of the difference between the old order and the new.

Members of our Delegation who had visited Russia in connection with the 1920 Delegation, gave us information which indicated the very great contrast between the conditions of these people at the way-side stations and the conditions which existed during the previous visit.. The demonstrations in 1920 consisted mainly of large crowds of people—young, middle-aged, and old—who had covered their starving bodies with rags and who were evidently going through a period of extreme misery. This contrast was the first sign of the rapid improvement in social conditions which we have witnessed throughout Russia and place on record in this report. To members of the Delegation who had resided in Russia many years before the war, other changes were made evident. The improved cleanliness, as compared with pre-war days of buildings, such as restaurants and even lavatories, used by the peasants and the working class, was very marked. The stations and station buildings were entirely free from the accumulation of cigarette ends and the husks of sun-flower seeds, also the defacement of the walls which were so prevalent before the war. Another impression was received in conversation with the employes in charge of the railway carriage in which the Delegation travelled. These conductors and other employes were now State employes. We were travelling with three officials of the Government, yet the employes discussed freely the conditions under which they lived and stated frankly their personal objections with regard to some of the restrictions under which they worked. This to some extent, refutes the idea that expressions of this kind were unsafe or unwise in Soviet Russia.

On our arrival in Moscow we were met by officials of the All-Russian Central Council of Trade Unions, and after making hotel arrangements we were conducted to the Sixth Congress of the All-Russian Trade Unions. This Congress was attended by 843 delegates, representing approximately a membership of 6,000,000 Trade Unionists throughout Russia. We noted a great variety in type and temperament, as will be understood in view of the fact that Russia includes a population of about 130,000,000, with from 120 to 130 distinct nationalities. The arrival of the British Delegation aroused great enthusiasm. Three speakers were appointed to speak on behalf of the Delegation—the Chairman, Mr. A. A. Purcell, the Secretary, Mr. Fred Bramley, and Mr. Ben Tillett. The speeches were followed with great attention and the point of view expressed in conveying the fraternal greetings on behalf of the British Trade Union Movement was wholly endorsed by this remarkable gathering.

The All-Russian Trades Union Congress was held in a building known as the "Hall of Trade Unions," a magnificent building which has been placed at the disposal of the Trade Union organizations of Moscow by the Soviet authorities. It was formerly known as the Noble's Club, and was utilized by the Russian aristocracy as one of their principal centers for receptions and amusement, including what might be described as high speed gambling on an intensive scale. The Congress Hall was magnificently illuminated and decorated inside and out for the purpose of the Congress. Along each side of the building there were huge white pillars with carved capitals, and these pillars were artistically decorated with red cloth, on which were printed various mottoes in the form of declarations of Soviet principles and policy. We were later conducted round this building, which contains the offices and club of the Moscow Trades Council and in which a good deal of the Trade Union business in connection with Trade Union organization is transacted. The premises were kept in perfect order and cleanliness, and along the corridors we noticed some magnificent specimens of art in metal, marble and stone. On the walls many fine pictures were hung, some of them representing the old order, others painted by revolutionary artists depicting in vivid outline the main incidents of the Revolution and the aspirations of Russian democracy.

We were taken into the Council Chamber where the nobles, under the old regime, held their meetings, in the centre of which was placed a round table around which were beautifully carved chairs, each one of them decorated with the coat of arms of the Grand Duke or other aristocrat who occupied the chair.

It is our duty to place on record here our impression that the works of art in this and all other centers of Trade Unions and Government activity have been very specially cared for by the authorities whether the treasures represented the old order or the new. There is no evidence of abuse, and every respect is shown to the art creations taken over by the new social organization in Russia.

The Delegation also visited the Mausoleum in which the body of Lenin still lies in state, and in the name of British Trade Unions deposited a special wreath to mark our respect to the departed leader. This burial place of Lenin is erected close to the Kremlin walls and constitutes an impressive and tragic memory of the Revolution.

While in Moscow we witnessed a huge demonstration of Trade Union delegates, with bands and banners, that passed the specially erected stand outside the Congress Hall occupied by the British Delegation and other Trade Union representatives. The huge space was packed by thousands of workers who gave expression to unreserved enthusiasm and interest in our Delegation. The march past was a magnificent sight. Huge battalions of workers with banners of various kinds, many of them beautiful examples of art in cloth, gold, and metal. This conveyed to us the message that art and handicraft are closely allied to the revolutionary sentiments which now inspire the Russian people.

The most moderate estimate of this demonstration was at least 100,000 people assembled for the purpose of giving a united reception to the British Delegation. The speeches delivered by the British representatives were well received.

We attended a demonstration of quite another kind on the morning of our first Sunday spent in Russia. The Delegation, along with Russian and other representatives attending the Congress, were invited to view the maneuvers of the special cavalry detachment of the Red Army, known as Budenny cavalry. Budenny, the Commander-in-Chief, is known as a famous cavalry leader. The honorary colonel of this regiment is the Presidium of the All-Russian Trade Council, and reports are given direct from the regiment to the Congress by representatives of the battalion in the same way as reports are given regarding other department work under the control of the council. The mounted cavalry gave us some wonderful demonstrations of horsemanship and military movement and the manipulation of artillery equipment was a new experience for the representatives of British Labor. We were here witnessing the operations of the first disciplined, armed and trained force created and utilized for the defence of working-class institutions, an important detachment of an army of well-equipped, well-trained soldiers kept in existence by the workers themselves, organized, and working under the orders of their officers appointed and recognized by working-class organizations. We are not quite sure what those who are included in organizations in Great Britain known as pacifists, would have to say regarding this demonstration. It appears, however, to be an indispensable necessity so far as the Russian Republic is concerned. Every precaution is taken in Russia by those in authority and responsible for the social and economic life in the country to make adequate provision for the defence of the present social order against all enemies, including the danger of counter-revolution and attacks upon the Soviet State from without.

In Moscow we visited various institutions, and saw much that was of very great interest. We saw performances at the Opera House, and were specially interested in a demonstration of Russian talent at the Congress Hall, including a huge orchestra, special groups of Russian dancers, well organized choirs representing the gipsy tribes of Russia, and the peasant singers of the agricultural areas. The singing of their peasant songs and folk songs was extremely interesting to the Delegation, and the performance would, in our opinion, receive the enthusiastic applause of the most severe of our musical critics. The Russian people are great artists, great musicians, and idealists. The Russian temperament as reflected in this magnificent display of talent at the Congress Hall and other places, conveyed to us the fact that in Russia music and art and even amusement are recognized as important instruments of social education. They are encouraged and developed by the Socialist Government for this purpose.

We were also favored with special facilities to investigate the Kremlin, and we passed through various Government buildings and offices. We cannot in a report of this kind attempt to describe the many beautiful examples of architecture and the marvellous collection of Russian craftmanship of many ages, treasured in one of the buildings which is set apart for the purpose of a national museum. We must however, again place on record the fact that in passing through the throne room, the living apartments and the state bedrooms, formerly occupied by the royal family, we noticed not the slightest case of damage to the very beautiful decorations and furniture in these apartments. This appeared to us to indicate that the alleged destructiveness of the Revolution was not allowed to penetrate inside the Kremlin walls.

Visits were also paid to the principal prisons, where we visited the workshops and living apartments utilized by those serving terms of imprisonment for criminal offences. The prisoners work at various occupations. At the Boutirka prison we saw the saw-mill, chair-making factory, tailoring shop, bake-house, and laundry, and were very much impressed by the occupational organization inside this prison. Many of the prisoners before internment were not trained for any skilled occupation, and we noted that in the boot-making department, a number of young men were going through a period of apprenticeship. The prison is kept in a satisfactory state of cleanliness. We sampled the food, saw the bills of fare, and were much pleased to see that prisoners in what were once the worst prisons in Europe are permitted to enjoy a fair standard of comfort, are treated with very great humanity, and get good opportunities for a fresh start.

During our visit to this prison, we were allowed to interview the members of the Central Committee of the Socialist Revolutionary Party, who were in prison, as some of our readers will know, for alleged plotting against the present Government. These prisoners are kept in the Political Section of the prison. They are housed in separate rooms along a main corridor, in which we understand they are permitted to meet together. In this general preface we cannot enter into a detailed account of our discussion with these political prisoners, representing a revolutionary movement in which they played a very prominent part with great personal ability. A later section of the report will deal more fully with this question. They spoke very freely with us in private, and also in the presence of Soviet officials they made very definite and clear their opposition to the present Soviet system. Their indignation regarding their own treatment was mild compared with the free expression of their bitter disapproval of the treatment which they alleged their comrades were receiving at the hands of the Soviet Authority in Georgia, and other parts of Russia, where we were led to understand by the Social Revolutionaries there is a strong and deep-seated disapproval of the present system. The report on Trans-Caucasia dealing with this question will indicate to what extent we were able to test the accuracy or otherwise of these allegations.

On the 23rd November, the Delegation divided into two sections and left Moscow for the purpose of visiting important centres of industrial activity in Russia. We made our own plans and decided for ourselves our own line of inquiry and the places which we proposed to visit.

The program of the Delegation on this tour included an investigation of the industries, mines, workshops, social and housing conditions, and trade unions in Kharkov, the Donetz Basin, Bakhmut, Bryansk, Gorlovka, Sterovka, Usovka, Rostov, Kislavodsk, Tiflis; the oil industry of Grozny and Baku; the mines at Chiatouri, and the electricity plant at Zemochavalis. On its return to Moscow the Delegation again divided and visited Chatura and the Moscow Aircraft Works before proceeding to the Leningrad area and the Volkhovstroi electric power station.

At Kharkov we inspected the principal industries. We were shown round a well-equipped and extensive factory, in which 3,000 workers were employed in producing agricultural machinery. Going through the foundry, the engineering shops, and wood working departments, we noted production being conducted on a very large scale. We were met by enthusiastic groups of workers, who rushed forward to meet us, and expressed spontaneously their gratitude to us for visiting them, and their wishes for the development of a mutual understanding between British and Russian workers. The same kind of welcome awaited us at a large electrical works.

We were shown round this well appointed engineering establishment, where we saw huge dynamos in process of manufacture, with workers representing a very high degree of skill, and employed in producing electrical equipment intended for the industries and for the towns and cities and agricultural villages of the Soviet Republic. The managerial chiefs of this factory impressed us very much indeed with their business capacity, and the very high degree of technical knowledge of the industry for which they were responsible.

Kharkov is the chief city of the Ukraine. It has been the centre of many conflicts between Red and White troops. The army of Denikin had been able to inflict considerable damage to the railways, to the roads, and to the bridges in this area. Bridges were destroyed, and great damage to public buildings was noted, and the railway still bore the destructive marks of warfare and the clearest possible indication of the ravages of the civil war. The conficits of the civil wars had left their mark in every direction on this place.

We were taken to the Trade Union center, where the business connected with the Ukrainian Trade Unions is transacted. This center represents 1,117,000 Trade Unionists, and its buildings were formerly used as an office for the largest insurance company in the Empire. Twenty-three unions now transact their business in these premises. The Trade Union Council of Kharkov also meets in the same building and represents 160,000 Trade Union members in the city. The meetings of the Executives of all the Ukrainian unions are held on these premises, and also the meetings of the Bureaus. The weekly joint meetings of all local bodies and the Health and Unemployment Insurance business of the State are also transacted in the same building.

The Centre of Government for the Ukrainian Republic was also visited, and we were introduced to the President, Petrovsky, who gave us a most interesting account of the development of Soviet control in the Ukrainian Republic. This President was a Member of the Fourth Duma in Russia and one of the five members arrested and sentenced to life exile for protesting against the war in 1914. He was tried by court martial in 1915, and sent thousands of miles away from any railway system, isolated from all contact with friends and relatives, and was removed from any possible contact with the agencies of the Revolutionary movement.

The Presidium of Kharkov meets in a magnificent building of great architectural beauty, formerly occupied by a banking company. In this building we were amazed and interested to see some extremely fine examples of peasant art, including elaborate panels of embroidery in gold and silk, and woodwork and metal, wonderfully reminiscent of the kind of things we read about at home in connection with the life of William Morris and his attempts to revive the beauty and skill of craftsmanship.

In conversation with the President as to whether the Ukrainian peasant accepted the present system of Soviet control, a system based on Communism, we were informed that 70 per cent of them took part in recent elections and supported the Soviet system by substantial votes, and are now supporting the system with taxes which are collected without difficulty; and although the peasant is a strong individualist his prompt payment of taxes, his interest in political elections, and his support of the Soviet Government, indicated general satisfaction with the present regime.

We were, however, informed that they were not quite untroubled by neighboring States. They had to deal with armed bandits who overrun the frontiers occasionally and illegal bands of marauders who call themselves White Guards for their own purposes; and on this point a remarkable statement was made to us, namely, that the enemies of Soviet Russia had driven large numbers of the poor population of Poland over the borders to be maintained by the Ukrainian Authorities.

After leaving Kharkov, we visited Rostov, and here we found the public buildings, the shops, clubs, and institutions of a rather better order than in most of the Russian towns and villages we visited.

We were well received by the local people and were entertained at a workingmen's club, which had formerly been utilized as a bank. The interior decoration of this building and the general type of architecture was one of a design representing a very high standard.

From Rostov we traveled to Grozny, making a call during the day at Kislavodsk. This is a town famed for its mineral springs, and was formerly visited by the wealthiest families of Russia, Germany, and other parts of Europe as a health and holiday resort. Here we visited several institutions, holiday homes, and rest houses established in houses built by the aristocracy and luxuriously furnished in former days for their own purposes.

We arrived at Kislavodsk on one of the finest days of our tour. It was almost like summer, and the mild, warm air and beautiful sunshine proved an acceptable change to the Delegation. We visited the workmen's clubs and convalescent homes, and there is no doubt that this famous health resort is now being utilized by the Trade Unions for the purpose of giving health and medical attention to those who most need it as a result of their active services in industry.

On our arrival at Grozny, we immediately proceeded to inspect the first oilfield we had been able to see in Russia. We were introduced to the process of tapping these natural springs of valuable oil, which formerly provided profits from which millionaires were made. In all directions we noticed the precious oil bubbling to the surface of the earth, ready for the simplest methods of extraction. The fluid, which in all parts of the world has caused more diplomatic differences and national jealousies than any other raw material, is to be found in great abundance in this area.

We were extremely interested by what we saw and learned here. We were able to see the miserable hovels which the millionaire oil monopolists had erected for the purpose of housing the workers under the old system, and as a contrast we were able to look round the model village which was being built by the Soviet Republican authorities. The profits from the oil wells are now being used for the purpose of creating improved housing conditions for the workers. During our inspection of these houses we were impressed by the up-to-date architectural design, and inside we were gratified that in relation to air space, sanitary conveniences, and general opportunities for comfort, the houses were in many respects as good as the model cottages being built in England in connection with Government schemes.

From Grozny, we travelled to Baku, where we visited the most famous oilfields in the world; and here again we saw very striking evidence of the effect of Soviet rule and also the destructive effects of the struggle between the troops of contending nations to obtain possession of this immensely valuable oilfield. Here the wells exist in great number, and the equipment is on a large scale. Since the Revolution the plant has been electrified, and on the oilfield itself there is a large electrical department, where huge dynamos are at work, and the Soviet authorities have expeditiously carried out a scheme which had been discussed by private monopolists of the oilfields for over ten years.

During the investigation of the oilfields of Baku we were amazed and disgusted with the conditions of housing the workers which had formerly existed under private control. The living places were not huts; to attempt to dignify them with the name of houses would be wrong, and the nearest description we can give is the out-houses one finds in the worst slum areas at home. Long rows of dimly lighted buildings, one story high, with small windows and low-built doorways, and in some cases no flooring but the earth. In these hovels hordes of people of various nationalities had been housed under such conditions that would subject the owner of cattle in our own country to prosecution for cruelty if he kept his animals in a similar state. We have no hesitation in saying that these conditions of housing the people were the vilest and worst we have seen in Russia or in any parts of the world known to any of the Delegation. When we remembered that the output of oil from this district can be counted in hundreds of millions of poods and that millionaires have been created in abundance from these oilfields, our indignation and disgust at the treatment of the workers was unlimited.

As a contrast to these conditions, we were able to visit the new houses now being built out of oil profits by the Soviet Republic of the workers. The change can only properly be described as a remarkable revolution in the housing of the people. In addition to this we were very much impressed by the great changes which the Soviet Government is making in the social life in this the most famous oil center in the world. The profits from the oil industry, in addition to being used for housing, are being used for educational purposes, and have already been utilized for the development of a very efficient electrical tramway service, which had also been discussed as a project for many years by the millionaire capitalists, who drew enormous wealth from this area but left it in a backward, and one may also state, an uncivilized condition. The workmen's clubs and social institutions are utilized as centers of education for the workers. Further information regarding these institutions will be given in another part of the report.

From Baku, we travelled to Tiflis, and we were met by an enthusiastic demonstration of workers and Trade Union officials. We spent several days investigating factories both in Tiflis and the surrounding districts, and visited institutions, the Trade Union center, and the President of the Soviet Republic of Georgia. We visited a large railway shop, in which somewhere about 3,000 workmen are being employed in producing railway stock. Members of the Delegation addressed a mass meeting of the railway workers, and our visit was wound up by a remarkable demonstration in the main thoroughfare, witnessed by the Delegation from a special stand erected in the main street of the city—a demonstration which conveyed to us the impression that the workers of Tiflis were not in that state of oppression and subjection which certain reports we have read would appear to indicate. The demonstration appeared to reflect the strong, united approval of the workers in the present system of government in Georgia.

While visiting Tiflis we were aware that this city was the most contentious part of our tour, and special reference regarding our stay in Georgia will be found in the main body of the report. We have, however, to say here that our experiences in Georgia did not bear out the general impression which is being created by reports appearing in the capitalist Press and other newspapers intended to convey the impression that the population of Georgia is being held down in a state of suppression by a Russian Red Army of occupation.

We returned to Moscow from Tiflis and continued our investigations into industry, Government institutions, workmen's clubs, rest-houses, and other places. We also concluded our special inquiry into the alleged Zinoviev Letter used against the Labor Party during the election, and the results will be published.

We next visited the home of the Russian Revolution—Leningrad—and spent four days there for the purpose of visiting industrial undertakings, government departments, hospitals, orphanages, and other social institutions in and around the town. The reception of the Delegation at Leningrad exceeded any other demonstration of our tour. The civil population appeared in many thousands, lining the main thoroughfares of the city. A large demonstration was addressed by members of the Delegation, and the march through the city to our headquarters, headed by large battallions of sailors singing revolutionary songs and escored by regiments of soldiers will long be remembered by every member of the Delegation.

At Leningrad, we were conducted through the Winter Palace and passed through the royal apartments of the Czars. The magnificence and splendor of these rooms crowded with works of art, luxuriously furnished and in every way equipped with all the best modern civilization can produce, contrasted vividly with the extreme poverty of the Russian people which we know existed prior to the Revolution. In these apartments we noticed an abundance of works of art in gold and silver, inlaid with precious stones of priceless value. The reading rooms, libraries, sleeping apartments, drawing-rooms and State rooms of the Royal Palace were crowded with these gems. These apartments are now kept as a museum and the royal treasures are held in the name of the people. With the exception of one section of the palace, we saw no sign of any destruction due to violation within the walls of the palace. In every room, the books, paintings, chairs, tables, etc., were left exactly as they had been occupied by the royal residents and there had been no greedy invasion by a horde of savage proletarians taking possession of royal property such as we have had described in the columns of our capitalist newspapers. What will be the ultimate destiny of this royal home of the Tzars, this centre of oppression and persecution of a long-suffering people, we cannot say. In the meantime, one part of the royal palace is utilized to demonstrate the luxury of the old regime and the other is used as a revolutionary museum containing remarkable and startling evidence of the cruelties and barbarities practised upon the political opponents of the old order during the many years of revolutionary effort to establish the new.

The reader will require to read other books dealing with the royal palace to secure further details. We visited the scene of the massacre of Bloody Sunday (see frontispiece to Report), and penetrated inside the walls and into the rooms from which the orders were given to destroy the lives of the people clamoring for the barest recognition of political rights, but not without feelings of antagonism to the old order of autocracy and opression.

We also, during our visit to Leningrad, visited the burial place of the martyrs of the revolution and we could not leave this spot after our visit to the Winter Palace without being deeply impressed with the evidence of the long and bitter struggle that had taken place between the workers of Russia and their oppressors.

From Leningrad we started our return journey back to England, leaving there on December 15th, and arriving at Dover four days later. The Delegation had been occupied almost night and day either in travelling from one place to another or in investigating the conditions of Russia as thoroughly as time and opportunity would allow.

We have placed on record in the following reports the truth as we were able to observe and understand it. There are many problems with which we have not been able to deal, many institutions we were not able to investigate. We have placed on record the results of our labors in the hope that what we have to say will be of interest and use to those who desire to understand Russia and who are prepared without bias to examine the consequences which arise from the control of this great country by the workers who reside in it and who have secured this control by facing indescribable dangers and going through suffering unparalled in the history of world conflicts between race and race, class and class, and one form of civilization and another.

During our investigations we were assisted by experts who knew Russia and could speak the language, who had resided in Russia for years and who were well-informed regarding Russian institutions. We were not therefore, as many critics have said, in any way at the mercy of the appointed guides and interpreters of the Russian Government.

In this connection the Delegation unitedly wish to express their recognition of the services of the advisory delegates whose official training and traditions have enabled the Delegation to reproduce the character of an official report. In the following General Report, Chapter VI., on the Army was prepared by Captain Grenfell; Chapters I. to V. inclusive and VII. of Part I. (the Soviet Government System) were prepared by Mr. Young; Chapters VII., IX., X. of Part II. (the Soviet Social System) by Mr. McDonell. The Report on Labor Conditions and the Report on Trans-Caucasia were prepared by Mr. Young with the assistance of Mr. McDonell. The Report on the "Zinoviev" letter is being published separately. All these reports embody the unanimous conclusions arrived at by the delegates before leaving Russia.

INTRODUCTION

In publishing the following reports on present conditions in the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics the British Trades Union Delegation has done its best in the time and with the means at its disposal to present an objective review of the Russian Revolution in its most recent phases. Anyone who, like some members of that Delegation, is in a position to compare conditions at the height of War Communism in 1920 with those now prevailing under the New Economic Policy will realize at once that reports on conditions even as late as 1921 are worse than useless for arriving at an appreciation of present circumstances. The Russian Revolution is still developing with great rapidity both in its economic, political, and social organizations; but so far as can be humanly foreseen it will now continue to develop along the lines indicated in the following reports. There is no further necessity for, or probability of, another re-orientation such as that of the New Economic Policy, which has made most of the information, based on conditions of War Communism, so misleading.

The British Delegation does not wish to be regarded as apologists for the principles and procedures of Russian Communism—still less as advocates of its adoption in this country. "War Communism" was a product of Tsarism and intervention, and the "New Economic Policy" is a compromise adapted to economic and political conditions in the Union. But misrepresentations as to results of the Russian Revolution have been used as a "red herring" to divert and distract the British people from the pursuit of reforms and reconstructions essential to their own peace and prosperity.

The Trade Union Congress, therefore, feels it necessary to do all in its power to put the British electorate in possession of the real facts in Russia. The object of this report is to enable the British electorate, in the first place, to realize that the Russian Revolution has no real relationship at all to British evolution, and, in the second place, that the present results of the Revolution are represented by a new State, already very powerful and likely to be very prosperous.

As to the equipment of the Delegation for this task it will perhaps be enough to say that in respect of the Trade Union Delegates it was composed of men whose political tradition tended to make them critical of the Communist philosophy and policy, and who had each an expert knowledge of, at least, one of the branches of industry under inspection. Further, the advisory delegates were men who had long official training in inquiring into and reporting on foreign countries, and who had a thorough knowledge of the language and of Russia under previous conditions. That these advisory delegates were in a position to get into contact with opposition opinion and to take a point of view other than that of Labor partisans will be evident from an incident mentioned in the report on Georgia.

The public utterances of the Delegation in Russia were naturally concerned with that which it was honestly able to admire and applaud in what it saw of the results of the Russian Revolution. This publication now as honestly conveys all that it found to criticise. It will be no doubt be rejected by some readers on the ground that the Delegation's activities were controlled—or even that artificial conditions were constructed for its benefit. As to this the following reports must answer for themselves. It should, it is hoped, be obvious that an inquiry of this character conducted by specialists, though it may, in spite of every precaution, contain mistakes, could not be based on general misconceptions or misrepresentations.

The Delegation was given every official facility for the prosecution of its inquiry—and without such ready and reliable assistance it would have been impossible to have covered so wide a field or to have gone so far below the surface as it is hoped these reports will prove was done. And as, in the present condition of opinion, this official assistance will of itself be a cause of suspicion, the Delegation would add that its conclusions are based on data obtained from source by its own experts, and that in each important particular it has checked the official point of view with that of the opposition.

There was no difficulty in getting contact with opinion of every shade. Each member of the delegation had an authorization which enabled him to enter into any Government building, factory, club, hospital, police court, prison, or private house without any guide and without any previous notice. These authorizations were made full use of by those members who spoke the language and knew the country. The Delegation came well provided with means of getting into touch with opposition opinion, and was kept continuously in contact with it. The only case of interference with such communications and the action taken by the Delegation, is dealt with in the report on Georgia. Moscow was not implicated in this, but it showed that had any such case occurred in the Russian Federation it would not have escaped the Delegation's notice.

The object, then, of these reports is to review the advantages and disadvantages accruing to the people of Russia under the new system of Government, and whether the balance either way is tending to increase or diminish.

In this respect the most contentious point is the degree of political liberty for the individual resulting from the recent re-orientations of the Russian Revolution, especially since the abandonment of War Communism. In this respect, on the point of principle, the Delegation takes note of the assertion of the present rulers that the present administration is a "dictatorship of the proletariat" under the direction of the Communist Party, and that "democracy" as understood elsewhere has no place in it. This amounts to a denial in principle of individual political liberty as hitherto understood. And in practice there is a complete control not only of the Press, the platform and the political machinery, but of the schools, universities, and Army. It is obvious that a political system based on the assumption of such government authority by a minority can be judged best by results. It is with these results, not with the political philosophy of Russian Communism, that these reports are mainly concerned.

A reading of these reports, however, may suggest a conclusion, that is very probably correct, that the control by the Communists of the central authority is not so absolute as is claimed. The present tendency seems to be that the Communist organization is becoming more and more distinct from the Government, more and more a religion—a sort of State Church with an educational function. The governmental organs and the representative system are moving rapidly along lines that make their central control by a Communist caucus increasingly difficult. In other words, recent developments are towards a "democracy" in the sense of a Government based on the expressed approval of a majority of the electorate, not merely on its tacit acceptance.

The Soviet system at present consists of a series of compromises, most of them in constant change. One of the most striking characteristics of the present regime is its readiness to recognize failure. Should a Communist theory fail to give the required results it is scrapped for all practical purposes as ruthlessly as any Tsarist tradition. On the other hand, should ideas or institutions or individuals associated with the old order prove useful instruments there is no hesitation in using them.

At the same time, the precautions intended to prevent these compromises from carrying revolution right round into reaction have been very carefully elaborated as a result of constant experiment, and have so far been effective. The main safeguards are an absolute control of capital, credit, foreign commerce and concessions; and a supervision of all large private capitalistic enterprises through inspectors recruited from the working class operating under experts. Meantime, the Russian Communists hope that education of the younger generation in a collectivist creed and a civic conscience instilled with all the fervour of a religion will remove any risk of a relapse into reaction when the present precautions are relaxed.

Although Russian Communists themselves repudiate any suggestion that there has been a change in the fundamental principles of their political creed, or anything more than temporary tactical retirements, yet it seems clear to the Delegation that the present Communist system has by way of complicated compromises arrived at a condition that is not Communism, but would be better described as a form of State Socialism or State Capitalism; and this without prejudice to the preaching of Communist ideals and the practice of severe devotion and discipline by those who take the vows. This is the same process that very rapidly took place in the case of other creeds that had originally a Communist character.

The conclusions arrived at by the Delegation as to the main compromises now in force in political, financial, economic, commercial, judicial, and social affairs will be found at the end of each chapter, and a final verdict at the end of Part I. of the Report on Labor Conditions. In presenting these conclusions its members have tried not to be biased by the atmosphere of cordiality and confidence which surrounded them from their arrival in Moscow, or by the attitude of sympathy for, and solidarity with, their fellow-workers in which they left London. They have earnestly endeavoured to present a report such as any body of their fellow countrymen would have made had it the same facilities. They are well aware that it would have been much better done had the resources of the British Government been available for what is properly a governmental function—the publication of reliable information as to political, social, and commercial conditions of one of the principal European peoples. But no official information has been so published that might counteract the ridiculous slanders by which public opinion is being misled. As, moreover, there can be no peace and progress in European civilisation until the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics is admitted on a basis of general agreement to a free and friendly footing in the community of peoples, the Trades Union Congress General Council has undertaken this task, and its Delegation has endeavoured to carry it out with a full sense of its responsibilities.

GENERAL REPORT.

PART I

GOVERNMENT SYSTEM.

CHAPTER I

Political.

Federalism and Nationalism

The Russian Revolution, after revolving to the left with great rapidity, reached its noon-tide in the War Communism of 1920, and since then has been returning by the right through a series of very complicated compromises. Of these compromises, one of the most interesting, and possibly the most instructive for other States of federal structure, is the combination of nationalism and internationalism, of central authority and local autonomy, achieved in the Union constitution.

The Revolution was originally international in its ideals, but the refusal of other countries to respond to its appeals, and the reprisals of unrevolutionised Governments against the Revolution in the series of raids into Russia, soon gave the revolutionary Government a national character. If the Union still owes much of its structure to internationalism, it now owes most of its strength to nationalism.

But of all European Empires that of Russia was the most variegated in the national cultures of its minorities, and the first effect of the Revolution was to rave those minorities from the repression and russification to which they had been subjected under Tsarism. The result was that on the one side there was rapidly developing a novel and highly centralised State Socialism, and on the other new and highly sensitive local nationalities. It was this apparent divergence that was exploited in the interventions of the foreign enemies of the Revolution. Had the revolutionary regime had an imperialist and not an internationalist facade and a bureaucratic, not a socialist foundation, it must certainly have fallen when Koltchak or Denikin advanced to within a few miles of Moscow.

That it did not so fall but was actually fortified by the strain was, no doubt, due to the fact that in a State structure founded on socialist solidarity the nationalist sentiment of minorities can exist and even be encouraged without danger of separatism. The revolutionary regime in Moscow has consequently been able to allow every regional, racial, and religious minority such autonomy as would satisfy the quantity and quality of its national sentiment. The result is an association of more or less amalgamated autonomous Federations and Republics of as national a growth and as varied a relationship as that of the British Empire; but so far without the frictions and collisions from which the British Empire has suffered and still suffers.

It its first stage the rule of the R. S. F. S. R. and the role of Moscow as the central authority were in their undefined character not unlike those of the United Kingdom and of London over the Empire. But as a result of a treaty concluded in December, 1922, the Act of Union of July 6th, 1923, incorporated the four sovereign Soviet Federations in one Commonwealth or Union. The authority of the Union is constitutionally restricted to the powers given by the Act of Union under the contract of these Federations. The autonomies of the subordinate Republics, on the other hand, are restricted to the terms of their concessions from the sovereign Federations. The resulting relationships are very interesting and instructive, but an investigation of them from the material at the Delegation's disposal would lead too far from the main object of this report. An idea of the constitutional interdependence of the various constituents of the Union can be got from the annexed diagram.

Character of the Union

It results therefrom that though the Revolution was Russian the Union is not. The Union is, in its ideal, an international institution. Moreover, not only has any nation outside the Union a right of adhesion to the Union, and any nation inside a right of secession from it, but a worker of any nationality, whether within or without the Union, if he or she is resident in the Union, has, without further formality, all rights of citizenship there. The Union is not Russia but U. S. S. Ria. Its Army is not the Russian Army but the Red Army. Its flag is the Red Flag of Universal Brotherhood. Its silver coinage has for device the sickle and hammer, and for motto, "Workers of the World Unite."

This is one side of the shield. The other aspect is that Moscow, in fact, governs the Union, and the same men who rule the Russian Federation rule also the Union. Moreover, the present tendency is towards making the Union, that is, Moscow, all-powerful, while at the same time giving Home Rule to every race or region that asks for it. How can these two policies be carried on conjointly without coming into collision? How can new nationalities in the first flush of freedom after long subjection to repression and russification be got on the one hand to accept, without friction, federal control and on the other hand to accord, without force, full autonomy to their own cultural minorities?

The Ukraine

The Delegation had an opportunity of getting an answer in Kharkov, the capital of the Ukraine. Kharkov is the most prosperous industrial town of the Ukraine, itself the most prosperous region of the Union. The Ukraine, or, as it used to be called, Little Russia, is also the center and source of the music, poetry, painting, and craftsmanship, of the costumes and customs, that represent for us Russian culture. It is proud of this cultural superiority to Great Russia, White Russia, and the other regions, and is profiting fully by its new liberty to develop its language and literature. In Kharkov, therefore, if anywhere one might expect to find a separatist sentiment. All the more that Communism is not congenial to the Little Russian temperament and tradition.

But Kharkov did not seem jealous of Moscow. Perhaps the bullet-splashes and shell-holes of foreign efforts to exploit such sentiment were still too recent. Perhaps because the Ukrainians after being bullied for centuries by the Tsars for singing their national songs and indulging their national sentiment are very well satisfied with their present bargain with the Union.

The bargain between Moscow and Kharkov seems in itself sound, and satisfactory to both parties. Its terms are evident from the moment of stepping on the station platform, where all notices are printed bilingually—Russian in black and Ukranian in red. Its economic terms become evident on the streets where private trading greatly predominates over that of Government trusts and co-operatives; though out of polite consideration for Communist susceptibilities much private trading is thinly disguised by two or three partners constituting themselves as a co-operative. The bargain is perhaps most evident in the schools and theatres, which are revelling in a regular orgy of national sentiment.

In return the Ukrainian has no objection to an efficient Red Army securing him against being again ravaged by a reactionary

Denikin or a Wrangel or a Petliura. For he has his own magnificent mounted militia in huge shaggy caps and long frogged coats keeping Ukrainian order in Ukrainian streets. The Union collects his taxes and returns him what it can. But he has his own Budget and local revenues to spend on local objects. If his clothes cost him more than in Moscow, his food is cheaper. He works in his factory from eight to two, and after dinner can, if he likes, attend an art school free, which undertakes in three years to teach him to get his living by some art or craft. The night the Delegation was there he could choose for his entertainment between a lecture by Karl Radek (of the Third International), on Leninism, a performance of the no less international "Charley's Aunt," or a highly-national ballet, with topical songs in which jokes about the Soviet system were discreetly veiled in Ukrainian.

Kharkov is to Moscow somewhat as Munich is to Berlin, but instead of being like Munich, a centre of separatism and reaction, it is making a cultural contribution to the Union that will become one of its strongest bonds. All the same Moscow prefers that the Ukrainian capital should be at Kharkov with its industrial proletariat rather than return to the historic capital in agricultural Kiev. For in Kiev, a market center of large farmers, one of the Delegation found there would be some "Kulaks" who, if they no longer feared a fourth occupation by the Whites, might welcome a third evacuation by the Reds.

The success in satisfying national aspirations without sacrificing central authority is in respect of the Ukraine and the principal minorities, the main defensive bulwark of the Union. In respect of other minorities it may undoubtedly become a bastion, not without menace to less successful neighbours. The visit of the Delegation coincided with the creation of several new autonomies, many of them with a significance extending beyond the frontier of the Union. Those in Central Asia could not be brought under investigation and are, therefore, not referred to.

Moldavia

But the Autonomous Republic of Moldavia, founded on December 1st, was visited a fortnight later by one of the advisory Delegates. It was found that the establishment of this little Moldavian Commmunity with its population of half-a-million or so, on the borders of Bessarabia was not, as had been supposed, a diplomatic maneuver of Moscow, but a local appeal to, and application of, the right of such a region to Home Rule. It was remarkable, in the first place, that though the establishment of this A. M. S. S. R. involved the separation from the Ukraine of a territory of some strategic and economic importance, and the secession of a considerable Little Russian population, yet there was apparently no opposition at all in Kharkov to conceding the claim. It was also very recognisable in the second place, that the existence of this free Moldavia developing its own national culture and communal life, must make a very compelling appeal to the kindred population of the neighboring province of Bessarabia, at present held down by a military occupation of a highly martial character.

With one possible exception—that of Georgia—which is dealt with in a separate report, the Union structure appears to allow a measure of liberty to national minorities that compares very well with that of any other state.

Jews in the Soviet State

There has been a persistent effort made to represent the Soviet system as rather Jewish than Russian. Jews are, of course, prominent politically, as they are in all successful and well-established societies. But neither the ideals nor the institutions of the system are Jewish, and such influence as Jews exercise under it is due to their intelligence and competence as public servants, not as elsewhere to their capacity for accumulating private wealth and controlling the machinery of capital and credit. On the international side of Communism, such as the Comintern, Jewish employes are numerous, as is natural enough from their special qualifications. But in the Commissariat of Foreign Affairs they have lost most of the prominence they held in 1920.

In respect of their religion, Jews enjoy an equal tolerance with other religions, and, as will be described later, liberty in respect of religion is much greater not only than before the Revolution but than in many European countries. For example, the Salvation Army is now free to work there.

Constitutional Rights

The question of political liberty is one of greater difficulty. The Delegation finds no confirmation of the allegations frequently made that the present Communist regime has deprived the Soviet system set up by the Revolution of all representative character and real vitality. The Soviet system, that is government by committees representing every real relationship, whether political, occupational, or regional, is a spontaneous form of organization that emerges in contemporary revolutions. Attempts to associate it in Russia with the Mir or Village Commune and the Artel or Craft Union are fallacies. And in Russia as elsewhere this primitive revolutionary organisation, if it was going permanently to replace the previous governmental structure, had to go through a rapid process of elimination of the unnecessary and evolution of the essential. This process of converting an eruption of primitive organisms into the elaborate governmental organisation required by a modern community is being successfully worked out in Moscow. The Soviet system has lost not vitality by being brought nearer to maturity.

The Soviet governmental structure will not be dealt with in detail by this report. It has been fully described elsewhere and is so fundamntally different from other States that a superficial review serves no useful purpose. It must be enough to say that the peculiar principles of its structure, such as the fusion of executive and administrative functions and the foundation of all authority on indirect election, do not of themselves account for the autocratic authority of the present rulers. The importance of this significant factor working for world trade union unity, makes it invaluable in taking bundle orders of the DAILY WORKER for trade union meetings and to get subscriptions among organized workers.

Meanwhile preparations are being completed by the Internationol Publishers Co. for the appearance of RUSSIA TODAY in book form about August 15.

In England 50,000 copies of RUSSIA TODAY were sold in a short while and the great response in this country is sure to bring an enormous demand.

RUSSIA TODAY will be published in two editions, one in Duroflex covers at $1.25 and the other Cloth bound at $1.75.

Both can be ordered from THE DAILY WORKER and will be shipped immediately they are off the press.

the contrary, the Soviet system permits a perpetual change of personnel and of policy without the periodic pendulum swings of party politics. It is not to be supposed that the policy of the Union Government remains the same because there has been no general change of politicians or that the politicians remain unchanged because there is no change of party. A glance at the accompanying diagram of the governmental structure will suggest that such a new and strange organism will operate in an unfamiliar manner.

Franchise

The franchise is given to all above 18 without distinction of sex or religion, or even nationality. It is restricted theoretically to those who work, which includes soldiers and women houseworkers. Practically it is universal suffrage subject to certain exclusions, such as employers of labour, those living from unearned income, private traders and their agents, priests and monks, lunatics, criminals, and the other usual disqualifications. The franchise and electoral system in Russia can better be understood by approaching it from the point of view of the British Trade Union arrangements than from those of a Parliamentary system.

Elections

The procedure of election was first generally regulated by decree of August 31st, 1922, and the actual practice seems still to vary very considerably. Urban, Provincial, District, Parish, and Village Electoral Committees of three members are appointed, representing equally the local authorities and Trade Unions, under a chairman appointed by the Superior Electoral Committee. These committees are in charge of the election and draw up a register of those disfranchised, which is published a week before elections. Protests against disfranchisement must be immediately dealt with by the competent superior committee. The election is carried out in an electoral meeting conducted by the committee or its agents, and organised for each factory, group of villages, or Trade Union branch. The representative of the committee announces the name of the candidates, and voting then takes place by a show of hands or by ballot, and by party lists or by candidate, as may be decided by the Povincial Electoral Committee. This decision was made, previously to the existing regulation, by the meeting itself, and the actual procedure varies very considerably. A show of hands is the most usual method, but in several towns, for example, Orenburg and Kostroma, voting is reported on good authority to be by ballot. Investigations into local elections at Odessa showed no other procedure than show of hands. On one occasion candidates were asked to leave the room during voting; but this was subsequently disallowed. The fact seems to be that conditions of election in Russia are so different in the absence of any possibility of economic pressure on the electors, that there is no demand for secrecy. If an organized opposition to Communism should develop, this demand may have to be met. But the whole electoral system gives the impression that it is at an early stage of development. There does not seem to be anything to prevent any locality from developing it along the lines followed in partisan electoral systems. (Thus in some towns, for example, Orenburg, the voting is said to be conducted on a system of proportional representation.) If less than half the electoral vote, the election is cancelled and held again. On the second occasion, it is final whatever the total vote.

An inquiry was made into the results of local elections in the Odessa Government by an advisory member of the Delegation then present at Odessa. The results in the elections for Odessa Town Soviets showed an increase of Communists and of women. Thus out of 910 acting delegates 530 were Communists, 335 non-party, and 45 Young Communists, while 175 were women. Of the 319 substitute delegates, 111 were Communists, 174 non-party, and 34 Young Communists, while 169 were women. Voting was nearly always by list prepared by the factory committee or local committee—which were Communist. But there was no hesitation in rejecting candidates thus recommended, in favour of non-partisans.

In the rural elections there was said t obe a marked increase crease of interest since last year, about half th electorate attending the electoral meetings, which is satisfactory in view of the season and distances sometimes involved. The list was at least on one occasion the subject of lively discussion, many amendments being made. The numbers of women elected rose from 7 per cent. last year to 16 per cent., and in some cases was as high as 25 per cent. The percentage of Communists rose from 10 per cent. to 15 per cent., and of soldiers from 1 per cent. to 4 per cent. About half the delegates were re-elected. There was a larger number from the poorest peasantry, the percentage of middle peasants elected falling from 33 per cent. to 20 per cent. No general discontent with the system of elections could be found among the peasants, though points of detail were criticised. And there was evidence of a realisation that the object of the present system was to teach them to govern themselves.

Rpresentative System

Political representation in Russia has developed into a very complicated system of indirect election from local to central congresses with cross connections. It would require a volume to deal adequately with its development. Many such have been published, and it can only be indicated here by the annexed diagram. Examination of its workings suggests that the traditional objections to indirect election in a parliamentary system based solely on regional representation do not apply for the most part to occupational representation as under the Soviet system. Vitality in the electoral function is retained through all the supervening stages of the pyramid. The candidate appeals to the electors on the record of his services, and is ruthlessly rejected if they are insufficient or unsatisfactory, whether he is a Communist or not. And though the system does tend to keep the same men permanently at the top, yet it also keeps them in continuous and close contact with the electorate. Moreover, though the same Government seems to be permanently in power, there is a perpetual penetration of the administration by new men who are the results of promotion by merit. The rulers of the inner ring remain in power because of the tacit consent of a great majority of the electorate and the active support of that motive force of the whole machine—the Communist Party.

Communism

But the Communist Party is itself changing its character. The New Economic Policy has made quality more important to Russian Communism than quantity. Until then the party was in reality not only the motive force, but an important mechanism of Government. But thereafter it has become an organisation for the promotion of a policy and the preservation of principles that are distinct and may become different from the policy and principles of the Government.

The Comintern

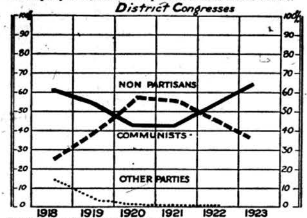
This is especially noticeable in relations between the point of view and policy of the Communist International and those of the Commissariat of Foreign Affairs. The Delegation had peculiar advantages for arriving at an appreciation of both; and for assessing the necessary difference, and even divergence, between the proselytising and propagandist policy of the Comintern and the practical real-politik of the Commissariat. The function of the Comintern is to keep to the front the internationalist creed of Communism and the crusade for revolution. The Commissariat is concerned with the renewal and maintenance of friendly relations with foreign Governments. The results seem to be reminiscent of the familiar friction between Foreign Missions and foreign missionaries. Indeed, just as Communism in one aspect can best be understood in its origin as a new Religious Order of devotion and discipline, so it may possibly be that the future of the Comintern is not so much as a publicity department of a political party as a preaching order. The emissaries of Lenin may have a future not unlike the missionaries of Loyola.

The Communist Party

It is in this direction that the present policy of the Communist Party appears to be tending. Under War Communism an effort was made to embody the whole electorate in the Communist Party. The New Economic Policy, however, made it obvious that if the principles of the Revolution were to be preserved the party must to a certain extent dissociate itself from concessions and compromises so as to preach, and as far as possible, practice pure doctrine. This led to the present conception of Russian Communism as a nucleus composed of stalwarts who survive a severe probation and periodic "purges." This nucleus vitalises a mass of non-partisans; who apparently contentedly accept the status of a line regiment from which the best men are continually being drafted into the Communist guard. The non-partisan is, however, now given a fairer chance of election, and even of official employment, outside the highest and innermost circles. He predominates sometimes, as the diagrams show, in the lower strata of the political structure and penetrates individually to all but the highest. He is aided in this by the readiness of the Communist rulers to employ anyone who may be of practical use regardless of politics. If a "White" general, who was Wrangel's Chief of Staff and was notorious for wholesale executions of Communists, is now controlling the General Staff, ex-Social Revolutionaries and Menshevists who as non-partisans hold posts under the Government need not renounce any ambitions. And the jealousy of Communists among non-Communists obvious in 1920 does not seem noticeable today.

The Russian Communist conception of Communism as a "nucleus" or "cell" (yatcheika) not only expresses the present position of the party within the body politic, but also the policy of the party within the proletariat. The party no longer relies on mere accretion. It works by leavening the lump through a "nucleus" in every factory and, theoretically, in every village; though in villages the Communist "centre" is often non-existent or dormant.

The party is made up to about half of industrial workers, the other half being divided between employes and peasants, rather more of the former than the latter, and with the latter yearly decreasing. Admission to membership and retention of it are now a matter of prayer and fasting. Proletarians and peasants must pass a probation of six months as candidates and be vouched for by two members. Others must remain candidates for two years and get six guarantors. Members are tested every year or so by oral examination, about 10 per cent. being eliminated. Any anti-Communist action entails expulsion, such as a religious marriage, circumcision as a religious ceremony, and so forth. The Communist Party now prides itself on the annual reduction of its membership as much as it previously did on its increase under War Communism. The total membership rose from 23.6 thousand in 1917, 115.5 in 1918, 280.5 in 1919, 431.4 in 1920 to 585.6 in 1921. Since then it has fallen to 401.3 in 1922, 373 in 1923, and 350 thousand in 1924. Anyone who has seen a Communist after being under viva-voce for several hours in his annual examination will find him in a state of exhaustion and anxiety such as few Civil Service candidates experience. The devotion and discipline exacted from him while in the party are such as few public servants would endure.



Possibilities of Party Government

Such an organisation might enable the governmental system to retain its vitality without the usual stimulus of an official opposition. For all opposition is as yet silenced. But the need of it is not so much felt owing to the extraordinary candour and criticism of those conducting affairs, and their readiness to conform their policy to new requirements of the moment. The constant elections and discussions at congresses keep those in power in touch with opinion; while the continuous stream of official publications and pronouncements keeps opinion informed of any defects that may develop in the system and of the proposals for reform. In fact, the critical functions of an opposition both in the Press and on the platform are largely performed by the Government itself. The speeches of political leaders are generally critical lectures on economics, not the appeals to passion and partisanship that are found necessary elsewhere.

It is conceivable even to those whose political experience is entirely based on a party system of Progessives and Conservatives, that a Government might keep itself alive and active on these lines. But it is, perhaps, more probable that Russian Communism will again compromise with conventional politics by developing a two-party system and a constitutional opposition. So long as Lenin was alive his ability and authority were sufficient to force upon what may be called conservative Communism such necessary concessions as the New Economic Policy. But there is no personality big enough to fill the functions of an opposition party and compel a conservative clique to meet the requirements of the matter and the moment. Up to 1920 there still survived the relics of a recognised opposition in the Menshevists and a section of the Social Revolutionaries. But this opposition was made illegal during the height of War Communism. And there is now no prospect of an opposition developing from a readmission of Menshevists and S. R.'s to constitutional co-operation. The rank and file of these parties have, one way or another, joined the majority, and the leaders that are left in exile or in prison are too embittered to be of any future use. Organised opposition must under present conditions come from within the Communist Party itself.

The Growth of an Opposition

The party is quite aware of this possibility. Up to now itt policy has been to manitain unity at all costs. In this it has so far been successful. Thus at the Seventh Party Congress there was an opposition of over one-fourth in respect of the Brest-Litovsk Treaty. In the Tenth Congress of 1921 there was an opposition of one-eighth in the controversy as to the future of Trade Unionism. At the Thirteenth Congress there was no declared opposition at all, which desired result was reached by previously reducing the ranks of the party by one-third.

But the present controversy between Trotsky and the Communist Old Guard suggests that an official opposition may be in process of formation within the party. Trotsky, who only jonied the party just in time to take a prominent part in the October Revolution, represents liberal non-conformity as aganist die-hard communism. He represents the point of view of the more intellctual and independent non-partisan elements and also of the younger and more progressive members of the party. So far the points on which he has come into collision with the conservatives are only significant to those well acquainted with Russian political conditions, and his position on such issues seems generally to have been unsound. But it would appear that we have in his independent initiatvie the embryo of an opposition whose business it would be to oppose and to get power by any constitutional means.

No immediate development of this sort is, however, to be expected. The whole Press is against this movement, there is no popular issue at present involved, and the appeal to maintain party unity will for some time be too strong to be resisted. Trotsky has been ordered by the party to resign his government office, has loyally accepted the decision, and the incipient rift in the party has been closed. But good Communists, not followers of Trotsky, ar eprepared to admit in confidential conversation that this closuring of all independent and initiative has been a mistake. They also are prepared to admit that there is a tendency of the Communists in control to become conservative, and that some provision must be made to represent more progressive points of view. It seems probable that if the Communist organisation is to remain the driving and directing power of the State it will have to divide between a conservative point of view that is practically reactionary in its ideal of reviving a regime of War Communism and a progressive policy that will be radical in its search for new solutions and new settlements.

Amnesty and Political Prisoners

The delegation, concerned as it was with restoring friendly relations between the British and Russian peoples, lost no opportunity of putting before those in authority the advantages that would accrue abroad to the present regime from a generous amnesty. It found an appreciation of its arguments, but an apprehension lest such clemency might lead to further bloodshed. It was given an opportunity of a free conversation with the most dangerous opponents of the present Government now in prison—the Social Revolutionary leaders condemned to death two years ago and since then confined in Boutirka. The conversation was held with the prisoners in a body in the corridor on to which their rooms opened, and not within the hearing of any Government official. It was evident from it that the prisoners would reject release on any condition restricting their future liberty of action. Also that the present conditions of their confinement were (inconsqunce, they said, of a hunger strike) as good as those of first-class misdemeanants in England. One of them who had experience of Tsarist prisons prided himself on the superiority of the Socialist Boutirka. In fact, the only alleviations of their lot they could suggest was permission to get foreign Labour papers—they being at present restricted to the "bourgeois" Press. This hardship the Delegation succeeded in removing. But the Delegation did not feel, in the circumstances, that it could take the serious responsibility of pressing for the release of such irreconcilables. It is, however, still of opinion that even with these men and women, clever and courageous though they are, as they are now quite without a following in Russia and without a practical programme, their exile would be less prejudicial to the present Government than their further confinement; and that clemency would be even more wise in less important cases.

The Delegation came to Russia fully informed as to the reports in circulation concerning conditions among political prisoners confined in the old Solovyetsky Monastery in the White Sea. A suggestion that the Delegation should send a deputation there met with no opposition; but it was found to be a season at which the island was inaccessible. All recent correspondence from the prisoners was offered for inspection, and should a Labour Delegation wish to undertake next spring the long journey thither every facility will be given it. The Delegation cannot therefore express an opinion as to the truth or falsity of reports and rumours it has been unable itself to investigate. But it took every opportunity that offered of pointing out the disadvantages of imprisoning political offenders in places that give colour to such reports.

"Reign of Terror"

As to the persistent assertions in the Press that the present regime in Russia is a "reign of terror," the Delegation would wish to put on record tis conviction that this could not be honestly believed by any unprejudiced person travelling within the Union and talking to its citizens. A government established by armed revolution and calling itself a "dictatorship" will be suspect of having no sanction but force long after this has ceased to be the case. And there is certainly often reluctance to resist either men or masures put forward by Communists that is inspird more by apprehension than affection. But it is hoped that this and the following chapters will at least suggest htat a regime as therein described could not possibly be based on a "reign of terror."

General Conclusion

Finally the Delegation is of the opinion that the Soviet system of representation and its scheme of constitutional and civil rights, so far from being undemocratic in the widest sense of the word, given in many respects to the individual a more real and reasonable opportunity of participation in public than does parliamentary and party government. In other respects, such participation is still severely restricted. For the syste mhas as yet been kept under close control by its originators with the tacit consent of an immense majority of their fellow electors. This consent can be accounted for partly by the energy and efficiency with which these leaders carried the country through one crisis after another, and partly by loyalty to the pioneers of the Revolution. But this permanence in power is a result of past circumstances, not of the present constitution. Under that constitution there are ceraliny as great—and possibly greater—possibilities than elsewhere in respect of popular government, political peace, and social progress.

BRITISH L[illegible] FIGHTS SOLIDLY AGAINST [illegible]CKS OF BOSSES; NEW ALL[illegible] OF GREAT UNIONS

By LELAND OLDS

(Federated Press Industrial Editor)

The British master class aims to split the labor front now rapidly forming in the face of the recent employer offensive in the coal, railroad and metal industries. It is trying to raise a bogey to frighten cautious union leaders into hopping once more on the capitalist band wagon.

The cry of Bolshevik has recently served the purpose as the cry Jacobin did in the days of the French revolution. Many labor leaders will run to support the present government to avoid the bolshevik label. It is possible that the British masters are holding a break with Russia on the Chinese issue up their sleeve to spring it at the psychological moment. Foreign secretary Austen Chamberlain's statement that he "must reserve to his majesty's government full liberty to take whatever action they think is required" sounds ominous.

Unionism In War Was Sedition.

The entrance of England into the war against Germany in 1914 applied a similar check to the vigorous growth of the first industrial alliance of coal miners, railwaymen and transport workers. To push labor's offensive became for the next four or five years tantamount to sedition and the label pro-German tended to silence most opposition to capitalist exploitation.

Now a more powerful quadruple alliance of miners, railway men, transport workers and shipbuilders is being perfected. Meetings on July 4 and 17 of the representatives of these unions with a membership of over 5,000,000 approved the constitution of the New Consolidated Indsutrial Alliance. The London Daily Herald understands the outlines to be:

New Alliance's Provisions

"Any union in trouble shall first exhaust its own procedure in negotiation. If deadlock is reached and the union needs assistance the executive of the alliance is to be notified. Such steps shall then be taken by the allied unions, including strike action, as may be necessary to insure victory for the union in dispute."

The constitution has been referred to the unions with the recommendation that they speedily ratify. Meanwhile the miners are placing their chief hope in the support pledged by the British Trades Union Congress.

The capitalist press is terming this development a part of the Communist scheme to capture control of British trade unions. The press hopes to widen the split between the MacDonald-Clynes-Henderson-Thomas group in control of the Independent Labor Party and the Purcell-Bromley-Tillett-Thorne group in the trades union congress.

Purcell Now In Parliament

This breach was apparent in the recent election of Purcell to parliament from the Forest of Dean. A. A. Purcell is vice-chairman of the Trades Union Congress and president of the Amsterdam International. Although not a Communist he led in bringing about an understanding between British and Russian trade unionists and was chairman of the British delegation which made a remarkable report on conditions in Russia. The cautious labor party chiefs, further irritated by Communists attacks, refused to support his candidacy.

WASHINGTON, July 26.—The census bureau announced today that 37,858,211 cotton spinning spindles were in place in the United States on June 30, of which 32,500,896 were in operation at some time during the month, compared with 33,147,652 in May. The aggregate number of spinning hours in June was 7,600,315,825.

AS WE SEE IT

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY

AMERICAN warships have reached Australia and the capitalists have hung out the flags to welcome them. Great consternation was caused among the babbitry thru the action of the street carmen in calling a strike. "What?" said the patriots, "insult our American friends in this fashion!" Perhaps the striking street carmen did not know what the naval visit was all about, but they knew instinctively that it was not their show. They also raised their voices in behalf of the political prisoners held in American dungeons and made the visit of Morgan's fleet the occasion for making their protests heard.

IT is a long hop from Australia to Chicago. Here the street carmen have a magnificent building, which is used by many organizations for the purpose of holding meetings. Representatives of the joint council of action of three New York locals of the International Ladies' Garment Workers Union hired this hall for the purpose of holding a meeting to protest against the expulsion policy of Sigman, Perlstein and company. The reactionaries got Edward Nockels of the Chicago Federation of Labor to pull wires with the management and the hall was refused to the rank and file.

IF Marx raised the slogan of: "Workers of the, world unite" for the proletariat, the unwritten slogan of the reactionaries is: "Fakers of the world unite." They have certainly united here in America. The labor fakers have a vested interest in the capitalist system. Their ideal of trade unionism is co-operation with the bosses. This means comfort and idleness for them. But the workers cannot afford co-operation with the bosses, no matter how much they like peace. The fakers will get the worst of the fight in the end.

THE campagin of vice-president Dawes for revision of the senate rules is doomed ot failure, according to reliable reports coming from Swampscott, Mass., where Coolidge is holding his summer court. Calvin does not care much about the senate but he cares a lot about the 1928 republican nomination for the presidency. It is no secret that Dawes and Cal don't get along very well together. Dawes likes to talk and Cal does not. Dawes makes better copy than Cal and the little Vermont politician wants to keep his rival out of the limelight. The big business men prefer Calvin to Dawes. Cal does the job very nicely for them. Charley might hop over the traces occasionally.

RED INTERNATIONAL OF LABOR UNIONS GREETS WORKERS OF PARIS

MOSCOW, July 3.—(By Mail)—The executive bureau of the Red International of Labor Unions sends the following greetings to the workers congress of the Paris district:

The executive bureau of the Red International of Labor Unions greets the representatives of the proletariat who have come together at the workers congress of the Paris district and observes with satisfaction that despite the social democratic leaders, various working class organizations are taking part in the congress. It congratulates the organizers of the congress on the results which have already been obtained in the efforts for the establishment of the united front against the Morocco war which is demanded by French imperialism alone, and requests the participants in the congress to work for the quickest realization of trade union unity. Long Live the workers congress of the Paris district! Down with the Morocco war! Long Live the unity of action of the working class!

PROVE 3 GERMAN FASCISTS GUILT IN SOVIET COURT

Plotted Murder of Soviet Officials

MOSCOW, U. S. S. R.—The trial of the three German fascists who came to the Soviet Union to practice espionage and attempt the assasination of high Soviet officials has brot out that the plot was no mere adventure, but an organized attempt to undermine the Soviet Union.

Yaroslavsky, chairman of the trial here, when questioned by representatives of the press, replied showing that the evidence conclusively proves the guilt of the three fascists, who posed as students on a scientific expedition. They also forged Communist documents.

The questions put to Yaroslavsky, together with the answers, follow:

Forged Communist Documents.

First question: What points does the court consider as decisive against the accused?

Answer: Naturally, the statements of Kindermann and his letters to Djerjinski and Kalinin, were decisive, as these statements moved Dittmar and Baumann to open confession. The statements of the latter are valuable because they corroborate the first statements of Kindermann. During

Street Carmen of Massachusetts Ask 12c an Hour Raise

BOSTON, July 26. (FP)—Twelve hundred and fifty union carmen of the Eastern Massachusetts Street Railway Co. ask increase in wages from 63 to 75 cents per hour from a special arbitration board consisting of a representative each of union and company, with a third arbitrator chosen by the first two. Any increase granted will be retroactive to May 1 last.

PEORIA, Ill., July 26.—Reports today indicated great damage was done last night and early this morning to corn and other crops in Know, Henry, Warren and Fulton counties by a series of wind, electrical and hail storms.

HARD COAL DIGGERS KEEP WATCHFUL EYE ON JOHN L. LEWIS

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., July 26.—Reports that the present wage scale would be renewed for eighteen months pending an investigation of freight rates and other factors entering into the price of coal, have caused the miners in the anthracite region to swamp the union delegation with telegrams demanding that there be no crawling by John L. Lewis on the demands formulated at the Tri-District Convention.

The operators made their usual demand for abolition of the check off, yesterday. It was, of course, refused.

THREATENED RIFT IN TORY CABINET IS COMPROMISED

More Money for War as Unemployment Grows

LONDON, July 26—W. C. Bridgeman, first lord of the admiralty had actually resigned before the compromise on the naval building program was worked out. Bridgeman was persuaded to withdraw his resignation.

The government decided to lay down two new cruisers in October; two more in February and three annually thereafter during the life of the present parliament. A program calling for nine destroyers and six submarines annually was also adopted.

This expenditure is taken at a time when one million and a half workers are unemployed and the nation is faced with a gigantic coal strike thru a determination on the part of the operators to make reductions and wages and extend hours.

Safe Return from China

NEW YORK, July 26.—Walter Porth, of Milwaukee, who went to China as an engineer for the Rockefeller foundation came back to America today as a stowaway aboard the liner President Harding.

Porth said he left Peking when the revolution broke out and toured Europe where his money gave out.

When Porth was found on board he worked his passage out as a deck-hand.

TRAITORS TO CHINA BEGIN STRIKE RAIDS

Reactionary Troops in Strikebreaking Move

SHANGHAI, China, July 26.—The expected and long brewing attack by the combined forces of imperialism working chiefly thru the traitorous Chinese generals and the even more treacherous Peking government against the national liberation movement is beginning with the raids and assaults of reactionary Chinese troops upon the Shanghai strike organizations.

The Fengtien military authorities Friday raided and closed the Seamen's Union headquarters, the Amalgamated Union of Commerce, Labor and Education and the Students' Union, arresting many of the leaders of the strike and posting proclamations that attempts to continue the strike would be met with death for all union and strike organizers.

Big Capitalist Play Traitor

That the big Chinese capitalists organized in the Shanghai chamber of commerce, as distinct from the small shopkeepers in the Federation of street unions, are beginning to play into the hands of foreign imperialism is seen by the demonstration of workers who attempted to storm the chamber of commerce building, demanding the strike support it had promised.

The Chinese chamber of commerce is more and more dissociating itself from the strike demands of the workers and students, being willing only to carry on a consumers' boycott against British and Japanese goods for the compromise demand of joint control of the so-called "mixed court" and for limited Chinese representation on the municipal council as heavy tax-payers. They are divorcing themselves from the demands of the workers and students for abrogation of all treaties and a complete withdrawal of foreign troops and rule.

Crisis Grows Between Classes

The failure of the Shanghai chamber of commerce to carry out its promise of supplying strike funds to the unions is exciting the workers and students, and the refusal of the Peking government to aid them—and its conspiracy with the Chang Tso-lin troops to suppress them gives the strike a new and more bitter crisis.

SCAB A. F. OF L. UNION PROMISES TO AID CLOTH BOSS; AGREEMENT USED IN COURT AGAINST A. C. W.

The agreement between the International Tailoring Company, and the United Garment Workers of America, signed on June 29th after the employes of the firm, members of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, had gone on strike for union conditions, is one of the worst scab agreements in labor history.

The American Federation of Labor clothing union, which has not for many years done any organizational work in Chicago, sells the International bosses the union label. The scab union further agrees to do all in its power to aid the clothing bosses.

While the striking employes, 800 strong, were walking the picket line, the United Garment Workers signed this agreement, promising not to strike, to furnish employes (strike-breakers), to sell the struck firm the union label, and to "do all in its province as a labor (?) organization, TO ADVERTISE THE GOODS AND OTHERWISE BENEFIT THE BUSINESS" of the International Tailoring company.

William Green, president of the A. F. of L. when asked to prevent this organized scabbery, instead attempted to stick a knife in the back of the striking union. At the same time that the International Tailoring company was presenting the scab U. G. W. agreement in court, AS AN ARGUMENT FOR THE ISSUANCE OF AN INJUNCTION AGAINST THE STRIKERS, Green denounced the Amalgamated as a "dual union" and refused to take action against the U. G. W. scabbery.

The agreement, which is one of the rottenest milestones in the history of the corrupt A. F. of L. officialdom, is printed below in full for the first time, just as it was presented before Judge Pam:

"IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF COOK COUNTY, In Chancery. No. 422520.

CHICAGO HEARS STORY OF I.L.G.W. STRUGGLE IN N. Y.

Successful Meet Held In Spite of Opposition

Chicago members of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union heard the story of the illegal expulsion of 77 executives of locals 2, 9 and 22 from their offices by the Sigman-Perlstein-Feinberg, junta, despite the local agents of Sigman, who got Edward Nockles, secretary of the Chicago Federation of Labor to bring pressure to bear on the manager of Carmen's Hall so that the contract for the holding of the meeting in that hall was cancelled.

Forced to secure a new hall at the eleventh hour and after all the advertising was out, the Workers' Lyceum at 2733 Hirsch Blvd., was packed to the doors with cloak and dressmakers that came to hear Charles L. Zimmerman, secretary of the Joint Council of Action, and Louis Hyman, chairman, both officials of Local 22, until the illegal expulsion took place. The members of the three locals have not recognized the legality of the expulsions.

Unanimously Endorse Struggle.

The meeting went unanimously on record endorsing the fight of the New York dress and cloakmakers and funds were collected to help carry on the fight. A few misguided tools of Sigman were present with questions but those were well answered by Louis Hyman, who has the history of the I. L. G. W. U. at his finger tips.

Shortly before the meeting convened police came to the hall and informed the organizers that a call for police protection was sent in, and that violence was expected. Needless to say no such call was sent in by those who arranged the meeting.

Zimmerman Is First Speaker.

I. A. Davidson, active member in the local organization of the I. L. G. W. U. until his expulsion by Meyer Perlstein, introduced Charles L. Zimmerman, as the first speaker. He was received by a great ovation.

Zimmerman briefly related the history of the struggle between the radicals and the reactionaries. He told of the fight made by Dr. Hourwich, then an official of the union, to put an end to grafting in the organization. The bureaucratic officials could not understand how one of the family could fight for the interests of the membership and Hourwich was bitterly attacked by them.

Expulsion was always the punishment meted out to those who raised their voices for progress in the union. He recited the case of Morris Rubin in 1917 who was expelled from the

WAGE CUT OF WOOLEN WORKERS SPREADING OVER NEW ENGLAND

BOSTON, Mass., July 26.—(FP)—More than 10,000 additional woolen and worsted workers of New England have been sentenced to 10 per cent lower living standards by their employers since the American Woolen Co., popularly known as the Woolen Trust, set the pace last week.

Wage Cuts Spread Everywhere

Latest to be affected are four thousand in the mills of the Blackington Co., Strong-Hewit Co., and the Hoosac Worsted Co. of North Adams; the Sawyer-Regan Co. of Dalton; James & E. H. Wilson Co., S. N. & Co., and the W. E. Tillitson Manufacturing Co. of Pittsfield. Cuts take effect August 3, a week after the trust's date.

Twelve hundred are cut July 30 at Ware and Gilbertville in the plants of the George H. Gilbert Manufacturing Co. One thousand are cut in the International Worsted Mills and the Selden Worsted Mills at Methuen and at the Smith & Dove Manufacturing plant at Andover, where linen thread is manufactured. Cuts start August 3 at Andover and July 27 at Methuen.

Lawrence Begins Cutting

Earlier in the week four thousand workers in the worsted department at Pacific Mills, Lawrence got notice of a July 27 cut and a similarly timed reduction was posted in the Hockanum Mills Co., the Rock Manufacturing Co., and the James J. Regan Manufacturing Co. plants of Rockville, Conn., and by Talcott Bros. of Talcottville, Conn.

UNIONIZING OF BEDDING TRADE KILLED BY KOHN

Upholsterers Move to Desert Mattress Men

The Upholsterers' International Union of North America, meeting in convention at the Morrison Hotel, gave some consideration to the question of amalgamation into industrial unions, and organization of the unorganized. Many of the delegates spoke against a resolution brot in by Vice-President Hatch, and backed by President William Kohn, which declared that since the improvement of machinery had turned the mattress making workers into "common laborers," no more money would be spent on organization of this trade, which is affiliated with the Upholsterers' Union, and nothing more be done to organize the trade. After a long debate an amendment was passed referring the resolution to the executive board.

Delegate Solvihoff, of the New York local union, led the fight against this atrocious resolution. The organization of the entire bedding trade was at stake, he said, and the resolution would serve notice to the bosses that they can go ahead and reduce wages.

A Bosses' Resolution.

"The International bedding association would pay thousands of dollars to have such a resolution passed," said Colvihoff. "True, there has been a division of labor, but are we above organizing common laborers? They have a strong union. Are we to condemn the workers in the bedding trade to slavery at $15.00 a week?"

After Solvihoff's speech demanding a campaign to organize the unorganized mattress workers, another New York delegate moved an amendment to instruct the president to send an organizer into this field as soon as possible, but President Kohn ruled the motion out of order.

Kohn Kills Demand For More Pay.

Kohn then made a speech in which he told how the mattress makers went on strike. "We were paying them strike benefits," Kohn said, "but when they demanded a fifteen per cent increase in wages, we withdrew the benefits at once." He had advised the mattress makers, he said, to accept a twenty per cent reduction in wages.

Kohn then declared, "The trade union movement today is a cold blooded business proposition. When our international union invests in organization work, we want returns in membership."

He said the mattress makers did not bring in enough members in proportion to the money the international had spent, but some delegates pointed out that no energy or money whatever was put into the bedding trade by the international organization.

Kohn said that the only salvation for the mattress makers was industrial organization, but he offered no gram.

FARRINGTON FIGHTS EXPOSURE OF TREASURE LOOTING HIS MACHINE AUDITORS CONCEALED FOR YEARS

By ALEX REID

(Secretary of the Progressive Miners' Committee.)

ARTICLE IV.

Systematic looting of the Illinois miners' traesury by a set of official pirates and jail birds to an extent never equalled in the Miners' Union is being carried on at the present time. The stench calls to high heaven for a clean-up, which the bureaucracy is determined the miners will not get. And in their determination to cover up the evidence, records are being grabbed and destroyed wholesale.

It is well for the fakers that they destroy them, because if the miners knew one-tenth of what is taking place the apaches would be relegated to quarters where they would be unable to continue their union busting.

Dominick Couldn't Get Away

One parrot, willing tool of the Farrington machine, has gone to board with his Uncle Samuel for, from one to fourteen years for getting away with approximately $2,000 in death benefits, and overpaid per capita tax to the sub-district, district, and international organizations, during a period covering four years. The books have been audited time and again in the last four years and the theft not discovered by the district auditors until it was laid bare by Local Union 3495 local officials.

Dominick Teneski, financial secretary of Local Union 3495 in gathering to himself the miners' money, adopted a novel method of petty larceny. He knowingly overpaid per capita tax to the sub-district, district and international, and the auditor's O.K'd books each audit, and had returned to him the overpaid tax, which he misappropriated to his own account. And those same auditors did not find the money had not been receipted for by the local treasurer.

Farrington Protects Treasury Thieves

After the local union discovered the discrepancy, the district office, Farrington, was notified by Freeman Thompson that action would be taken at once against the defaulting financial secretary, Dominick Teneski. Which was done—the local union trying him and expelling him for 99 years.

During this time, when the sub-district president and local officers expected aid by the district officers, the machine sent to the local union a rubber stamp by the name of "Young" who informed the local union that he represented President Farrington, and attempted to have the local union drop the case against Dominick, finally threatening the local union that if it did expell Dominick the local union would be expelled.

Dominick realized that even in spite of the aid and connivance of his friend Farrington, "this name was Walker," and a rumor reaching him that the bonding house was after him, he hied to a garage, bought four new tires and left for parts unknown.

Accomplices in Crime

The district officials including Farrington, by their refusal to co-operate with the local union and sub-district officials, aided in every way the enemy of our union, even to the extent of openly supporting him at his trial, by the local union.

The Farrington push button, Nesbit, showed his friendship for the crooks by stating Thompson and Watt were "too god-damned busy looking for something with which to put a feather in their hat," thereby showing the whole gang of fakers were lined up with the enemies of the union.

Machine Blind in One Eye

It is very noticeable that during the four years of auditing the books, the machine auditors could never find the discrepancy, but an investigation of Duncan McDonald's life membership disclosed the fact that during a lifetime membership, somehow, somewhere, he was behind $1.00 in dues, for which he was arbitrarily expelled from the union!

In answer to the many requests that I give a complete history of the latest treachery of Farrington's (the Thompson, Watt, and Parry case) I ask our friends to be patient for a few days and they will be given the story complete. With this part of the expose the Egan rat case will be laid bare. Mr. Egan was paid $14.50 per day for helping to frame Thompson. He help the machine kick Thompson out, and now is occupying a usurped position at one of the mines.

British Reforms for India Are Only Sham, Says Princeton Prof

NEW YORK, July 26. (FP)—Dr. Herbert Adams Gibbons, Professor of History and International Politics at Princeton University, speaking at a meeting in honor of C. R. Das, deceased president of the India Swaraj Party and of the All India Trade Union Congress, declared that is was Das's great deed that he led the movement which showed that the so called reforms the British granted in India were nothing but shams.

Successful Meet Held In Spite of Opposition

union for urging the amalgamation of three locals which should be amalgamated according to the constitution. Two hundred members were expelled with Rubin.

Fight Class Collaboration.

The left wing is opposed to the class-collaboration policies of the official bureaucracy, declared Zimmerman. They opposed the governor's commission and held that whatever the cloakmakers got from the employers was secured by struggle and not thru the benevolence of politicians; professors and capitalist lawyers.

The progressives are also opposed to the use of gangsters in organizing campaigns. The members of the union are capable of doing this organizing work, the speaker said. He gave an instance where this mass form of organization campaign was tried and proved successful despite the sabotage of the joint board.

One of the chief grievances of the left wing against the Sigman machine is the system of misrepresentation which prevails.

Each local, no matter whether it has twenty members or twenty thousand in entitled to five delegates to the Joint Board. Thus locals 2, 9 and 22 tho they have sixty per cent of the membership of the New York organization have only 15 delegates to the Joint Board while forty per cent of the membership have 50 delegates.

Reactionaries Maintain Control.

Thus the reactionaries are able to maintain control of the board. They do this by subsidizing locals that do not function any longer and unless the paid managers of those locals carry out the wishes of Feinberg and company, they are jerked loose from the payroll and thrown into exterior darkness, if not beaten up by Feinberg's hired gangsters.

Members of the I. L. G. W. U. in New York, who had to leave Chicago because they were blacklisted by Perlstein sent a telegram to the mass meeting in the Workers' Lyceum. It reads as follows:

"Sisters and Brothers: Perlstein's destructive activities are well known to you. After ruining the dressmakers at Chicago, he came to New York to proceed with his policy of ruin. Too high a price have we paid for permitting expulsion in our Chicago ranks. The fight of Locals 2, 9 and 22 of New York is our fight. Now is the time to stand united with the New York cloak and dressmakers in our common struggle against the reactionary officialdom. Stand by the Joint Committee of Action. Help financially. Help to build up a union for the members. Now is the time to rid ourselves of Perlstein, Sigman, Feinberg, Rufer, Novack, and the rest. Signed: Frieda Reicher, J. Goldman, Minnie Belavsky, Olga Garshin, Minnie Garshin, Mary Rodwill."

Hyman Exposes Fake Attack.

Louis Hyman who spoke in Yiddish, held the attention of his audience for over an hour and a half. His speech was liberally sprinkled with humorous passages which kept the cloak and dressmakers in a happy mood.

The more serious aspects of the situation were not neglected. He drove home his arguments with telling force. He exposed the fake excuse given by Sigman and Perlstein for the expulsion of the officials of the three locals. They were not expelled because Moissaiye Olgin spoke at a May Day meeting, said Hyman. Olgin has been speaking at their meetings for years. So had other Communist speakers. Sigman was invited to speak at the same meeting, but he regretfully declined having to be in Chicago on that day. Sigman, Perlstein and Fineberg made no protest at the time.

But when the governors' commission made its award which gave nothing at all, to the cloakmakers then the manufacturers put it up to Sigman that he must force the members to accept that award. Even Sigman himself at first admitted that the commission gave the workers nothing. Hillquit, millionaire socialist attorney for the I. L. G. W. U. told the commision that he had come to the conclusion that the body was no longer of any use to the cloakmakers, but when the manufacturers gave their orders Sigman had to come across and he knew that he could not deliver the goods as long as the left wing had leaders who could voice a protest.

This was the direct cause of the expulsion of the 77 elected officials of Locals 2, 9 and 22.

Sigman Suporters Answered.

One supporter of Sigman at the meeting wanted to know how the union could ever come to an understanding if the rank and file were allowed to decide policies. Hyman answered that they had a splendid example of the futility of a union that did not allow the rank and file any say, in the Chicago I. L. G. W. U. He challenged any one present to say that the bureaucratic methods had benefitted the workers.

Another supporter of the Sigman-Perlstein machine was one by the name of Fink. She accused Hyman of keeping quiet for a number of years while those wrongs that he charged the officials with were being committed. The speaker showed that he had consistently fought the reactionaries during the many years that he was a member of the union. The audience expressed its satisfaction with Hyman's speech and his answers to the questions by a prolonged burst of applause.

The organizers of the meeting declared that but for the interfenrence of the fakers thru their tool, Edward Nockels in cancelling the hall at the last minute, the meeting would be one of the largest gathering of cloak and dress makers ever held in Chicago.

Dever Greets Skrzynski as Friend While Police Attack Labor Gathering

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

TODAY, the catholic pope in Rome, pledged to the war against the Union of Soviet Republics, must smile happily in his vatican lair, as he reads of the "official greeting" received by Count Alexander Skrzynski, minister of foreign affairs of Poland, at the hands of Chicago's municipal administration.

It is perhaps difficult for the average worker to understand the eagerness with which an Irish democratic mayor in America's second city hastens to proclaim his oneness with the high official of Poland's terror rule, unless one follows the connecting thread that leads thru the portals of the Roman catholic church, that carefully promotes its anti-Communist campaign in every land.

• • • •

Mayor Dever, the Irish democratic mayor of Chicago, is blood brother in organized religion of Count Skrzynski, of Poland. They both get their orders and inspiration from the Roman pope. They both clasp hands in a common cause, and that is one of the big reasons why Dever greeted Skrzynski first in his offices in the city hall, and then in Chicago's council chamber, where the American stars and stripes entwined with the red and white flag of Poland, that drips the blood of thousands of workers slain, and waves over a land where prisons are choked with revolutionary toilers.

Out over Chicago very few workers knew that the agent of the Polish reaction was in the city. Fewer knew its meaning.

The Polish, the Irish, the Czecho-Slovak, the workers of all nationalities, in the stockyards, have seen the princes of the Roman catholic church unite with the multi-millionaire food barons to keep labor divided and crushed. The same has been true always in the coal, the steel and every other industry. The catholic priest who challenges the power of the exploiter, and champions the cause of the workers, soon finds himself an outcast from his church. His church is the bulwark of reaction and it was A. Kazlminski, president of the Polish Catholic Union, that stood side by side with Alderman Stanley Adamkiewicz, head of the reception committee, to testify that American politics and Roman catholicism go hand in hand in the war against the workers.

• • • •

Alderman Adamkiewicz comes to Chicago's city council from the Polish section of the northwest side where the deadening power of religion's black plague stretches into almost every workers' home. When the Workers (Communist) Party called to Polish labor to demonstrate against the terrorist rule that Skrzynski champions, the police hosts of the Dever municipal administration, on foot and in flivvers, flooded the district to see that no demonstration was held. The huge bank of the multi-millionaire Pole, John Smulski, looked down in approval as the police scattered the workers, clubbing some, but unable to prevent them from gathering again in a neighborhood hall.

• • • •

These are the same police, the same flivvers that the Dever democratic-catholic city administration is using against the striking members of the Amalgamated clothing workers. There are many Polish members of "The Amalgamated." It should be clear to them why Mayor Dever uses his police force to crush the "Amalgamated" strikers on the picket line, and at the same time extends his hand in friendship to the Polish terrorist, Skrzynski, and opposes any effort to tell the thruth about him.

Religion, race, nationality, color do not divide the upholders of capitalism. The Chinese Rockefeller, won for the catholic church, recently passed thru Chicago on his way to Rome, and was the honored guest of the catholic Archbishop Mundelein.

• • • •

Let the workers of Chicago, thru the visit of the enemy of labor, Skrzynski, hand in glove with labor's foe, Dever, shake off a little more the paralyzing power of religion, see the great need of working class solidarity in spite of all influences that tend to divide them, and thus insure labor's triumph against all its enemies.

HALL MEETING IS SUCCESS AS COPS CLEAR STREETS

Workers Hear the Truth About Skrzynski

In order to show his illustrious guest, Count Alexander Skrzynski, foreign minister in the Polish cabinet, that the Polish government is not the only one adept in the art of white terrorism, Mayor Dever staged an exhibition of the American brand Saturday.

On Saturday morning the Chicago papers announced that a lot of Chicago Poles were going to demonstrate their disrespect for the visiting count and the regime he represents by holding a meeting in the heart of the Polish quarter, Division St. and Milwaukee Ave. Mayor Dever became very much excited and announced that the meeting would not be held.

Police Gets Busy Early.

Several hundred of the count's countrymen who are not fooled by either his title or the smooth words he is famous for, gathered at the above corner Saturday night prepared to tell him what they thought of him, Mr. Dever's bluecoats were on the job. As soon as a group collected that looked like a meeting, the cops made a charge and drove them away. When the persistent crowd re-assembled again the performance was repealed.

One fellow who wanted to stand on his rights as an American citizen, discovered that he didn't have any. Officer 1187 beat him up right then and there.

Drive Workers to Hall.

The word was passed around the crowd that the meeting would be held at the Workers, Home, 1902 W. Division. Directly after this the cops made another charge and conveniently drove the crowd in the direction of the hall. By quarter after eight the hall was jammed with several hundred people.

Thurber Lewis opened the meeting. "There is every reason in the world why the Polish foreign minister should be received with open arms by the politicians of American capital; the Polish government has made itself famous in the imperialist world for repression, torture and murder of the workers and peasants of Poland. Such accomplishments are looked upon with admiration by our own politicians who know they may be called upon to emulate the bloody record of the count's cabinet," Lewis said.

J. K. Gebert, secretary of the Polish section of the Workers (Communist) Party spoke in Polish. He recited the bloody record of the Polish white terror regime, reminding the count that the workers of the world will not soon forget the cowardly murders of Baginsky, Wierczorkiewicz and dozens of others who have fallen in the struggle there.

Shuwalov, Stolar, Engdahl Speak

Comrade Shuwalov told the story of the brutal treatment of the Ukranian national minority by the Polish puppet government in the Ukranian language, and M. A. Stolar, speaking in Russian, said that the bonds of sympathy between the free workers of Russia and the tortured and exploited workers of Poland is only enhanced by the bloody measures of the fake "democratic" Warsaw junker regime.

J. Louis Engdahl, editor of the DAILY WORKER, declared that the workers also believed in democracy, but that it was a working class democracy of the proletarian dictatorship that seeks to overthrow capitalist rule.

A large collection was taken up for the relief of working class prisoners and their families in Poland as the best answer American workers could make to the unwelcome visit of a spokesman of Polish reaction responsible for their imprisonmeht.

BRITISH COAL STRIKE UNSETTLED AS TEXTILE WORKERS FIGHT CUTS

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LONDON, July 26—While Great Britain's coal crisis was allowed to simmer unmolested over the weekend, North England had a real strike situation to contend with today, with 135,000 mill workers in the woolen textile districts enlisted in a walkout against a wage cut of five per cent.

Militant mill-girls attacked the factories in one area, smashed many windows and forced laggard scabs, known as "black legs," to British workers, to cease work.

Newspapers bitterly criticized Premier Baldwin for postponing action on the coal strike until Monday, but with five days then left before the Miners' Federation order to 1,200,000 to quit work goes into effect.

In some quarters, however, the lack of action over Sunday was regarded as a good omen, indicating that the government knew more than it was making public regarding the situation. It was believed that unless an early settlement was in sight, negotiations would have continued over the week-end.

POLICE FLASH GATS ON SOUTH SIDE SPEAKERS

Two members of the Workers Party, D. Early and Comrade Search, and one "innocent" bystander, were arrested last Saturday evening at 30th and State Sts., and held at the Cottage Grove police station without being booked until Attorney Bentall threatened to have the police arrested for violation of the law which requires that persons arrested be booked.

Comrade Earley was speaking when a colored police officer approached and ordered him off the stand. Earley refused, explaining to the officer that he was within his constitutional rights and informing him of the recent decision in the case of the seventeen members fo the Workers Party arrested for speaking on the corner of Orchard and North avenues.

Then a white officer, number 5259, rushed up and knocked Comrade Earley off the platform, pulling his gun at the same time. Earley was taken to the station. The officers returned and arrested Search and Baldwin, the latter having just come out of a barber shop and did not know what was going on.

The police at the Cottage Grove police station refused to book the prisoners until Attorney Bentall got busy. Judge George, colored, offered to issue a warrant for the arrest of the police unless they immediately booked the three men. The judge stated that he had already secured a conviction of a policeman for similar conduct.

Finally the police were forced to release the three prisoners on bonds of fifty dollars each, on disorderly conduct charge.

The cases will come up for trial tonight at 7 p. m. at the Harrison St. police court.

Membership.

1. The party constitution provides that only members who have been members of the party for thirty days or more have the right to vote in the party elections. This provision in the party constitution for a probation period of thirty days for new members shall apply to members of the Y. W. L. also. It shall however not apply to those members of the Y. W. L. who were accepted as members of the party on or before July 23 or whose applications for admission to the party were submitted on or before July 8. All members voting must be in good standing and have purchased a Convention Assessment Stamp.

Branches.

1. The elections in the branches shall begin on July 26 and continue until August 10.

2. New branches shall have no right to elect delegates to city or district conventions unless they were organized at least sixty days prior to the last day of the election period from the branches to the city or district conventions. Members of these branches who were members of the party before these branches were organized shall have the right to vote in the branches of which they were previously members.

3. Members of the party who have taken a transfer from one branch to another after July 23 shall vote in their old branches.

4. Branches which send delegates to city conventions shall be entitled to one delegate for each 15 members or major fraction thereof, as shown by dues payments for the months of February, March, April and May. Where no city organizations exists and branches are directly affiliated with the district organizations and in those districts where no city conventions are to be held, the branches send delegates to the district convention on the basis of one delegate for each 25 members or major fraction thereof as shown by dues payments for the months of February, March, April and May. Each branch is entitled to a minimum of at least one delegate.

Shop Nuclei.

1. Shop nuclei shall be entitled to send delegates to the city conventions and where no city conventions are held, to the district conventions on the same basis as the branches.

2. Where a number of shop nuclei have been combined into a shop nuclei branch, the shop nuclei branch shall be entitled to send as many delegates to the city or district convention as the individual shop nuclei would have been entitled to send, had they not been combined in a shop nuclei branch.

3. Shop nuclei which have been chartered by the C. E. C. or will have been chartered before the last day of the election period for the lowest party units to the city or district convention shall have the right to elect delegates to the city or district convention, with the following exceptions: Shop nuclei which have been organized before April 1 and have not purchased dues stamps since that time shall have no right to elect delegates to the city or district conventions as a nucleus. Members of these nuclei who are in good standing shall take part in their former branches in the election of delegates to the city or district convention.

City Conventions.

1. The city conventions shall be held from August 10 until August 15.

2. City conventions are entitled to send delegates to district conventions on the basis of one delegate for each 25 members or major fraction thereof, as shown by average dues payments for February, March, April and May, 1925.

3. City conventions shall elect delegates to the district conventions in accordance with the following rules:

a) Where the city convention is entitled to one delegate to the district convention this delegate shall be elected by a majority of the vote.

b) If the city organization is entitled to two delegates and either of the two groups in the party is supported by a minority of delegates consisting of not less than 40 per cent then the minority of the delegates of the convention shall be entitled to elect one of the delegates.

c) If the city convention is entitled to elect three delegates to the district convention, or a number of delegates which is a multiple of three, and neither of the two groups in the party have a minority of delegates of not less than 30 per cent this minority of the delegates in the city convention shall elect one-third of the total number of delegates. If the total number of delegates to be elected by the city convention, less one is a multiple of three, (for instance 4, 7, 10 and so on) the group which is in a minority of not less than 30 per cent shall elect one-third of the total number of delegates less one. If the total number of delegates plus one is a multiple of three (as for instance 5, 8, 11, 14 and so on) the group which has a minority of not less than 30 per cent of the delegates shall elect one-third of the total number of delegates plus one.

For example, if a city convention elects thriteen delegates the minority delegates in the convention would be entitled to four delegates. If, however, the convention elected fourteen delegates, then the minority delegates would be entitled to five delegates.

District Conventions.

1. The district conventions shall be held on August 16.

2. District conventions are entitled to one delegate to the national convention for each 331 members or major fraction thereof.

3. In those districts in which no city conventions were held and the branches elected delegates to the district conventions directly in 1923, no city conventions shall be held in electing delegates to the present national convention.

c) If the district convention is entitled to elect three delegates to the national convention, or a number of delegates which is a multiple of three, and either of the two groups in the party have a minority of delegates, of not less than 30 per cent, this minority of the delegates in the district convention shall elect one-third of the total number of delegates. If the total number of delegates to be elected by the district convention less one is a multiple of three (for instance, 4, 7, 10 and so on) the group which is in the minority of not less than 30 per cent shall elect one-third of the total number of delegates less one. If the total number of delegates plus one is a multiple of three (as for instance, 5, 8, 11, 14 and so on) the group which has a minority of the delegates of not less than 30 per cent shall elect one-third of the total number of delegates plus one.

5. The delegate from the agricultural district of the party shall be elected by the minority of the C. E. C. and the delegate from the national office territory shall be elected by the majority of the C. E. C.

Special Provisions.

1. The branches now organized in the Pullman city central committee shall be immediately affiliated to the Chicago city central committee and shall send delegates to the Chicago city convention.

In addition to the delegates sent from Wilkes Barre and Scranton city conventions there shall be five delegates from unattached branches in good standing in the anthracite section. If there are any additional unattached branches in good standing in this anthracite section they shall be combined with the nearest branch or city central committee.

Declaration of the Parity Commission

THE Plenum of the Enlarged Executive Committee of the Comintern has proposed to the Workers Party of America to put definitely an end to the factional struggle which divided the party during many months into two parts, and which exceedingly weakened its forces.

"The Executive Committee," declares a resolution of the Communist International,—"is of the definite opinion that factional conflicts between the two groups must now absolutely cease. Altho it may be true that this factional conflict arose out of real differences, it has, nevertheless, been of too acute a character on both sides and at times assumed impermissable forms. The Executive Committee does not object to a concrete and calm discussion being carried on until the Party Congress, but in the interest of party unity it demands the unconditional cessation of party warfare." The resolution of the Communist International therefore demands that "all personal polemics between the two sides should cease."

"THE Executive Committee," the resolution further declares, "regards it as absolutely essential that the representatives of the party, majority and minority, should henceforward conclude a fraternal peace and work in Communist co-operation. The leading comrades are primarily responsible for setting a good example to the other party members in this respect."

AFTER an examination of the internal situation and the occurrences which took place within the party since the session of the Plenum of the Executive Committee of the Communist International, the parity commission is forced first of all to state that the above decisions of the Executive Committee of the Communist International have not been carried out to a sufficient degree. The factional war within the party not only has not ceased, but has assumed a much more bitter character than before the session of the Plenum of the Executive Committee of the Communist International having reached in some party organizations a virtual split. But what is worse and more dangerous, the conflict between the majority and the minority has departed too far from a struggle for definite views into a struggle for a majority of the party. The ideological discussion against which the Executive Committee of the Communist International did not object was complicated and the struggle intensified by personal attacks and organizational conflicts. Both factions hastily organized to conquer a majority of the party.

THE former political platforms of both groups, the former political diferences between them, have been liquidated by the decision of the Executive Committee of the Communist International which pointed out the mistakes of both groups. The decision of the Executive Committee of the Communist International was accepted unanimously by both groups and has not met with any opposition within the party, but was wholeheartedly approved by the entire membership of the party. Such political differences as exist between the two groups are not of a major character and cannot, therefore, be the cause of that unusual sharpness and bitterness which have been manifested in the factional struggle during the last few months. Precisely the absence or unclearness of political differences between the factions in the factional struggle and the impetus of the political struggle between the two groups that orignated before the Plenum of the Communist International, was one of the chief sources of the impermissable forms which the factional struggle has assumed in the recent months.

The party is going thru an acute crisis; the party is in a dangerous situation.

The Parity Commission, after a thoro examination of the facts and documents having a bearing on the last discussion, has come to the following conclusions:

1. The Grievances in Cleveland.—The development of the factional struggle is represented in the following manner. After a certain incident with Comrade Benjamin, the relations between the majority and minority became more acute. At the meeting of the City Central Committee of March 9, a number of petty incidents of a technical nature took place, which resulted in the minority delegates first refusing to participate in the meeting and later leaving the meeting. The majority passed a motion that a new meeting of the City Central Committee be held a week later, to which the minority delegates did not come. The minority contends that their delegates were not notified of the meeting. The majority contends that the minority delegates sabotaged the meeting, the minority claiming that the meeting was illegal. At this last meeting, which took place in the absence of the minority delegates, the majority suspended from the City Central Committee nine delegates for disturbances which occurred at the previous meeting. This still further embittered the relations between the majority and minority. The situation within the organization became considerably worse in connection with the occurrences which took place in the Jewish Branch. In the branch the minority expelled from the party two majority members for a cause which the higher party organizations have declared as incorrect and insufficient. A sub-committee of the City Executive Committee (majority) which was sent to the Jewish branch to investigate the situation in the branch, did not find in the branch sufficient readiness to carry out the decision of the party organization. For this the Jewish Branch was suspended and reorganized, and 25 members of the branch were suspended, without voice and vote, and nine expelled from the party. The suspended members of the branch refused to recognize these party decisions which were approved by the Central Executive Committee (the Central Executive Committee minority voting against the decision), and maintained themselves as a separate Jewish branch. The meeting of the City Central Committee of June 8 took place under conditions which amounted to a split. The majority and minority were represented in equal numbers (19 to 19, or 19 to 18). The sole question over which the two groups were fighting, was precisely the question of the number of votes. Finally, after a number of factional incidents, the district organizer declared the meeting adjourned, and the majority delegates left. The minority delegates (after adjournment of the meeting) remained, elected a new City Executive Committee, and nullified all the former decisions—the decision suspending Comrade Benjamin, the suspension of nine minority delegates from the City Central Committee, the reorganization of the Jewish Branch, etc.

Thus, in the final analysis, the City Central Committees were formed in Cleveland, that is, in other words, an actual and formal split occurred. The split was liquidated by the decision of the Central Executive Committee nullifying all the decisions of the City Central Committee at the meeting which was dominated by the Cleveland minority on June 8.

ANALYZING the development of the factional struggle in Cleveland, the Parity Commission establishes first of all, that during all this period the subject of the disputes at the meetings of the City Central Committee were chiefly questions of selection of chairmen for the meetings, the number of votes, of petty scandals which occurred during the meetings, of the suspension and expulsion of this and that member of the party, etc. Both groups were striving to seize the power in the organization and to suppress the other side thru the advantage of one or two votes. It was not advisable for the majority to pass decisions at the meeting of the City Central Committee of March 16 in the ABSENCE of the minority delegates, even if the minority delegates had sabotaged the meeting. It was not permissible for the majority, in the absence of the minority, to pass a decision suspending nine minority delegates from the City Central Committee, particularly for a cause which was not sufficiently serious (making a noise and creating disturbance at the previous meeting of the City Central Committee.) Such actions inevitably led the minority to a violation of party discipline and a split situation.

But, it was just as impermissable for the minority, in the ABSENCE OF THE MAJORITY DELEGATES, to elect a new City Executive, and to nullify the former decisions of the City Central Committee and the Central Executive Committee. This was not only a serious violation of party discipline, but this was a factional decision amounting to a split, which was an attempt to suppress the majority having the advantage of only one vote (if such was really the case). The suppression of a minority, even with a large majority of votes, is not the proper method to solve internal party differences. Having in mind precisely the possibility of such suppression of a minority, and in order to prevent such occurrences the Executive Committee of the Communist International has secured for whichever group will be in the minority at the party convention the representation of one-third in the next Central Executive Committee.

IT was not permissible for the Jewish Branch (minority) to refuse to carry out the decision of the party organizations. This constituted a serious violation of party discipline, and the City Central Committee and the Central Executive Cimmittee had every formal ground to reorganize this branch and to suspend as well the membership of the branch who refused to submit these decisions. But, it was a mistake on the part of the majority, in a situation where the party is in danger of a split, when the basic question raised by the Executive Committee of the Communist International is the unification of the party, to resort widely to severe repressive measures toward the other faction for its factional acts.

Taking into consideration the factional nature of the struggle which was manifested by both sides in Cleveland, and prompted by a determination by all means to achieve the speediest possible liquidation of the factional differences and thus to achieve, at the next party convention, the complete unification of the party, the Parity Commission deems it possible.

1. To reconsider the decision suspending Comrade Benjamin for six months.
2. To reinstate the suspended 25 and expelled 9 members of the Jewish Branch.
3. To remove the prohibition against the right to be elected of the former nine City Central Committee delegates and to reinstate Comrades Bolch and Bartov.

At the same time, the Parity Commission deems it necessary to emphasize that the actions of these comrades who have committed serious violations of party discipline, deserve the most severe party condemnation, and that after the party convention, when the party will have been unified, such actions will be severely punished by the party.

2. The Situation in Philadelphia—There is no need of describing how the factional struggle developed in Philadelphia. This would be merely a repetition of the history of the factional struggle in Cleveland: the same course of events (with insignificant and unessential differences), the same methods and forms of the factional struggle, the same effort to gain even a slight majority in order to suppress the other side, the same impermissible violation of party discipline. The factional struggle in Philadelphia resulted in fewer suspensions and expulsions than in Cleveland, but in the final result the Philadelphia organization is in a highly tensed situation and the work is paralyzed. The Philadelphia organizatoin can be brought out of the state of paralysis only thru a non-factional, party peace. Attempts of either side to suppress the other would inevitably lead to a definite split.

The Parity Commission feels certain that on the basis of the decisions adopted by the convention the Philadelphia comrades will be able to come to a comradly, party understanding.

3. The Situation in the South Slavic Federation—Independently of the inner party factional struggle friction arose and two groups formed in the South Slavic Federation—the Fisher group and the Novak group. The struggle between these two groups which arose in connection with some internal federation questions, led to a number of conficts between them, the both groups supported the platform of the minority (a considerable part of the Fisher group supported the majority).

Both groups accused each other of "Cvetkovism" (Cvetkov is a former member of the party who is now waging a bitter struggle against our party), and of Loreism.

The Central Executive Committee has several times investigated the differences between the Fisher and Novak groups and the investigations have not brought to light such differences as would be a serious obstacle to harmonious work by the two groups. The struggle in the South Slavic Federation became especially acute after the groups were drawn into the internal party factional struggle, the minority of the C. E. C. having given its support to the Novak group in the federation controversy and Comrade Fisher and part of his group having changed their position in favor of the majority.

The Parity Commission after considering the explanations of representatives of both groups, came to the conclusion that the reciprocal accusations of both groups of "Cvetkoism" and Loreism have no foundation and are incorrect. Both groups are Communist groups. Both groups must be given full opportunity to work in the federation. Both groups, on the basis of the decision which will be adopted by the coming party convention with a view to liquidate the internal party factional struggle, will undoubtedly be able to find a common basis for joint harmonious work as a unified federation.

The organizational measures which are necessary to remove the friction between the two groups in the South Slavic Federation will be undertaken by the Central Executive Committee.

4. Differences in Regard to the "Nine Points"—The "nine points" which were presented to the plenum of the Executive Committee of the Comintern by the minority delegates and the reply of the majority delegates to the accusations of the minority have already been considered by the plenum of the Communist International. The later discussion which began in the party on the question of the nine points led to the accumulation of a number of misunderstandings between the two factions, as well as to reciprocal accusations that this question was utilized for factional purposes. Inasmuch as the most important questions which were raised in the "nine points" have already been settled by the decisions of the Parity Commission, therefore the Parity Commission does not deem it necessary to consider the other questions, which have now lost their practical significance, and resolves to consider these questions, as well as the reciprocal accusations in connection with the "nine" points, as liquidated.

5. Personal Polemics—After the plenum of the Executive Committee of the Comintern which demanded "that all personal polemics between the two sides should cease," rumors began to circulate in the party in connection with the decision of the plenum on the case of Comrade Lovestone, which rumors were directed against the Communist integrity of Comrade Lovestone as well as against the leaders of the majority who were present at the plenum. The Parity Commission declares that all these rumors are without foundation and are an outrageous slander against Comrade Lovestone and the leaders of the majority. The Parity Commission warns that any member of the party who will circulate such rumors or raise this question in any way from any standpoint will be subject to severe party discipline.

THE Lore Question—In an atmosphere of monstrous factional suspicions, the inevitable sattelite of every factional struggle, both groups began, after the plenum of the Executive Committee of the C. I., to suspect and to accuse each other of an alliance with Lore and Loreites (Poyntz, Zimmerman, Jampolsky, etc.) for the purpose of securing, thru such an alliance, a majority of the party. After the adoption of the resolution by the Executive Committee of the C. I. characterizing Lore and his adherents as opportunists, and proposing that the party wage an ideological struggle against the Lore tendency, the charge of an alliance with him and his adherents has become a most serious political charge.

The reciprocal attempts of both sides to expose one another in an alliance with Lore proves first of all that both factions, that is the overwhelming numbers of the party, are in complete accord in determined opposition to Loreism. Despite the numbre of great obstacles (first of all the low theoretical level of the party, and its incorrect social-democratic form of organization), the process of Bolshevization of the party is moving the party ever more away from Loreism and has reached the point where a political alliance with Lore is already becoming impossible without direct betrayal of the principles of Leninism. Hence, the complete political accord of both factions (despite the exceptionally bitter factional struggle) with regard to Loreism, which the Parity Commission establishes first of all.

The Parity Commission further declares that the reciprocical accusations of both factions of a political alliance with the Loreites are absolutely incorrect and without foundation. Neither facton is at present in alliance with Lore. Both factions have, since the plenum of the Executive Committee of the C. I., actually proven their complete readiness to wage a determined struggle against opportunism (Loreism) in our party. But the extreme bitterness of the factional struggle paralyzes all the efforts of both groups in the campaign against Loreism, has created a number of factional misunderstandings around this question, caused mutual misunderstanding, and led both groups to a number of errors.

The Parity Commission calls the attention of the party to the fact that Loreism is at the present time the most dangerous tendency in the party which offers strong resistance to the Bolshevization of our party, and expresses full confidence that at the coming party convention Loreism will be unanimously condemned by both groups, and that in the coming discussion the ideological struggle against Loreism will have the central place.

THE Parity Commission declares that all the above decisions have been adopted unanimously and are therefore considered as final. Any attempt to again raise the questions which have been settled by the Commission will be considered as nothing less than a desire to rekindle the factional struggle and to bring the party to a split. Any attempts of this kind will meet with most severe party punishment.

In conclusion, the Parity Commission expresses confidence that the coming party convention will be able to put an end to the factional struggle within the party, enabling the party to face the great tasks which are confronting it. The Parity Commission calls upon all members of the party to consider seriously the critical situation in the party and to exert every effort to bring the party out of this grave situation.

GERMAN NATIONALISTS EXPOSED AS MISERABLE MERCENARIES OF THE BRITISH IMPERIALISTS

(By International Press Correspondence.)

MOSCOW, July 10.—(By Mail.)—Today's leading article in the Pravda, official organ of the Russian Communist Party, points out that at the present time of the intervention plans of England against Soviet Russia, important circles of the German bourgeoisie are falling in at the tail of the English imperialist policy.

To the warnings of the Soviet press that the entry of Germany into the league of nations would mean Germany's entry into the anti-Soviet front, Germany declared that it was in no way a question of an alteration of Germany's attitude.

Germany would never give up its political independence and sovereignty and its friendship to Soviet Russia would remain unchanged. Nevertheless in the last few weeks a shameful and systematic anti-Soviet campaign has been going on which finds its expression also in the official policy of Germany.

Under the pretext of the judgment in the Moscow fascist process, several German papers permit themselves a tone towards Soviet Russia which is in no way in agreement with friendly relations.

Need Campaign of Propaganda.

The Pravda further points out that a German observer like the lawyer Freund could not but declare that the prosecutor had succeeded in proving the guilt of the accused. The whole noise about the consul process proves itself to be an artificial, irresponsible press production in the sharpest contradiction to the real national interests of Germany.

What is much more important is the recognition by the Frankfurter Zeitung in its issue of July 4, that there is no longer any doubt that the great efforts of England to draw Germany into the guarantee pact is an attempt to involve Germany in the anti-Russian front.

It is now clear to the most naive why the press campaign is necessary, why all attempts are made to outdo England in the anti-Soviet crusade. In this light the hypocritical, assumed indignation of the Berliner Tageblatt and its language, unworthy of an independent people, towards the Soviet Union is to be explained.

The German nationalists whose slogan until recently was hate against England now appear as the miserable mercenaries of England and its imperialism. The idea of revenge has been bartered for the advantages which would accrue from a gendarme role towards the Soviet Union.

Cannot Play Role of Flunkey.

If Germany wishes to have a permanent perspective of independent development before it, it cannot afford to sell itself, bag and baggage, to English imperialism.

It should also not play the role of a subservient and fawning flunkey. We declare once again with all determination: we shall not permit ourselves to be the object of the bargain.

We declare also with the same decision our determination to do our utmost to build up economic relations with Germany. Only the blind cannot see what hopeful prospects such a connection offers to both countries, and this connection is to be destroyed by England and her agents in Germany.

MOVEMENT TO SEND BIBLE TO THE JUNK PILE

Washington Clerk Out for Injunction

EDITOR'S NOTE—The clash between religion and science which has stirred the country deeply in the last few weeks has been placed squarely before the federal courts by an action brot in the district of Columbia supreme court by Loren H. Wittner, a treasury employe. Wittner charges that congress is attempting "to set up a state religion in the Washington public schools."

In the following article, Wittner tells why he started the suit, reveals his purposes and outlines what he believes the federal court must decide in the injunction hearing next Tuesday.

By LOREN H. WITTNER.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, July 26.—I am fighting for the freedom of religion, education, speech and press as guaranteed in the first amendment to the constitution.

I am not quarreling with the belief of the people. It is all right for them to believe or not to believe in the bible.

Of late years, however, there has been a decided tendency all over the country for legislative bodies to interefere and restrict and confine education within narrow limits. That was exemplified in Tennessee in the passage of the anti-evolution law. It brot about the Scopes trial.

Now congress has stepped in, and with an heretofore unnoticed "rider" in the district apporriation bill has decreed that nothing must be taught in Washington schools which inculcates "disrespect to the holy bible."

Science Contradicts Bible.

What constitutes disrespect to the holy bible?

Does it mean the teaching of natural science? Surely, it must for natural science contradicts the teachings of the bible. In short, it denies the bible. What could be more disrespectful?

To determine this question legally, I have brot suit to enjoin salaries of instructors who teach scientific doctrines which are at variance with the bible.

That is my motive.

Unless the question is decided upon abstract technicalities, the court must inform the country whether geology, biology, chemistry, physics and all sciences are disrespectful to the bible.

But the legal phase is not paramount.

There is another and a greater issue involved.

It is this:

Is congress to be allowed to continue its present course of setting up the bible as the final authority on scientific knowledge?

Unsteady Crucible of Religion.

That must never be. If I do nothing else, I hope I have shown the country thru this suit that congress deliberately intends that all education must be tested in the unsteady crucible of religion; that, in fact, religion must come ahead of education in our schools, or, there can be no education. In a strict sense, therefore, congress has definitely linked the state with religion.

If congress does not intend that, then congress has been guilty of careless legislation.

It is time now that congress is warned the country will not tolerate religion in legislation, for it subverts a cardinal American principle.

If this continues, we shall be intellectual serfs, bound in the ignorance and intolerance of the darkest ages.

Says Scopes Case Worth While.

OBERLIN, Ohio, July 26.—The Scopes case was worth while because a sincere study of evolution is resulting, especially in Tennessee, in the opinion of Dr. Maynard M. Metcalf, of Oberlin, only expert witness who testified before the Dayton, Tenn., court. Dr. Metcalf today told some of his impressions of the famous trial.

"I think the local educational effect of the trial was considerable and worth while," Dr. Metcalf said. "The people in the region around Dayton are just like any other people in natural ability, unless indeed they are more than of average natural ability, but they have had very limited contact with the world's thinking, and they are decades behind the times in thought. As a result of the trial there are a good many persons who are inquiring with open minds about this matter of opposition between religion and science."

CHAPTER II
Finance

Russian Credit before the Revolution

The Russian national bankruptcy was not, as is generally supposed, a consequence, but rather a cause of the Revolution. The fiscal relationship of Tsarism to the Russian taxpayer and its financial relationship to the foreign creditor had become almost as bad as that which resulted from a similar recourse to foreign money lenders by oriental despotisms in Turkey, Egypt, and Morocco. Tsarism was approaching bankruptcy long before the war; though Russian credit abroad was still maintained by foreign financial groups, who promoted Russian loans and passed on the liability to a public ignorant of the political instability and financial unsoundness of the Empire. A process which would, as elsewhere, have ended before long in the foreign creditor losing most of his investment and in the Russian taxpayer being put under a foreign receivership to pay for the follies of his rulers.

Currency Before the Revolution

But up to the war this process had not gone so far as to affect the currency. Paper money in Russia was issued under restrictions more rigorous than elsewhere, having to be covered to one-half in gold reserve up to a total issue of 600 million roubles, and wholly covered by gold above that amount. This system, as elsewhere, gave way to the exigencies of war. The Imperial Bank was given the right of emission, without reference to gold reserves, within restrictions that were being continually reduced. The growing deficit in the budget was covered partly by this means and partly by borrowing. By 1917 the Russian debt reached 17 milliards gold, of which about half had been borrowed abroad. The deficit by 1917 had risen to 25½ milliards paper, of which three-fourths was being paid by the issue of paper money.

By 1916 the limitation on the issue of currency had been raised to 6½ milliards. The paper currency was inflated from 1,317 in 1914 to 2,670 in 1915; to 3,480 in 1916, and to 16,403 at the date of the Revolution—against a gold reserve of 6.8 per cent. The usual results of inflation followed, and the rise of prices soon became serious. Already before the Revolution the currency had depreciated by two-thirds. This, though small in figure compared to the future depreciation after the Revolution to one five thousand millionths, was in effect far more fatal. For it started the usual vicious circle revolving—the greater the mass of money issued, the less it was worth and the more was wanted. There were present before the Revolution all the usual symptoms of the latest stages of excessive inflation. Production, at first abnormally forced, inevitably fell; and the whole national economic existence was passing from a stage of fever to that of torpor. Russia was not only so bankrupt before the Revolution that it could never hope to carry the burden of the debt it had accumulated, but it was already economically paralysed by currency depreciation.

Revolution and Finance

This was the financial situation for which the Revolution had to find a remedy. And under conditions of Revolution it was in any case inevitable that the situation must get worse before it could be remedied. The principles of sound finance cannot be observed during war, and the Revolution involved Russia in foreign war, in civil war, and in class war. The financial effects of these foreign and civil wars need not be gone into in detail. For owing to the responsibility incurred by Foreign Powers the estimates of pecuniary damage caused to Russia by civil wars have already been published by the Russian Government in the course of negotiations for the settlement of mutual claims. But the damage caused by the class war was of a different and more novel character. It was not expressed in incidental destructions and disorders that could be estimated in terms of money. It was expressed in a deliberate and determined attempt by those conducting the Revolution to destroy the institution of money itself as well as its influence over the social system.

War Communism and Finance

War Communism was brought to making this attack upon money by two inter-connecting influences. One was the desire to abolish money as being the principal means for accumulating private capital, and the other was the difficulty of restoring a stable unit of exchange out of the chaos of different and more or less hopelessly depreciated currencies that the Revolution had inherited from the war. And, as nationalisation of trade and property developed until the free exchange of commodities was almost eliminated, the function of money as a medium of free exchange diminished. Until finally War Communism came to the conclusion that the best solution both in principle and practically, would be to do without money altogether; and that the best means to that end would be to let it depreciate itself out of existence.

The idea which was inspiring the leaders of the Revolution when the previous Delegation visited Moscow in 1920 was that of reconstructing the national economy as one great co-operative of consumers and producers, of which the economic exchanges would be merely a matter of bookkeeping through central and local clearing houses. Under the decree of the 7th of May, 1918, all pecuniary revenues and resources of the nationalised institutions were to be paid into the National Bank or the Treasury—all other payments being made by cheque or draft, and only small sums being retained for current accounts. All manufactured products issued were credited to the competent Head Centre (Glavprom), and all raw materials drawn were debited to the enterprise concerned—the accounts being subsequently balanced and cleared if necessary by a subsidy. This system was gradually developed until it included over four-fifths of all urban production and consumption, and reached its limit in a decree of January 6th, 1920, which extended it to the co-operatives.

As War Communism developed, more and more strenuous efforts were made to set up a mechanism that would carry out this immense task. The decree of January 19th, 1920, converted the National Bank into a central accounting department, and the paper money which was then issued was known officially as accountancy certificates (Raschetny znak). The decree of June 18th, 1920, proclaimed a policy of "converting the national budget into a budget of unified economy for the whole State, and establishing a national accountancy without money in order to abolish the whole monetary system." Moreover, in view of the continually depreciating values of the ordinary currency, it was decided under decree of January 10th, 1920, to take as a basis of the national accountancy a unit expressing man-power instead of money. A Commission was still at work on this exciting experiment when in 1921 the whole adventure of War Communism was abandoned.

War Communism and Revenues

One result of thus boldly breaking up the whole system of monetary exchange was that the fiscal machinery broke down. During 1918 and 1919 efforts were made to adapt the incidence and collection of taxes and revenue to the new system. As late as June 18th, 1920, a resolution of the Central Executive Committee was inspired by this reformist policy. But soon after, the ordinary collection of revenue was practically abandoned and it was formally abolished by decree of February 3rd, 1921, on the eve of the New Economic Policy. In 1918 the revenues from taxation were estimated by competent authority (Golobanov, "By New Roads"), as being still 153.2 millions in value reckoned by the index. In 1919 this had fallen to 10.2 million, and in 1920 to 0.2 million. While with the abandonment of War Communism that winter, it was restored in 1921 to 3.7 million.

Communism and Currency

Meantime nationalization was never brought to a point at which money could be completely ignored in the budget. And the only means of providing such money as was still required was the issuing of paper currency. A decree of May 15th, 1919, authorized such emissions without any restrictions, and the issue of fresh paper under such conditions caused, of course, a disproportionate depreciation. In the 32 months of War Communism we find the nominal amount of currency increased a hundredfold. The consequence was that as the nominal amount of money increased, the real amount decreased, as also did the revenue received.

Communism and Budget

It was hoped that by the time the currency had fallen to a point at which it would be less in value than the paper it was printed on, the new money-less mechanism would be working. But it never did work. It will, indeed, now probably never be known what measure of success was really achieved in this Utopian undertaking of organising, in the general public interest, the whole economic exchanges between production and consumption in a country of the area and population of Russia. For all efforts, so far, by Russian economists to find out how far the general economic plan and the system of clearing houses and central accountancy was carried into effect, have failed to produce any clear results. As one such economist observed (Larin, "Roads to Currency Reform," page 17): "The figures of the budgets in the years 1918-1921, only served to illustrate certain interesting tendencies." Subject to this caution the figures are herewith given, together with those of the Tsarist War Budgets:—

Restoration of Money

With the introduction of the New Economic Policy and the gradual re-establishment of free exchange, money as a medium of exchange became indispensable. But the whole process of return to normal conditions lasted over two years, during which several attempts were made to escape recourse to money by experiments in commodity currency.

The first concession from War Communism in finance was made to the Co-operatives, which under decree of June 10th, 1921, were allowed to dispose of their own funds. This was then extended to private persons (June 30th), and finally to the State enterprises (August 16th). The restoration of the right of free internal trade and the reconstruction of economic enterprise, both public and private, on a business basis, brought back a general system of money payments. A decree of August 5th, 1921, made money payment obligatory for all supplies from or services by State enterprises. Herewith went naturally the restoration of taxation, which took the form of an income tax and excises on wine, tobacco, coffee, and such usual sources of revenue.

Restoration of Budget

The first attempt to restore a normal financial system was the "experimental budget" for nine months of 1922,, which had, however, to be three times revised. The budget for 1922-23 was scarcely less hypothetical, and the first budget whose figures had any real relation to facts was that of 1923-24. (Financial year begins on October 1.)

The task of bringing order out of chaos was formidable; for the whole financial and fiscal system had to be rebuilt on fresh foundations. In 1922 the budget was still being based up to four-fifths on commodity exchanges, not on currency payments. On the other hand, it was useless to try to revive the pre-war financial and fiscal system, which had in the first place entirely disappeared, and in the second place was not adapted to the new conditions. Consequently, not only every principle but every practcial detail had to be worked out afresh as a compromise between Communist theory and the force of circumstances. These compromises were a far more severe test of the ability and the authority of the leaders of the Revolution than had been their preceding more ambitious attempts to liquidate the legacy of debt and depreciation left by the war.

The restoration of the budget to a business basis was further complicated by the continued depreciation of the currency, which necessitated a monthly revaluation of the rouble with reference to its buying value in 1913. This was accompanied by periodic revaluations of the various emissions of paper currency, some of which were entirely devalued—such as those issued by reactionary regimes—while others became devalued gradually.

Collapse of Currency

Meantime the printing press had again to pay the budgetary deficit and tide over this second transition. The nominal amount in circulation in January, 1923, just before the reform, was just under two thousand million millions. If the nominal value of this amount be converted into real value we find that the Government succeeded in obtaining by this means revenues about sufficient to cover what the real money deficit probably was. These revenues amounted in 1920 to 130 million, in 1921 to 148 million and in 1922, after the restoration of money, to about 300 million. The smallest returns from this source were in April, May, and June, 1922, which was the crisis of the transition back to normal conditions. It was fortunate that at this time the State was favored by one factor, namely, that during 1921, when circulation increased 136 times, prices only rose about half that proportion, namely, 71 times. As it was a question of months whether the currency would retain some real value long enough for the State to reach currency reform in its program, this success in keeping prices down probably saved the situation.

After mid-summer, 1922, there was a definite turn for the better. It is true that the totals of currency issued became astronomical, and the technical limitations of the printing press were already in sight even though the paper chase in Russia never became quite such a wild goose chase as in Germany. But what mattered was that the revenue proceeds therefrom began nevertheless to increase and the proportional rise in prices to decrease.

Currency Reform

From this point the road to currency reform followed by the Russians was much the same as that by which the Germans extricated themselves from their catastrophe. In fact, the Russian precedent now becomes very instructive as to what can be done by a strong Government without outside help in saving a desperate financial situation.

The first effort to stabilise the currency was the introduction by decree on June 5th, 1921, of the "pre-war rouble" unit in which all payments and accounts, public and private, should be reckoned. This had, however, to be abandoned in favour of a less drastic method, that of fixing an official exchange based on foreign exchange. The difficulty of fixing and paying wages under this method caused the recourse to "goods roubles," a unit calculated from the index of prices, and consequently also called an "index rouble." This was practically a return to the pre-war rouble. Moreover, as pre-war prices were gold prices, the step from the goods rouble to the gold rouble was in principle small, though the practical difficulty of introducing a return to gold was very great. And there was also a strong sentimental objection to the restoration of gold as a standard of value, for it was feared that this would re-open the door to speculative profiteering and foreign penetration. So the theoretic discussions between partisans of the goods rouble and those of the gold rouble soon became as interminable as intricate, and those in favor of the goods roubles had the best of the argument. But long before the fervor of controversy was exhausted, the force of circumstances had decided in favor of gold roubles. The whole principle of N. E. P. was the restoration of all enterprises and exchanges to a business basis; and a business basis in this sense implied a foundation on a gold standard. If the State had not itself restored such a standard in some form, business would have worked one out for itself as in Germany; either by using a foreign standard such as the dollar or by restoring the pre-war rouble.

TRAINING CAMPS ARE CONDEMNED BY MACHINISTS

Local 337 Hits Stand of El Paso Convention

Freiheit Lodge No. 337, International Association of Machinists, at its last regular meeting passed a resolution condemning the attempt of the El Paso convention of the American Federation of Labor to aid the war plans of the bosses by helping the recruiting of workers into the Citizens' Military Training Camps.

The resolution, which exposes the camps as a plan of the open shop bosses to furnish cannon fodder for the next imperialist war, states:

Whereas, The Citizens' Military Training Camps are an institution run jointly by the bosses thru the Military Training Camps Association and the war department for the purpose of bringing military training to those young workers in shops, mills and mines who will be expected to make up 90 per cent of the army in the next war; and

Whereas, The Military Training Camps Association is composed of big "open shop" employers, including such infamous labor haters on its advisory board as Richard T. Crane, Cyrus H. McCormick, Frank O. Lowden and thru the Pullman corporation is connected up with the war-loving house of Morgan; and

Whereas, The Military Training Camps Association dominates the policy of these camps and does its best to see that the camps turn out scabs and strike-breakers as fast as they turn out cannon-fodder; and

Whereas, With the other bosses co-operating in large donations and by giving young workers a month's extended "free vacation" with full pay as a bribe to induce them to attend the camps, the camps are recruiting greater and greater numbers of young workers each year who are given the most intensive military training possible in a month so that they will be ready for the fast approaching war; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we condemn the attempt of the El Paso convention to offer the machinery of the A. F. of L. to the bosses for use in their war schemes and that we at all times condemn any attempt on the part of the bosses to organically connect the American Federation of Labor with the war department to further aid the bloody plans of the imperialists or to any way help in the recruiting of young workers expected to serve as cannon-fodder to another slaughter.

BUILDING STRIKE IF USE OF GRANITE FROM SCAB TOWNS CONTINUES

The Granite Cutters International Union Association of America has warned Chicago architects and builders that if they continue to use granite from Cold Springs and St. Cloud Minnesota, a strike on construction work will follow.

The granite quarries located in these two towns, which supply most of the granite used in this city, are unfair to organized labor. The letter sent out by the union is signed by David D. Gibb, president.

Prove Guilt of Three German Fascists

the investigation of the court, Kindermann and Wolscht denied their guilt and corroborated essentially the actual statements which they had made in the preliminary examination.

The alleged scientific purpose of the expedition was exposed by the court as untenable and ridiculous. Any German group of students, not to speak of Communists, with scientific aims could come into the Soviet Union without fear, without masking themselves with party credentials. It is a fact that the members of the expedition exchanged code telegrams before their departure and made arrangements in case of the possibility of arrest.

It is a fact that Kindermann forged Communist documents and that the other members of the expedition represented themselves to be Communists. This only corroborated to the court that it had to deal with a secret organization.

Finally Admits Guilt.

Second question: How is it to be explained that Wolscht and Kindermann denied their guilt and provided their own explanation for the points in question?

With regard to Kindermann, he has himself explained this, by admitting that in the preliminary examination he simulated in part. He told his fellow-prisoners that he had inserted a few unbelievable things into his statement in order later to have the possibility of rejecting the statements. He reckoned upon freedom and reward as thanks for his statements. When, however, he grasped that the G. P. U. did not need him, he decided to return to his masters once again. Before the court he supported himself in an obvious manner upon governmental and right wing circles in Germany by imparting the information that he had celebrated the birthday of the kaiser in prison and that the Ehrhardt hymn was his favorite song, etc.

Kindermann attempted to mislead the examining judge by declaring for instance, that Wolscht was identical with Boldt, or that Wolscht's father was dead. In this way Kindermann also misled the German press which immediately jumped at the conclusion that the G. P. U. had inadvertently arrested innocents.

The investigation of the court proved, without any possibility of objection that Kindermann had lied. Wolscht's tactic consisted in denying everything, or as far as this was not possible, to admit the facts but to supply them with a harmless significance. In his closing speech Wolscht finally admitted himself to be guilty, he reckoned, however, on the support of German public opinion and threatened that other people in other places would reply to the court.

"Did Not Consider It Necessary."

Third question: Has the court attached any sifinificance to the statements of Rose and Fink and the sworn declarations from Germany?

Answer: The report attached the greatest significance to the statements of Rose and Fink and these partly corroborated the statements of Dittmar. Naturally, neither Rose nor Fink could admit that they were consul members. The explanation of Fink, why he did not carry out the request made by Wolscht's father in a letter, that he should discover whether Wolscht appeared in the list of the Ehrhardt organizations, is typical: Fink explains that it did not occur to him that this was necessary. With regard to the sworn declarations of the German professors which almost all arrived after the close of the proceedings, it was not possible for the court to consider them as decisive for the reason alone that in the best case these professors made statements referring to matters of which they could not be aware, for instance, wether the secret organization consul maintained certain connections with any even the most legal organization or with any of its members, as for instance the student organization or Student Aid service.

Confession Confirmed.

Fourth queston: What produced the confession of Dittmar? Did the court find no elements which lessened the worth of this confession and the decisions of the court?

Answer: The confession of Dittmar is the result of a psychological and political turn which took place under the influence of a basic revision of his previous life. The court had no reason to doubt the honesty of his confession. The statements of Dittmar were what is more, strengthened by those of Kindermann and Wolscht and Baumann.

Plan to Undermine Soviet.

Fifth question: Is there a reason to regard the accused as a troup of the international reaction? Is not the youth of the accused and their obvious adventurous temperaments in contradiction to the extensive plans for the undermining of the Soviet power?

Answer: As far as the membership of the accused to the organization consul was proved before the court, their youth ceases to play an important role. Just this youth and the circumstance that the accused presented themselves as students was a cover for the criminal intent with which they came to Russia. As far as the adventurous character is concerned, this is least of all proved of Wolscht and Dittmar.

From the fact that the whole ended with an adventure, it by no means follows that it must necessarily have done so. If the arrests had not taken place, the most tragic results might have followed. The ill success of the so-called expedition is due to the fact that the participants in it considered us to be more naive than we are, and believed themselves able to deceive us.

Germany Must Know Facts.

Sixth question: Will not the sentence have a strong effect upon public opinion in Germany, as this can be already recognized from the previous press opinions?

This question is difficult to answer. As far as the bourgeois press is concerned, it has in any case always previously used the slightest thing in order to malign us. It is sufficient to mention the Liepsig Cheka Process which represented a direct frame-up to compromise the Soviet government and the Soviet embassy, or the story of the provocatuer Bozenhardt. Naturally, such facts and such an attitude harm above all the interests of the German people.

If the Soviet press took up the same attitude towards the German, the relations between the two countries could be adversely affected. In the last few years so many feraful sentences have been passed upon Communists, that the firm sentence upon the three fascists simply pales before them. Naturally, German public opinion must be provided with the exhaustive and documentary material upon the Moscow consul process. The lies and calumnies must be met with facts and documents.

TRADE UNIONS IN RUSSIA DISCUSS CARE OF ORPHANS

Homeless Children Is Problem Facing Them

By LAURA BRANNIN.

MOSCOW, July 26.—The second conference of the "Friends of Children," a delegated body of about 1,200 trade union men and women, mostly women, met here last week to further their plans for this work.

Discuss World Affairs.

The first number on the program, however, was a 40-minute discussion of world affairs. The subject had no particular connection with the purposes of the conference, but it is the habit in this country of new values to open every meeting of any size with such a talk. This speaker was alive, told the story graphically, yet without technical terminology. Written questions poured up to the chairman thruout the talk, but owing to pressure of other business they were answered in the papers the following day.

Then came a demonstration of the tremendous vitality expressed in the average meeting here. After reports from various districts, some impatient men attempted to cut off the discussion; one woman after another frankly told the men to go home, that they had called the meeting for just that thing and were not to be balked. But while the women wanted to talk things over, they would not listen to speakers who ambled. One little woman was repeating herself and the crowd began to applaud, which in Russia means "Cut it short" and she did. Quickly following this came a motion to limit each discussion to three minutes. Unanimously carried.

50,000 In Homes.

At this time Moscow has about 50,000 children in homes cared for by the state. One district thru the society is taking charge of a play ground reserved just for the homeless youngsters; this is an attempt to so interest them that they will find happiness in this particular environment and not wander all over the city. They are given three meals a day and a bed at night.

One delegate reported that a Red soldier club had adopted a group of boys. This had already been done by various factory clubs. The society is organizing shops where the older children can be taught trades, this in connection with factories where they work a few hours a day and receive academic training in addition.

The society was first organized at the time of the famine; it has now been diverted to this work; has a membership in Moscow of 304,000 and is caring for 4,000 children.

Greek Workers Fight for Right of Free Speech

NEW YORK—The police of New York, acting under instruction, have stopped street meetings arranged by the Greek branch of the Workers Party on the west side. Only a short time ago, a speaker and the chairman of the meeting were arrested, the speaker being discharged and the chairman being fined $5 for "disorderly conduct." This interference of the police was repeated at the demonstration arranged by the Workers Party and the Young Workers League on Union Square last Friday night.

The Greek comrades were not to be daunted by these acts of interference by the police. Either we have free speech—as supposedly guaranteed by the constitution—or the workers of this country should be told openly that there is free speech on the books but not in reality.

The Greek branch arranged a meeting at 39th St. and 8th Ave. and the meeting was in progress, when a policeman appeared an ordered the chairman to stop the meeting. The chairman produced his notice to the police about his meeting; the cop was not satisfied and called up the station who instructed him to stop the meeting. Two more speakers mounted the platform as the chairman was arrested. A fourth speaker mounted the platform, but the cop went off with his three victims. The meeting continued with an English speaker.

Meantime the three comrades, Anis, Dritsas and Jamos, went to the night court, where the judge inquired what their "crime" was. They were holding a meeting. The judge inquired of the cop why he stopped the meeting. "I received instruction from the station." That is no reason. He asked for the name of the party, took the name and number of the cop and declared that free speech will be maintained.

BUILDERS AT WORK

Small and Big Communists Do the Work.

Youth Must Have Its Fling in Chicago.

Among Builders there need be no age restrictions. Old and young can build the DAILY WORKER—and in Chicago youth is having its day.

The Chicago Local of the Young Workers League is in a campaign for subs to the YOUNG WORKER. But is is being conducted in a novel way. Securing the lists of all subscribers to the DAILY WORKER and the Workers Monthly they are making personal visits to all of them for a sub to the YOUNG WORKER and the YOUNG COMRADE. And they're getting whole stacks of new subs to their papers.

But that is not all. While they are visiting the Big Reds for subs for the Little Reds, they are also getting subs for the DAILY WORKER on the way. And never was there a better job done.

Area Branch No. 5 alone, in one week has secured 32 new subs to the YOUNG WORKER, one bundle order, one new sub to the DAILY WORKER, one new sub to the YOUNG COMRADE, and several donations.

This is the record of only one branch that in one week's time has secured two-thirds of its quota set by challenges between branches. And here is another feature of the campaign. In no single instance where the Flaming (Red) Youth went out to get sub, has a single member failed to come back with less than one sub.

Youth is surely setting the pace for Communist activity and the older Builders will have to step lively to keep up—if they can.

NUTTY SCISSOR BILL FAILS TO HOLD AUDIENCE

Following arrests in Cicero a week ago when two comrades were arrested for speaking on the streets and subsequently discharged, another meeting was held on the corner of 49 Ct. and 14 St. Thursday night. There was a big crowd. Comrade Andolius spoke and was followed by Comrade F. G. Biedenkapp who had continued a half hour or so when he discovered he had competition.

Across the streets an aspiring young soap-boxer arose. He said he was a god-fearing man who was employed by the American Express company. He said he loved his country and his work. "Those people across the street are Bolsheviks" he shouted, "And do you know what? 95 per cent of all Bolsheviks are nothing but loafers and the other 5 per cent are millionaires."

The scissor-bill had a loud voice. For a while he attracted the crowd. But when the audience discovered he was a nut, and that didn't take long, it decided to come back to hear Biedenkapp talk sense.

The freak was put up on the corner to attempt to break up the regular Communist meeting by the bosses and churchmen of Cicero who could not get the police to stick to their job. The trick didn't work.

Start Communist School Sept. 13 at Los Angeles, Calif.

LOS ANGELES, Cal.—A Communist School will be started by the party local of Los Angeles beginning Sept. 13, for the purpose of training leaders for the movement. The Party School, for Workers Party and League members, will be conducted on the only days that Communists have to themselves, that is, Sundays. There will be four one-hour courses given for a period of six Sundays in succession, from 2 to 6 p. m.

The courses to be given are as follows: History of the Labor Movement, by Levin; Public Speaking, by Schneiderman; Marxian Economics, by Baker; History of the Socialist Movement, by Kaplan.

It is expected that the school will give valuable training to League and Party members who can be useful for our activities, and is attracting a good many who are anxious to enroll. There will be a small entrance fee, and every students will be held rigidly and strictly to business for the few weeks the courses will last. The success of the school will be especially important to the party because of the lack of enuf active comrades who can give their services to the movement.

We hope that the idea of week-end Party Schools such as this will be more extensively used by other branches and locals thruout this country, wherever their forces are limited.

POSTAL WORKERS THREATENED WITH NEW WAGE CUTS

While Big Business Gets Low Rates

WASHINGTON, D. C. July 26.—Under cover of a congressional committee and official department report a New-Morgan conspiracy is being hatched against the postal workers It is just a bare seven months since these workers received a raise, promised them for the last seven years and a scant four months since postage rates were increased to meet this raise in wages.

Already Postmaster General New himself a publisher, is voicing the cry of the publishing and mail-order house magnates that "the post-office budget is a failure" and that "something must be done about it."

Hold Hearings in Capitol.

A joint congressional committee under Senator Moses of Vermont is now holding hearings in the Capital on this matter.

Called as its first witness before this committee, Mr. New gave testimony based on a report that he himself characterized as "a merest guess." He stated that [illegible]ly from $8 to 30 million dollars will accrue from the increase in postal rates. The workers increase in wages costs the government an additional 68 million. A deficit of approximately 40 million may therefore be expected.

This deficit must be wiped out at the expense of the postal workers, insisted and urged the representative of the U. S. chamber of commerce, the executive committee of Wall Street at Washington.

Wage Cutting Working Force.

Thru its postal service committee, Lucius Testir, Col. A. B. Barber, and F. J. Gross, it urged the committee to enforce greater efficiency in the postal service as to be able to cut down a large portion of the working force, thus wiping out the deficit. They were strongly opposed to any further increase in postal rates to wipe out this deficit. They even insisted upon a further reduction in rates, claiming that this would result in a larger volume of business.

All this is urged on top of the 'speed-up" system already instituted by assistant post-master general Stewart immediately after the wage raise went into effect. A system was then introduced of counting and weighing the clerks' and carriers' work—the unit system—and of increasing the carriers delivery routes and cutting the time allowed for making such delivery so that even now one man actually does two men's work. Only in this way is the post office taking care of its everincreasing volume of business by a frightfully undermanned force.

Low Rates To Blame.

So far no spokesman has appeared for the postal workers to point out that the deficit is due, not to an overmanned force or to high wages—$1700 per year, is their basic wage—but to the riduculously low rates that the publishers and mail order houses are paying for the services the post office renders.

Robbers Break Man's Neck.

One man's neck was broken and three other employes were battered into unconsciousness with crowbars when they attempted early today to stop safeblowers in the act of robbing the safe of the Cascade Laundry company. The dead man was Arthur Long, driver for the company.

Birds of a Feather

Three prominent labor fakers are "doing their stuff" against the radicals at this moment to the great delight of the bosses.

William Johnston, alias "B. & O. Bill" of the International Association of Machinists, after stealing the election from his opponent, J. F. Anderson, has decided to expel all known Communists and progressives from the international union. He has already started by expelling Anderson.

Sidney Hillman, erstwhile progressive, has taken a leaf out of the book of the A. F. of L. labor fakers and is using the traditional methods of the reactionaries to maintain himself in office. Hillman not only has radicals expelled from the union, but he uses policemen and sluggers to beat them into insensibility when they insist on their rights.

The third member of this unholy trinity is George L. Berry, president of the International Printing Pressmen's Union. Berry is a professional union strikebreaker. He not only broke a strike of the New York Web Pressmen's Union, but he had David Simmons, the former president of that organization blacklisted, so that he could not find work at his trade. Thus the scoundrelly fakers descend to the lowest depth that any human being can crawl, that is, taking the bread and butter out of the mouths of men who are too honest to ply their crooked game.

The three above-mentioned are only typical examples. Those skates know very well that whenever there is a strike, the Communists are always in the front of the line. Hillman knows that better than anybody else. If he wants to know what the Communists are doing in the strike against the International Tailoring Company in Chicago he can ask Sam Levin, who was obliged to admit privately that The DAILY WORKER was rendering splendid service to the union in this big strike.

In fact it was The DAILY WORKER that opened up the campaign against the scabbery of the United Garment Workers and forced Fitzpatrcik and Nockels reluctantly to take action, even tho Nockels exonerated Tom Rickert, declaring that he would do the same thing himself if he were in Rickert's position.

The Communists support the workers in strikes not because they have any desire to help the reactionary officials but because they want to help the rank and file improve their conditions. The workers may be fooled for a while into believing the Communists are not their friends, thru the misrepresentations of the reactionaries, but they will learn in time as the thousands of members of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union are learning now.

What is happening to Sigman will also be the lot of Hillman and "B. & O. Bill" Johnston. The arch-traitor George L. Berry will not escape either.

Why the Note Was Not Sent

Quite recently the capitalist papers used scare headlines in featuring the intention of the British government and other European powers to send a Joint Note to Russia warning that country that it must outlaw the Communist International unless it was ready to break with its capitalist neighbors. The note was never sent.

The diplomatic correspondent of the London Daily Herald, W. N. Ewer, gives the reasons in a recent issue of that paper. The announcement of joint action was made prematurely because the Birkenhead wing of the cabinet desired to force matters. The foreign office had not made the necessary diplomatic preparation for the joint offensive against Russia. Italy refused point blank to have anything to do with it. France sent a sympathetic reply to the British invitation, but outside of politeness, there was nothing in the French note that would indicate co-operation.

The Germans were willing to bargain but even the present monarchist clique in Berlin dares not go too far in playing with Britain against Soviet Russia.

Britain started out by bribing the easily bribed Parisian papers. When the clink fo British gold made itself felt in the editorial rooms of the Paris reactionary newspapers, the anti-Soviet thunder was turned loose.

The Echo de Paris said: "The only music that counts, in face of Communist barbarism, is that of the heavy guns trained on the horizon of Cornstadt, from turrets of the British cruisers."

Another paper called for a "world crusade against Bolshevism, and still another showed what was back of the heads of those who framed the security pact when it blurted out: "The anti-Soviet bloc of which the London cabinet is thinking must include Germany if it is to be complete. That is the real meaning of the pact, the secret and profound reason for its existence."

And the British cabinet, isolated in China thru the consequences of its own imperialist stupidity and greed did not dare risk another isolation over Russia.

In addition to those reasons British labor served notice on the tory cabinet that several millions of British workers would have something to say in the matter. So the note was never sent.

A Good Place to Start

The Chicago Tribune is constantly calling attention to the deplorable lack of order that prevails in other countries, particularly in those countries on which American capitalism has cast its eagle eye. Whenever a thieving agent of the oil companies gets into trouble in Mexico, the Trib spreads out its wings and calls for an invasion of the Mexican republic.

But even the Tribune has to admit that there is a lot of cleaning-up to be done at home. We would like to know what the Russian workers and peasants will think of the following editorial excerpt from the Chicago Tribune, of July 23:

"The administration of justice is flat on its back here and elsewhere in this country and criminals are on top of it, sticking their fingers in its eyes. Our murderers, panderers, rapists, pickpockets and thugs walk out of court, out of jail, out of the penitentiary. The law cannot punish them. They are bosses of this state."

Now, it is passing strange that such a state of affairs could exist in this blessed land of capitalism. Rapists walking out of court! Panderers going scott free. We thought such things could only happen in a country "cursed" with Bolshevism. But it must be so. The great Tribune admits it.

We suggest in all sincerity that the next time the editor of the Tribune is seized with an insatiable thirst for human blood, that he takes his eyes off Mexico and chase the rapists and the panderers. Or better still, instead of shooting them, he might give them a lecture on the beauties of capitalist civilization.

The ku klux klan is splitting up into as many fragments as there are fleas on a dog. When the supply of suckers was exhausted the 100 per centers forgot about the Jews, Negroes and non-Nordics in general long enough to make a raid on what was left in the treasury

CLOTH STRIKERS DEMAND DEVER REMOVE POLICE

No Action Yet Against Slugging Officer 4011

The two striking members of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, Emil Arlt and Joseph Cerny, who were badly beaten up as they walked the picket line in front of the International Tailoring company at 847 W. Jackson boulevard, have visited Mayor Dever and Chief of Police Collins and demanded that police brutality against the strikers cease. The strikers, acting as a committee appointed by the Amalgamated Union, first visited Chief Police Collins.

Collins was told how officer number 4011, and other officers, acted as sluggers for the International bosses, beating the strikers with the butts of their revolvers. They demanded that action be taken against the perpetrators of these murderous assaults.

Beat Girl Picket.

Collins promised that two of the officers would be removed, but police violence continues, and more drastic action against the police sluggers may have to be taken.

The two pickets told how Frances De Spena was beaten so badly by the police that she required medical attention. Then they went to Mayor Devers' office, but were given scant attention by the mayor.

Joins the Union.

One of those arrested, Henry Rubin, had come from Baltimore to secure employment and worked one day in the International plant. When Rubin learned that there was a strike on, he quit work immediately, joined the Amalgamated, and went on the picket line. He was charged with "disorderly conduct" and his bail was placed at $400.

Others arrested were Thomas Kolar and William Scarman, charged with "assault and battery," their bail being placed at $1,000.00 each, and Dominic Camera, out on $400 bail, on a disorderly conduct charge.

More Lies of Bosses Exposed.

The strikers were paying no attention to the bogus "news" story pasted on the window of the International building on Peoria street. This story was a clipping from the Daily News Record, which contained a pack of lies written by the garment bosses.

The paper is owned by the clothing manufacturers, and prints nothing but slanders and lies directed against the workers. The paper is copyrighted by the Fairchild News Service, a corporation closely linked up with the garment bosses' associations.

De Novi Tells of Arrest.

Mike De Novi, business agent of the union, told the DAILY WORKER of his arrest at the hands of the police sluggers, who handled him roughly. "I have been in America eighteen years," said De Novi, "and I came here thinking I would find liberty. Instead I find that strikers are beaten when they demand decent working conditions."

"White Collar" Workers Threaten Nation-wide Strike in France

PARIS, July 26.—France faced a possible strike of "white collar" workers today.

Bank officials feared that the movement started in Marseilles, where bank employes struck Thursday, and followed in Paris by the walkout of employes of the National Bank of Credit, might become a general strike of clerks all over the country.

THE American Association for the recognition of the Irish Republic has protested to the pope against the cruel and inhuman treatment meted out to Irish republicans, in Ireland by the bishops and other clergy who are supporting the Free State. Why did not the association ask Mussolini for protection? Irish republican representatives in Italy have been singing the praises of Mussolini, Poincare in France and Hindenburg in Germany, while ignoring the revolutionary working class movement all over the world; the only movement that will free Ireland, China, Egypt, India and all countries including the Philippines from the yoke of foreign imperialism. The pope will do nothing to help Ireland secure a republic. His relations with England are too close and too lucrative.

THE private loans of the United States to foreigners now comprise the enormous sum of $9,500,000,000. Over half a billion dollars in American capital went out of the country during the first half of the current year. Britain used to be the leader in exporting capital but that position is no longer hers. She has passed up the sceptre to Wall Street. Is it any wonder that our rulers should cry for a large navy? Navies come in very handy for collecting debts.

THE president is ready to halt the miners strike, it is reported. He will not have much trouble in handling the situation as long as the miners leave John L. Lewis in charge of the union. Lewis declared once before that he could not fight the government. He still thinks that is the best thing he ever said. Gompers did not think so when Lewis ran against him for president at the Denver convention. But Gompers was only posing, as usual. He wanted to put Lewis in a bad light as a man who feared to go to jail. Coolidge will not be forced to duplicate the action he took during the 1919 police strike in Boston.

THE British miners have given orders that all members of the federation shall bring their tools out of the mines on August 31st. There is a possibility that the coal miners of France, Belgium and Germany may strike simultaneously with their British fellow workers. The Belgian and French operators have taken advantage of the Dawes plan to beat down the wages of their slaves. If the Dawes plan is good for the bosses, it certainly is not good for the workers. Yet the social democrats in Europe supported the Dawes plan.

A. J. COOK, secretary of the British Miners Federation said that the miners were ready for peace but if a conflict was forced upon them, Brittian would see the greatest industrial conflict in its history. "There will be no black Friday, this time" said Cook. He also made the significant remark that he hoped the miners would not be forced to destroy any pits. "We may be taking them over soon" he added "and we don't want to destroy our own property." Events are moving fast in Europe. The old empire is falling and with her will come down the whole fabric of capitalist robbery.

Trying to Dodge Scandal.

OCEAN CITY, Md., July 26.—Rep. John Philip Hill (R), of Maryland, in a statement issued here today branded the reorganization of federal prohibition methods as an "effort to escape national scandal."

"In proceeding to clean house in this fashion," said the Maryland wet leader, "a roundabout course is being pursued so that the dirty linen will not have to be washed in public. It is being done this way to avoid a national scandal."

STREET SPEAKERS ARE FINED ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS

Quoted from Industrial Relations Report

F. G. Biedenkapp and M. Marek appeared in the Superior Ave. police court Friday morning to answer charges of disorderly conduct made by the policeman who arrested them Saturday, July 18, on the corner of Milwaukee and Division where the two were holding a street meeting. Attorney Bentall appeared for the defendants. The defendants were called before Judge Richardson. He asked Biedenkapp what he worked at. Biedenkapp replied that he was a labor organizer.

The officer who made the arrests had nothing to submit to prove disorderly conduct except a leaflet that Biedenkapp had quoted from while speaking. The leaflet contained four points taken from the famous report of the industrial relations commissino made to the president of the United States in 1912. The points were headed: "Four Causes of Industrial Unrest" and were as follows:

1. Unjust distribution of wealth and income.
2. Denial of justice in adjucation and administration of law.
3. Denial of the right and opportunity to earn a living.
4. Denial of the right to form effective labor organizations.

After discovering that the men before him were labor agitators, the judge took a sudden interest in the leaflet. He read it over carefully. Looking up with a not at all pleasant look on his face he said nothing but "I fine the defendants in this case $100.00 and costs."

But that isn't where the case is going to stand. Attorney Bentall is sore as a boil. He immediately appealed the case and it will come up again.

It is interesting to know that the complaint that caused the arrest of Marek and Biedenkapp was lodged by a banker named John Smolsky whose bank stands on the corner where the meeting occurred.

TRIPLE ALLIANCE OF U. S. MINE, RAIL AND MARINE UNIONS, CALL OF LEFT WING MINE COMMITTEE

By ALEX REID

(Secretary Progressive Miners' Committee.)

No settlement of the wage controversy between the United Mine Workers of America and the anthracite mine owners is in sight at the time of writing. The tortured slaves of the anthracite coal fields of America, verging on physical collapse, because of insufficient wages for their labor properly to feed themselves, are now facing a bitter struggle to force the murderous coal barons of the Pennsylvania hard coal to grant them a mere ten per cent increase in their wages.

Owners in Luxury—Miners in Poverty.

Billions of dollars of profit were sweated out of the blood of the miners last year. The coal mine owners are living a life of luxury. Men who never see the mines, men who don't even know what a mine looks like, living in the great hotels of the country and sailing the high seas in their yachts eating and drinking of the bodies and blood of the murdered men sacrificed to their lust for profit. Over 500 men were killed last year and 30,000 men injured in the anthracite alone. In-

AS WE SEE IT

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY

THE Chinese workers are assured of "affectionate admiration" of what is left of the socialist party of America. Far be it from us to spurn the affection of even an unrepentant prostitute like the socialist party, in such a world shaking emergency, particularly when the messenger of good will is the Rev. Norman Thomas, whose saintly officiation tends to throw a halo of sanctity around the deed. But no sooner were we ready to say "hear, hear" than another paragraph in the same message of admiration caught our eye. This called on Coolidge, Dawes and Kellog to take the lead in freeing China. Thomas might as well have called on J. P. Morgan to start the social revolution or on William Jennings Bryan to refuse a nomination to run for the presidency.

THE Chinese are getting along rather nicely in their fight for emancipation, but they are not taking much stock in resolutions of affection and admiration unless they are accompanied by more tangible proof of sincerity. The Chinese have found that American capitalism has been just as subversive of their rights as British and Japanese capitalism, but it typically socialist that the American brand should hand the task of "freeing" China to their own exploiters. The only country in the world that aided China is Soviet Russia. Why does the Norman Thomas message ignore this fact?

ANOTHER resolution passed by the national executive of the socialist party throws a big boquet of roses at Calles, president of Mexico. It brands him as a socialist. We have no doubt that he deserves the aspersion. He is as much of a socialist as Morris Sigman or Victor Berger. Recently Calles called out the troops to break a strike. In fact his minister of labor, Morone (not moron) under the tutelage of

Arrested for Sunday "Movies."

CHAMPAIGN, Ill., July 27—Proprietors of two Urbana moving picture theaters were under $200 bond today for operating their theaters on Sunday. It was the first Sunday in the history of the city that motion picture theaters were open and a test case will be made. A city ordinance prohibits Sunday movies. Both theaters played to capacity houses. A hearing likely will be held early this week.

"NO COAL MOVED WHILE MINERS STRIKE," WARN BRITISH RAILWAY MEN

LONDON, England, July 27.—It is generally agreed that the labor situation is bad as the crucial week opens before Friday's threatened walkout in the coal industry. There is a serious threat of a general strike, as the railroad men have agreed not to move any coal if the miners go out.

Prime Minister Baldwin admitted in a speech he made Saturday that "we are faced either by an abyss of despotism or an abyss of anarchy." Yet all responsible parties hope that the strike will be staved off and that some last-minute compromise will be effected.

Lord Stamfordham, the king's private secretary, visited the prime minister, who spent all of Sunday at Downing street, and presented the royal views and desire for mediation to prevent a strike.

Challenge Brookhart Ballots in Effort to Make Steck Senator

WASHINGTON, July 27.—Attorneys for Daniel F. Steck, democrat, who is contesting the election of the insurgent republican, Smith W. Brookhart, to the United States senate from Iowa, today challenged fifty ballots which had been counted for Brookhart in Cedar and Serro Gordo counties. The ballots were marked at the top as a straight republican ticket and also had Brookhart's name written into the progressive column.

Several clerical errors were found, but the general situation was unchanged with Brookhart substantially in the lead.

MASS PICKETING ON 5TH WEEK OF GARMENT STRIKE

Amalgamated Calls Rock Island Bluff

The Amalgamated strikers employed by the International Tailoring company and the J. L. Taylor company began the fifth week of their walkout yesterday with their picket line better organized and showing even more solidarity than when the strike began.

Strike benefits of $12.00 to married workers and $8.00 to those without dependents were paid at the strike meeting in Hod Carriers' Hall, 814 W. Harrison St.

The Amalgamated officials voiced the sentiment of the strikers when they announced that if the International Tailoring company moved its business to Rock Island, as had been announced, the union would follow the company there, and continue its picketing. The strikers loudly applauded this announcement.

The company had spread rumors that the Boone Woolen mills had been bought and the concern would be moved. Two foreman were sent out to Rock Island as a bluff to break the solidarity of the strikers but they were not fooled by this maneuver.

Pickets Regularly Assigned

The pickets are now being regularly assigned to duty, and are given definite posts. The picket line is or-

FRANCO-BELGIAN UNIONISTS AT MOSCOW CALL FOR WORLD UNITY OF UNIONS AGAINST CAPITALISM

(By International Press Correspondence.)

MOSCOW, U. S. S. R., July 13—(By Mail.)—The Franco-Belgian Trade Union Dleegation, consisting of eleven officials of the French and Belgian reformist trade unions, has just completed a journey within the Soviet Union, where it studied the factories, the trade unions and cultural institutions. The delegation has handed a declaration, signed by all its members, to the chairman of the All-Russian Trade Union Council, Tomsky, from which declaration the following brief quotations are taken:

"We are fraternally welcomed in all the Republics of the Soviet Union. We are of the opinion that the trade union work in the Soviet Republic is logically thought out and that it has a just basis.

"The masses of membership of the trade unions, themselves are responsible for the direction of the trade union work, and they themselves solve the most important questions.

"In our opinion, many of the fundamental principles which are applied in the Russian trade unions would be very much in place in the trade unions of our own countries.

"In the various shops we have visited, we have seen that the maximum of results is attained with a backward technique of production. Despite the fact that you are exposed to the ostracism of world capital, you perform a wonder by re-establishing successfully your national industry, despite the difficult heritage of the imperialist and civil wars and despite the blockade.

"Each honest proletarian, after he has seen what is being done in the Soviet Union, must fight still more energetically for the unity of the international trade union movement.

"We no longer wish to bear the responsibility with those sections which pursue a disruptive policy—the greatest crime against the working class movement. Great psychological mistakes have been made and still greater ones will be made unless the hate against imperialism and the fraternal unity of all proletarians are once again re-established.

Unity and Revolution!

"The ruptures and the difficulties in the trade union movement are of advantage only to capitalism and are exploited by it. Both must go. A minimum program must be discovered, and we must go after a loyal struggle against all difficulties to the common aim of all proletarians—the world revolution, the overthrow of

STAFFORD TORN FROM HIS FAMILY BY DEPORTATION

Mystery Surrounds the Action Against Miner

The why and wherefore of the hasty and secret deportation to Italy of Tony Stafford is still shrouded in mystery. Stafford was a labor prisoner serving a long sentence in Moundsville penitentiary. He was one of the eight hundred coal miners indicted following the mine war in West Virginia in the fall of 1921 during which a number of miners and company gunmen were killed. Three men, Tony Stafford, Edgar Combs and George Barrett were picked as the victims.

Suddenly, on July 11, Tony Stafford was removed from Moundsville by Federal officers and taken to Pittsburgh County Jail. He was held there no more than a few hours when he was shipped off to Ellis Esland. There he sent the following telegram to his wife, "At Ellis Island, can do nothing myself, do your best." Shortly after sending this telegram he was put aboard the "Giuseppe Verdi", bound for Naples.

Stafford leaves behind a wife and four children whom he had not seen for years. Mrs. Mattie Stafford was destitute and powerless to help her husband. She wrote a letter to the National Office of the International Labor Defense in Chicago asking for help. The I. L. D. immediately notified its New York representatives. It was too late.

A letter just received from Beckley, W. Va., by International Labor Defense was written by Sadie Stafford. A photograph of the four children was enclosed. Sadie, the only girl, appears to be no more than nine or ten years of age. Here is the letter.

Letter from Miner's Daughter.

"Dear Sir:—We have just received your letter. Mother is not able to write just at present, but she asked me to send these pictures and cards to you at once. We are afraid it is too late now. We send you the last word we had from father (telegram enclosed). You may be able to see him yet. We wrote Secretary Davis the day we received wire from father. Mother will write you soon. We truly

The Present Situation and the Immediate Tasks of the Party

The following resolution was unanimously adopted by the Parity Commission for submission to the National Convention of the Workers (Communist) Party:

I. The World Situation.

DESPITE the assertions of the capitalists and their agents in the labor movement (the leaders of the Second International and the right wing of the Amsterdam International) that capitalism has emerged from its critical stage and has succeeded in stabilizing itself, the world situation continues to remain revolutionary. This imposes upon the Communist parties of the world the duty of educating and organizing the working class for a struggle for power and for the establishment of the dictatorship of the proletariat. The capitalists have been seeking for some means of avoiding the consequences of the inner contradictions of capitalism which threatens its destruction. The world war was a logical climax of these contradictions. The end of the war left capitalism economically weakened, yet with all the contradictions and conflicting interests apparent in sharpened form, threatening a new catastrophe and complete breakdown of the capitalist system.

The analysis of the world situation given by the last plenum of the E. C. C. I. has proven to be absolutely correct. The so-called stabilization of capitalism is in reality very temporary, partial and relative in its nature. World production in the capitalist countries of Europe during the first half of 1925 is still below the prewar level and is continuing on a down grade. At the same time the political crisis are appearing almost daily. struggles in capitalist Europe are continually grown in intensity. New political crises are appearing almost daily. white terror in Bulgaria, the election of Hindenburg, the change of government in France, etc., etc., are merely the result of the continuing instability of capitalism and the sharpening of the class struggle.

2. History proves, however, with increasing certainty, that the problems of capitalism in the imperialist era cannot be solved by the capitalists. The temporary adjustment of the conflict over German reparations thru the Dawes plan and the temporary and partial stabilization of the capitalist economic order in Europe had no soner been accomplished than the imperialist conflict broke out in a new form in the struggle of the suppressed peoples of Morocco and China to free themselves from the exploitation and political domination of the great imperialist powers.

3. The war in Morocco and the struggle in China emphasize the instability of the capitalist social order. They are the outcome of conflicting interests which characterize the imperialist era of capitalism. The people of Morocco and China are fighting against imperialist exploitation, without which capitalism cannot exist in the present period of its development. Capitalism must have investment opportunities which exist in the spheres of influence of undeveloped countries and it must have the raw materials of these countries. The struggle for these between the imperialist powers and the struggle against exploitation and oppression by the suppressed peoples of these countries are the sparks which light the powdered magazine of capitalism, resulting in the explosion which brings the destruction of millions of lives and billions of wealth as in the world war, and the consequent reduction in production and the standard of life of the workers.

4. The present world situation of capitalism again proves that the only force which can avert the menace of new wars is the working class. It is only thru a victorious revolutionary struggle against the imperialist capitalist governments that the working class can escape from the suffering which the imperialist era of capitalism brings upon it.

5. In contrast to this situation in the capitalist world, stands the Soviet Union. In spite of all the attacks of international capitalism made in an effort to destroy the Soviett government and prevent the creation of a new social order, the creation of that new social order goes forward step by step. Already Soviet Russia has been able to raise the standard of life of its workers higher than in 1914 while the balance of Europe—capitalist Europe—has reduced the standard of life of its workers. The Soviet Union thus becomes increasingly an inspiration to the workers of the capitalist countries to enter the struggle to win their freedom from capitalist exploitation and oppression.

II. The Present Economic Situation in the United States.

1. The present economic situation in the United States is marked by the following characteristic. The increasing export of capital during 1924 and the beginning of 1925 continues still more deeply to involve the United States in every imperialist struggle of today. American capital, in its urge towards world domination, is thus becoming involved in all the contradictions, crises, and struggles of world capitalism. This factor is also producing sharp conflicts within the capitalist class of America on the one hand, such as the struggle between finance and industrial capital over the question of foreign investments and the tariff, and is intensifying the struggle between the working class and the capitalist class on the other hand

2. We are today in a period of diminishing production. The predicted prosperity from the adoption of the Dawes plan has not developed in the United States. Production continues holtingly and hesitatingly, but on a downward grade. Wages are being steadily reduced while the cost of living is rising slowly. The coal industry finds itself in a chronically critical situation resulting in thousands of miners being thrown out of employment. The general instability of the wheat market is seriously effecting the buying power of large sections of farmers, thus further aggravating the economic situation. General unemployment has become a chronic feature of the economic situation in the United States.

III. The Growth of Imperialism and Militarism.

1. American imperialism is extending its policy of the political and military conquest of its spheres of economic influence. Latin-America is evermore becoming a political and military dependency of the United States. This sharpens the relations of the Latin-American countries to the United States and is creating the basis for interventions and military aggression by the United States against the republics of Latin-America. It also creates the basis for anti-imperialist and at the same time nationalist revolutionary movements among the peasants and workers of South America.

2. The export of capital from America into Europe, thru the operation of the Dawes plan and otherwise, has created new contradictions and conflicts. American imperialism in Europe is reaching a stage when political and military interference in the affairs of Europe is becoming the order of the day. Hence, the tremendous growth of militaristic propaganda and preparations in the United States.

3 American imperialism is also heavily increasing its export of capital to China and the whole Far East. America is winning a firmer hold on the great Far Eastern market. The increasing interest of American imperialism in the Far East is shown by the recent gigantic American naval maneuvers in the Pacific and the visit of the United States Pacific fleet to Australia. In the present Chinese crisis the American imperialist gov-

UNEMPLOYED IN ENGLAND FORCE SOVIET TRADE

Mass Demonstrations Led by Communists

MOSCOW, U. S. S. R.—An article in the Pravda on the special convention of the British trade unions, which tells of the recent unemployment demonstrations, declares:

"The decision of the general council of the British trade unions to call a special congress at the end of July, is an immediate result of tremendous manifestations which took place all over England and the general council intends to have only one question on the agenda of this special congress, the question of unemployment.

"The London Times reports the unemployment demonstrations as the most tremendous in the last year. The paper is especially disturbed by the slogans of the demonstration, 'Long Live Soviet Russia,' 'Thieves, Hands Off China,' 'When the Next War Comes We Shall Be In the Ranks of the Red Army,' 'Capital is Bankrupt,' 'We are the Creditors,' 'All Power to the Workers.'

"The resolution of the general council contains only two points. The first point concerns matters of state character necessary for the decrease of unemployment, namely, the development and utiliation of the productive forces of the country.

Recommend Trade With Soviet.

"The second point speaks of international measures of the struggle against unemployment and contains the recommendation for the development of commerce generally and establishment of favorable commercial conditions for trade with Soviet Russia in particular.

"The moderate resolution of the general trade union council and the radical slogans of the unemployed is explained by the fact that the initiative in organizing this demonstration came from the national committee of the unemployment movement. The movement consists of two parts. One part is chosen by the local committees of unemployed which are controlled by Communists.

"The second part is composed of delegates appointed by the general council of the trade unions. The movement is actually guided by the local committees. The two leaders of the movement are comrades Hennington and Holt, who played an exceptionally prominent role in the organization of the tremendous marches of unemployed during the first years of the world war.

"In order to receive the sanction of the general council for these recent demonstrations, the local committees were willing to accept this conservative resolution and thus make the mass demonstrations possible."

President Green of the American Federation of Labor introduced a bill in the legislature making strikes under certain conditions illegal. With that kind of a socialist president, the bankers have no quarrel.

WHEN Kellog issued the uncouth statement against the Mexican government, the DAILY WORKER expressed the opinion that it was a put-up game between Washington and Mexico. Calles was doing well by his friends. They could have no kick against his conduct. But the workers and peasants that he betrayed were kicking and were rapidly learning that their one time god had feet of clay. It was necessary to create a diversion that would make the masses believe Calles was still an enemy of the bankers.

TWO statements were made and there the matter rested. Calles replied to Kellog. The latter went on a vacation. The pacifists and pseudu-revolutionists were so busy praising Calles that they did not notice his conduct subsequent to the note-passing incident. Since then, Calles has been using the army against the peasants who wanted to take over the land, and the workers who went on strike against the oil companies and the banks. Calles is the Mexican edition of strikebreaker Coolidge. Is it any wonder that the socialists should praise him?

THE Progressive Barber is the latest addition to the flock of left wing trade union publications that have been appearing of late. And the newcomer is in every way worthy of its comrades. It is a lively paper, because it is well edited and it has things to talk about and to tell. For instance, we notice that a member of the barbers' union went to pay his dues to the local office of the union. While there, a business agent and a gangster dragged the barber out of the union office, took him into the hallway and beat him into insensibility. The barber who got the beating happened to be against the bureaucracy—that's all.

WHILE speaking about the Progressive Barber, the case of Con Foley of Pottsville, Pa., comes to mind. Con is a national institution in the trade union movement. He is known widely as the "Pottsville Barber". He was connected with the socialist party, when that organization enjoyed a real existence and he was a thorn in the side of the fakerdom of the American Federation of Labor. But his long years of service to the workers did not save him from the wrath of the officials of the bargers' union, and he was kicked out from the organization he helped to build, by Mr. Shannessy, the present international president, who by the way was nominated for his office by Foley.

WHILE Foley was general organizer, he travelled thruout the country and associated with radicals wherever he found them. This was gall and wormwood to Shanessy. In a series of letters which were published in one of the barbers' journals, Foley was warned to keep away from the radicals. He was told that a responsible official like him, should have nothing to do with people who did not believe in the bible or in the present social order. Con's refusal to heed this warning put him outside the union. There is no room in the unions that are governed by reactionaries for honest officials. It is not Communists only they are out to expel. They want to expel every active member who refuses to play their crooked game.

TWO hundred thousand British workers were unable as a result of injuries they suffered in the war to take their places in the industries they left when the imperialists put uniforms on their backs and rifles in their fists. This is one of the blessings of war. The British government spent in the vicinity of one billion dollars refitting those wrecks for the slave pens. It is significant that there is less unemployment among those rehabilitated slaves than among the uninjured. One guess is that they are forced to work for less wages. What is your guess?

THE law is majestic! Woe unto the worker who disobeys the injunction against picketing! But judges are immune from the law. Take the case of Judge Holmes of Hattiesburg, Miss. The judge was making good time on his way to a ball game. A cop held him up and handed the judge a ticket. The latter immediately held court, pleaded guilty before himself and fined himself $5.00. We are awaiting to hear whether the judge and the cop went to a "blind pig" and drank the five bucks. That would put the finishing touch to a good story. But isn't the law majestic?

capitalism and the rule of the workers!

"Woe to them who attempt to bar the way to unity!"

The declaration closes with the slogans: "Long Live working class Russia! Long Live labor! Long Live the freedom of the working class thru the overthrow of capitalism!"

Following the receipt of the above quoted declaration, chairman Tomsky made a short address, in which he expressed the conviction that in the near future the cause of international trade union unity will be achieved.

"Nothing to Hide From Workers"

"The workers of all countries, irrespective of their political or trade union opinion, are always welcome to the Soviet Union," said Tomsky. "May the foreign comrades see our successes and point out our deficiencies. We shall always value their suggestions. Because, to the world proletariat, we have nothing to hide."

tense suffering is general thruout the anthracite and the miners are determined to fight for the wage increase demands formulated at the recent Tri-District Convention.

In this prospective industrial battle of the anthracite miners, the field of battle must be enlarged to include the bituminous field. The social and economic conditions of the bituminous miners are even worse than those of the hard coal men.

Never in the history of the mining industry has a better opportunity presented itself for united action. The miners of America are starving. The British miners are on the verge of a general strike. The miners of Belgium and France have decalred their solidarity with the miners of Britain. A meeting between the British, French and Belgium miners is being called on Thursday July 28, to consider joint action in the international struggle. The British miners have arranged a working agreement with the British railroad men, transport workers, engineers and shipbuilders for the prospective strike of British miners.

Demand No Scab Coal to Britain.

The American Miners' leaders or their representatives must be forced to join this conference. We, the progressive miners' committee of the U. M. W. of A., call upon the workers of America to line up with their brothers in this impending struggle of the workers of Europe and America for better living conditions. Already the statement is made by the American coal mine owners that they will exploit the situation created by the British strike, and they are preparing to ship coal across the sea to defeat the British miners should the strike mature. This must be defeated by all means and the coal mine owners must not be permitted to ship any coal to defeat our brothers across the sea.

From far off Siberia comes the first pledge to the coal miners of Britain and the world. The Russian miners promise that no coal will be shipped to defeat the miners in any place, and pledge to aid in every way the striking slaves of the picks.

The anthracite and bituminous miners of America, Canada and British Columbia must stand ready to aid in every way at a moment's notice. This pending struggle is the concern of all the workers in America and Europe, it is an international struggle of the workers of the world against capitalist exploitation.

No Compromise of Anthracite Demands.

The progressive miners committee in the hard coal region demanded 25 per cent increase in wages to better their living conditions, $2.00 per day increase for day labor and a change in several working conditions designed to make life a little less hard in the mining industry. Coal is at present produced at the mine for $4.00 per ton and sells for $15.00 per ton on the market, and the progressive miners' committee have produced the coal companies' statistics to show that these demands are very conservative indeed. The hard coal miners' wage averages about $20.00 per week.

Militant leadership of the progressive miners is developing and must continue to develop for the carrying out of our program, and the class colaboration officials of the United Mine Workers of America must not be permitted to compromise our demands as they have done before.

The government is threatening intervention. We remember the intervention of Judge Anderson and the surrender of Lewis—"We cannot fight against the government"—at a time when victory was in our grasp. We remember the Boston police strike and we know that the present government threat is but another instance of the iron heel of capitalism.

For An Inter-Union Fighting Alliance.

The progressive miners' committee stand true to their ideals and program. We will fight for solidarity in this struggle that threatens the workers of the country. We are the ones who do all the suffering in these strikes, the starving and the dying. We are the ones who have to work and starve while the owning class never knows the pangs of hunger. This strike must be made a national general strike of the miners.

The bituminous miners must not be permitted to scab on the hard coal miners. "An injury to one is an injury to all."

We demand an immediate conference of the miners, railroad and marine transport workers to negotiate an agreement for mutual aid during the strike.

Ringling Circus Graft Exposed

Editor The DAILY WORKER:—

You ought to give Mr. Ringling a jolt in your paper, and distribute some of the papers near the stake and chain wagon, which is located where the managerie joins the Big Tent. Ringling is showing on city property with scab labor.

What does Ringling pay?

Ringling is a partner of Tex Rickard, the prize fight promoter, who was indicted and fined $7,500 by the United States government for bribing U. S. officers.

In the Big Top you will see that all the space all the way down the middle contains reserved seats. Without reserved seats you have to sit on the end and see only one ring. You might also notice the high price of the refreshments. Ringling sure gets his.

Bryan's Record Teaches Workers and Farmers to Build Own Class Power

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

TODAY, preparations are being made for the burial of William Jennings Bryan, who believed every word in the bible, in Arlington National Cemetery, where lie the "heroes" of America's wars, those who went forth to murder that the American empire might grow.

It is said that this was Bryan's wish. The wish typifies the man, who leaped from one stand to another in order to exploit the public whim that might place him in public power or prominence.

• • • •

Charles N. Wheeler, of the Hearst newspapers, helps bare the soul of the man who was preparing to launch a campaign to smother progress, if he could, with the cloak of religion, when death silenced him.

Wheeler points out that Bryan had a passion for accumulating money, that he had a firm belief he would live to be president of the United States, while his so-called affection for his brother led him to compromise with the interests backing John "Wallstreet" Davis for the presidency, so that "Charley" could become the vice-presidential candidate.

• • • •

Bryan's right to be buried in Arlington cemetery grew out of the fact that this man of god, who claimed loyalty to the ten commandments one of the most important being "Thou Shalt Not Kill!" joined American capitalism in its first really imperialist and most predatory war, the Spanish-American struggle, that brought the Philippines, Cuba and Porto Rico into the American domain, and opened the way for greater imperialist aggressions. Bryan was colonel of a Nebraska regiment and prided himself on the uniform of Wall Street that he wore and on his military title.

Again the Nebraska "commoner," who was secretary of state in Wilson's cabinet, when Morgan's loans to European powers were rushing this country into war in 1915, when he might have carried into action his most boasted burst of oratory, "You shall not press down upon the brow of labor this crown of thorns. You shall not crucify mankind upon a cross of gold,"—then he resigned.

An effort is being made now to lift Bryan to the pedestal of one who would give his life "in defense of the Christian religion," but he quit Wilson's war cabinet because he could not afford to keep the job at $12,000 per year. He could make from $75,000 to $100,000 writing and lecturing and selling Florida real estate to the parasite rich. So the "man of the people" died a millionaire and "the man of god" will be buried in an imperialist soldier's grave.

• • • •

In Bryan's drive for the White House, he trekked along his own chosen road with stopping places at "free wool," "free silver," government ownership, a fake pacifism, an equally spurious anti-Wall Street position, "grape juice" prohibition and finally his Armageddon,—the Dayton, Tenn., attack on evolution and defense of revealed religion. It is taken for granted that, had he lived, Bryan would have found other issues.

Bryan's death, no doubt, will impede the war against the teaching of science in the public schools and universities, so auspiciously launched in the South. But the avalanche once started will have its way for a time. The same intolerance that gave great political power and temporary strength to the Ku Klux Klan which had Bryan's support at last year's national democratic convention, will find this new avenue of outlet available to it.

The issue once raised will continue to play a role in the chaotic ranks of the democratic party, where Bryan was becoming less and less of an influential figure.

• • • •

Another Bryan epigram, that now receives wide publicity, declares that, "The individual is but an atom; he is born, he acts, he dies. But principles are eternal."

Bryan's career typified exactly the opposite. With him, principle was a coat to be worn and cast away. During his life in politics he passed all the way from radicalism, as it is accepted in the American political arena, to rank conservatism.

Only an oppressed class with its loyal spokesmen carries on an eternal fight for vital principles. Oppressed labor, in the cities and on the farms of the United States, has never seen its cause championed in the least by Bryan, who was used like LaFollette, in some instances, to betray the discontent of the downtrodden when it took organized form.

If labor reads the life of Bryan correctly it will find many reasons for cutting itself completely free from the old political parties and building its own class power, to triumph over the capitalist social system that Bryan so assiduously sought to protect and perpetuate.

PHILADELPHIA LEATHER SHOP UNION STRIKES

Fights Firing of Fellow Militants

By LENA ROSENBERG.

PHILADELPHIA, July 27—A most encouraging example of workers' solidarity was shown by the workers of the Philadelphia Leather Goods company on Broad and Wallace streets when they went to the boss and told him that if he insists on discharging two militants, they would all strike. But it seems that the boss could not conceive of such a thing happening, and so he told them they could go. But all thees workers laughed in his face, took their belongings and walked out leaving only a few, but the strikers are determined to get them out also.

Fighting Leadership in This Union

They called a meeting of all those already out with one of the executive members of the union which was organized about three months ago. The workers all felt in good spirits and each one of the men present showed a determination to stick to the end.

One of the discharged workers, Sam Whiteman, took the chair and explained the situation very intelligently, asked the men to stand together and also pointed out that it is necessary for every one of the men to be on the picket line every day. He also mentioned that three years ago he was on strike for 26 weeks. Altho he is still young, I am sure that with such an element, the workers in that shop are sure to win, and this is a real beginning for organizing the entire leather goods trade in Philadelphia.

Backed by Union.

The representative from the executive board of the union, J. Sklar, also a member of the Young Workers' League who is enthusiastic and very much liked by the workers, took the floor and assured the workers of the shop that they are not fighting alone, that they will have the other workers of the union back of them and that the New York local is going to help in every way. He also suggested that the workers of the shop elect a strike committee which will meet with the executive board of the union to work out further plans for action.

With this, the first meeting of the workers on strike closed and all united they went back to the shop to get the other workers out.

NEW PERIL ENDANGERS LANZUTSKY

White Guard Poland Thirsts for Blood

WARSAW, July 27.—On August 4th in Warsaw will be opened a new "trial" against Stanislav Lanzutsky, Communist member of the Polish parliament—the "Sejm."

Lansutsky was freed in his trial at Przemysl, where the prosecution demanded the death penalty. But the jury by 10 to two freed him.

Now in Prison at Warsaw

After that, he was arrested in the court room on charges of having advised the peasants not to pay taxes. From Przemysl he was transferred to Warsaw, and lodged in the infamous Mokotowo prison.

At the coming trial Lansutsky will not have the slight advantage even of a jury. The trial will be before a single judge. But—even if Lansutsky should be freed from this charge, the Polish white guard government has still another charge against him.

White Guard Determined to Kill

Another trial will be awaiting Lansutsky at Lodz, center of the Polish textile industry and known as "the Polish Manchester" and a revolutionary center. At Lodz, Lansutsky is charged with having made another speech.

The workers of Poland are once more appealing to the workers of the whole world to save their fighting leader, just as they have saved him before when the workers of both Europe and America demonstrated before every Polish consulate demanding freedom for the greatest living leader of the Polish workers, Stanislav Lansutsky.

Mass Picketing on 5th Week of Garment Strike; A. C. W. Fights

derly as it has been since the strike began and there can be no shadow of an excuse for Judge Hugo Pam to issue an injunction against picketing to the garment bosses.

No Injunction Yet

The attorneys for the International company spent their fourth day in argument before Judge Pam's court, 941 County Building, yesterday on their application to secure an injunction against picketing. They based their principal arguments on the case of the United States supreme court. However, reasons given for scrapping the law were that it contained a provision on the boycott which does not appear in the Illinois law which the tailoring company is endeavoring to have declared unconstitutional.

Court adjourned at 3.30 William A. Cunnea, attorney for the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, had not yet begun his arguments against the issuence of the injunction.

By agreement, a test is being made of the constitutionality of the anti-injunction law passed by the recent session of the legislature, and the false charges of violence placed against the pickets by the International will be taken up later.

Strikers Read DAILY WORKER

The strikers continue to buy the DAILY WORKER. They express great satisfaction that there is one daily newspaper in the city which gives their side of the news in the struggle to wrest decent conditions from the garment bosses.

The strikers were particularly interested in the story which told how the International admitted before the court that they were doing no business and that they had been forced to cancel orders. This story, which was read to the strikers at their meeting in Hod Carriers' Hall, exposed the rumors spread by the bosses that they were doing business, and condemned from their own mouths their statements outside their courts as cross lies.

Bendani Sets the Scientists Talking About His Predictions

ROME, July 27.—Prof. Raphael Bendani announced today that his seismograph registered a distant earthquake yesterday morning at four o'clock.

Prof. Bendani has become a controversial figure in scientific circles in recent months. He came recently into prominence because of his claim that he had predicted the recent earthquakes would occur this month in all parts of the world.

Scientists both in Italy and the United States have declared since the Santa Barbara shocks that there has been little relationship between Sig. Bendani's forecasts and subsequent earth tremors.

THE T.U.E.L.

Represents the Left Wing of the Labor Movement. Its Purpose Is to Strengthen the Labor Unions by Amalgamation of Existing Unions, Organization of the Unorganized, and by Replacing Reactionary and Class Collaboration Policies with a Unified Program for the Transformation of the Unions Into Organs of Revolutionary Class Struggle for the Overthrowal of Capitalism and the Establishment of a Workers' and Farmers' Government.

RED BAITERS STILL DISRUPT MINNEAPOLIS

Culinary Workers Not Fooled by Fakers

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., July 27.—Mr. R. E. Crosky, international organizer of the Hotel and Restaurant Employes and International Association of Bartenders, has paid our town a visit, for the purpose of making a tirade against the Reds.

In a statement issued to the capitalist press, as becomes a nice respective red baiter, who always gets the most cordial co-operation from the degenerate sheets of capitalism, Mr. Croskey said:

The Great "Menace."

"Unless the rank and file of organized labor in Minneapolis awakes to the menace of Communists and I. W. W., who are steadily fighting for more underhanded power, legitimate organized labor will lose in a very short time those benefits it took years to secure."

Mr. Croskey, unfortunately, did not recke what those benefits are, especially in connection with the culinary trades here.

Where are Your "Benefits?"

There are thousands of unorganized culinary workers in this city, working for low wages and many for their meals. Also, the laws protecting women workers in the trade, are being daily violated.

However, Mr. Croskey has nothing to offer these thousands of workers, but rather is engaged in the stool-pigeon work of denouncing those elements in the unions who are pressing for the organization of these sweated trades.

Aids the Bosses.

Could the citizens' alliance ask for better representation of its point of view, than that which Mr. Croskey furnishes the slimy press gratis?

Moreover, Leslie Sinton of the Cooks, is personally responsible for the disorganized condition of the culinary trades.

Only a few years ago, there existed strong locals of both the waiters and waitresses. Today they are non-existent. Why?

Red Baiters, Always Disrupters.

Sinton, the prize red baiter, never lost an opportunity to fight the waitresses in the assembly as well as in the joint of board of the culinary trades. It was his policy, then as it is now, to wreck the waiters and waitresses' locals, so that the Cooks could scab on the other workers without danger of being showed up as such; so that Sinton could operate without hindrance, in writing his black page in the local labor movement.

Nobody Trusts Red Baiter.

Today the name Sinton is the sign of disorganization which hangs over the Cooks' Union.

Moreover, every waiter and waitress in this town is conscious of his destructive influence, which is largely maintained on the basis of the support which he gets from such gentlemen as Mr. Croskey.

Not Interested in Unionization.

But Mr. Croskey, as the real labor faker that he is, is, of course, not interested in organizing the thousands of unorganized in the culinary trades. If he was, he would do something more constructive; something more befitting a labor organizer, than vomiting his nastiness on those honest workers who possess a program of organization, which if followed out, would induce the exploited workers of the culinary trades, to join the union.

Amalgamation Needed.

That program is amalgamation of the culinary trades; a recognition that the interests of all culinary workers, are the concern of all.

It is this working class program that Mr. Croskey is out to fight together with the Sintons, and which causes him to play the role of Judas to the culinary workers.

Agree in Relief Distribution

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., July 26.—The distribution of $275,000 voted by the state for reconstruction of school buildings in that section of Southern Illinois swept by the recent tornado, has been agreed upon by the legislative committee and school authorities, according to announcement from the governor's office today.

PLUTE COURT NO PLACE FOR UNION STRUGGLE

Appeal to Members Is Only Real Victory

New York City, July 27.—Following the so-called "outlaw" strike of the New York Web Pressmen's Union Local 25, in September 1923, Major Berry, strike-breaker extra-ordinary and head of the Pressmen's union who had crushed the strike, "reoganized" the local and refused to give a card to David Simons, who had previously headed the local and led the strike.

Endless and Costly Appeals.

As he was deprived of a chance to make a living at his trade, he brought suit in the Supreme Court of Manhattan upon this ground—that his right to work were interferred with. That court ordered him reinstated in the union. Befry appealed and the Appelate Division reversed the decision. Simons appealed to the Court of Appeals, going still higher, and this last court decided in Simons favor, stating as follows:

"Plaintiff was a member in good standing in the defendant's union, an incorporated association, and subject to expulsion only upon written charges, and after a hearing upon notice. No charges have been made against him, and no hearing has been given. None the less, the defendant's officers have notified the other members to refuse to work with him on the ground that he has ceased to be a member, and in so doing have made it impossible for him to find employment in the trade. The charge in brief is that he has been denied the privileges of membership though never legally expelled.

No Provision For Relief in Union Law

"A cause of action is here stated for equitable relief. So far as the complaint shows, there is no provision in the constitution or the by-laws whereby plaintiff has a remedy by appeal to any organ within the association. Equity will enjoin the denial to a member of the privileges of membership where the denial, if continued, will work irreparable injury.

"The judgement of the appellant division should be reversed and the order of the special term affirmed, with costs in the appellate division and in this court."

Looks Like These Men Ought to Be in Union

BOSTON, July 27.—(FP)—Strike of non-union electricians on a small job for union pay follows several strikes of union build tradesmen of other crafts, on other jobs, to force the discharge of the non-union electricians. In several cases the non-union electricians were laid off.

CONFER NEXT WEEK ON COAL STRIKE; PREACHER FOR BOSSES GETS HIS

LONDON, July 27.—The government has persuaded the representatives of the Miners' Federation and those of the mine owners to meet again next Wednesday, in the hope of finding a way to check the strike ordered by the union to begin next Friday at midnight as a measure of defense against the violation of the agreement by the owners who insist on both a wage cut and longer hours. At Durham, dispatches state, the Right Reverend James Edward Welldon, dean of Durham, was mobbed by angry miners for speaking in favor of the wage cut and longer hours. The men threatened to throw him in the river, knocked off his top hat, took his stick away when he tried to strike them with it, and gave him some exciting moments.

N. Y. POLICE ORDER INSULTS TAXI DRIVERS

"May Be Criminal" If Not Mugged Right

(From a Worker Correspondent.)

NEW YORK CITY, July 27.—One of the first orders of Police Commissioner Enright since his department took control of the taxi industry in this city has aroused the wrath of the taxicab drivers. It revolves about a new card which the commissioner requires that all taxi drivers display in a conspicuous part of their cab. It is to carry a photograph of the driver and his thumbprint and in large type issues a warning to the drivers' passengers, that the driver may be a criminal, if he does not conform to the description on the card.

There are 38,000 taxicab drivers in New York City and they all resent the impression which they say, may easily be conveyed by this card reflecting on the character of the drivers in general.

The card is pink in color and about four by five inches, with a space in the upper left hand corner for the driver's photograph and the upper right hand corner for the drivers' thumbprint, and description of the driver and under this is the following warning to the passengers:

"Warning to Passengers."

"This is the description of the legal driver of this car... If the person now driving this car doesn't conform thereto, he may be a criminal. Your safety may demand that you act immediately; vacate the car and Call A Policeman.

"Richard E. Enright, Police Commissioner."

The reader will notice that the card does not use the word cab, but car, and of course the commissioner knows why the word cab is omitted.

This is what Mayor Hylan, the "people's mayor" is doing for the taxicab drivers in New York.

Pennsylvania Shop Strikers on the Job Soliciting Funds

Credentials granted by the Chicago Federation of Labor to solicit local unions for funds are in the hands of representatives of the striking shopcrafts men of the Pennsylvania rail road. The strike began as part of the nation-wide strike of shopmen in July, 1922, but has never been called off on the Pennsylvania the most other roads made some sort of settlement in the fall of 1922 or the following year. The strikers are keeping the union spirit alive on the bitterest anti-labor road in the country.

TOPEKA LABOR COUNCIL TO HAVE OPEN FORUM, STUDY CLASS URGED

By JESSE A. KEEBLE

(Worker Correspondent)

TOPEKA, Kansas, July 27.—At the meeting of the Industrial Council last evening the Labor Day committee made their report stating that the program had not yet been definitely arranged but would probably be as follows:

A barbercue, speaking, athletic contests and a ball game, dance, special music and moving pictures.

Conduct Open Forum

The open forum question came up for special business and a motion was passed to conduct an open forum. The plan adopted was to have a speaker to make an opening speech upon the subject under discussion and then the meeting would be opened for question and short speeches from the audience.

In the discussions on the question the wish was made that the forum be really open that any and all questions affecting labor could be discussed and that anyone regardless of who he was or what view he held should be permitted to express his views.

Actual Workers Wanted

In giving suggestions to the forum committee several expressed their views that when possible speakers be secured who were actual workers or connected with the labor movement and not to have, preachers and professional politicians as these men did not knew or understand the labor movement and therefore could not be in a position to advise labor in regard to bettering their conidtion.

Urge Study Club

Several speeches were made urging that labor start a study club as well as an open forum.

A motion was passed asking the presidents of all the affiliated unions to be present at the next council meeting to discuss ways and means of raising money for the purchase of a building site and the building of a labor temple in Topeka.

Workers Would Preach

A motion was passed requesting the ministers of the 93 churches in Topeka to allow representatives of organized labor to make the morning address to the churches on labor Sunday to outline labors views to the various congregations.

LOS ANGELES CARPENTER IN SOUND ADVICE

What's the Matter and What to Do

By HELM VOLL

LOS ANGELES, Cal.—In the DAILY WORKER for July 9th, page 4, col. 2, is a story by Worker Correspondent, dealing with a false statement made by E. E. Lampton, ex-secretary-treasurer of the Los Angeles District Council of Carpenters.

This is mentioned simply to help identify Lampton, who on July 5th, before above-mentioned council, in a "farewell address" said: "the hardest factor with which to deal is the ex-member and his continual knocking."

I am not interested in how hard the "factor" is, but the cause for it's existence. Are they "knocking" because they are just contrary minded, or have they real grievances. This is what interests me, and I think every man and woman, who like myself carries a card. Let us inquire into a few things which may have something to do with the ever-growing discontent in many quarters.

Favoritism

That favoritism exists in most unions is beyond dispute. It is by giving jobs to their friends, and showing them favors in other ways, that officials frequently maintain themselves in office. Said a fellow carpenter at the hall the other day:

"See him. That's Richardson. He has been appointed by Hutcheson to look after the studios. Now he is giving out tickets for jobs in the movies to his friends." And sure enough, that's exactly what he was doing.

Gagging of Expression.

In many locals, men with ideas of a progressive kind, and competent to express them, are ruled out of order, while those with a mentality belonging back in the dark ages, and not any too expressive, are cheered along by the chairman, who usually sees in him a man after his own heart.

Some time back, a member of another local visited our local, and was called upon to make a speech by the chairman under "good of the order." He talked haltingly, giving the impression of having a guilty conscience. His talk was nothing but a Salvation Army speech with God, glory and haleluja left out. It had nothing in it which by any stretch of the immagination could come under the heading referred to. If he had talked on the advantages of amalgamation he would have been out of order and marked for expulsion.

Too Much Attention to the Boss

Then we have the report of our business agents, which we have long since learned to take with a grain of salt. It is usually a story about excursions made into the sanctuaries of the contractor, or some public official, seeking to interview these elusive birds. These are often heroic tales, with the business agent as the hero. The trials and tribulations in the search for his heart's desire is often told with feeling and in a most graphic manner. After many unsuccessful attempts he finally succeeds to corral him, here or there, and they part friends, and the boss promises to do this and that—promises which never become anything else.

Last winter, one of our business agents said something which rings true. He reported that in a number of instances, when he asked men on the job what locals they belonged to, they would tell him: "Ask the boss." It did not feel good to be talked to that way, he said.

I don't know what he thought about the causes for such a reply, but to me it is very significant.

Unfriendly to Members from Other Parts.

One ex-member from Philadelphia told me that when he came to Los Angeles, he went to the Labor Temple for information and guidance as a union man naturally would. Here he was told, by an official, that the best thing for him to do was to take the first train back east, as it was impossible to get a job anywhere near the scale. Following such advice was well nigh impossible, for good and sufficient reasons. He went out and got a job the same day and at the union scale of wages.

He had been two years in Los Angeles without clearing in. In fact he was out of the "Brotherhood" entirely. At heart he is a union man and would be a credit to any organization of workers. This much I can't say for the official who "placed the straw that broke the camel's back."

It has not infrequently happened that business agents have been told by ex-members, that they never would join again as long as certain men were continued in office. The right or wrong of this attitude I am not discussing just now. I am trying to set down some of the causes for the "hardest factor."

When an ex-member told the writer in 1920, he would never join the union as long as Hutcheson was president, I wondered why. It was during working hours he made the statement, so there was little time for explanations. Besides I did not like much to listen to a "knocker" at that time. Since then I have decided that the best way to get to the bottom of it all, is to listen to what they have to say.

What He Has Done.

Here are a few samples:

He has forced scab-agreements upon members of the "Brotherhood".

He has opened and maintained at the expense of the "Brotherhood" strikebreaking agencies by which he recruited men to take the place of those who were on strike.

In New York he suspended entire membership of 65 locals.

He has expelled members illegally for exposing corruption and graft of the general office.

He has disfranchised locals by wholesale when they did not vote to suit him.

At the last convention he refused to seat delegates because they were instructed to work for certain measures to which he was opposed.

He has expelled members for advocating amalgamation of the existing trade unions in each industry.

He has not hesitated to use the police, thru his henchmen, as was done in Detroit and Los Angeles.

In Alliance with Capitalist Police Force.

In Los Angels, Muir and the police on March 1st, 1924, raided at night a meeting of The Trade Union Educational League at 224 S. Spring St., where they arrested 39 men and women. They also confiscated materials and records from which the names of members were taken and used by Muir as evidence to show that members of the "Brotherhood" belonged to a "dual union", and on this pretext they were sumarily expelled.

The Trade Union Educational League is an educational institution. It is providing facilities which we ourselves are lacking, and if our members want to take advantage of them we should be thankful. Such members should be commended and not expelled. Ignorance has always been our most powerful foe, and we have done little, very little towards it's removal.

What Must We Do?

Above all, never forget.

Whenever an official tells you so and so, is this and that, investigate. He may have an ax to grind.

The officials who are eternally ranting about their pull, friendships and acquaintances among the bosses—watch them.

To our business agents: Love the bosses less, and the workers more. We pay the bills.

Help to establish at least as much liberty inside the unions, as we have outside.

Let us all work like beavers for the removal of Hutcheson.

You who know carpenters belonging to the union, get them to read: What's Wrong In the Carpenters' Union, published by The Progressive Building Trades Worker, 156 S. Washington St., Chicago, Ill.

If you know carpenters outside the union persuade them to join. The union must be built up, not broken up.

If you are a carpenter and think what I have written about old Hutch is bunk, it is only fair to all concerned that you find out for yourself what the facts are before you pronounce judgment.

If you are one of the many ex-members who have simply dropped out, come back and help to reinstate the many illegally expelled members.

Wouldn't a pawn shop be a good place for Ma Hutcheson?

STORY OF WEST VIRGINIA MINE STRIKE TELLS OF BITTER WAR BETWEEN LABOR AND CAPITAL

By REGINA MYROSKI

MOUNDSVILLE, W. Va., July 27.—The fourth month of the coal strike in West Virginia finds this section rather in a doubtful state as to the final outcome. Conditions everywhere point towards the final defeat of the strikers, but the latter are hopeful and certain of victory and are willing to sacrifice their all if in the end they will be guaranteed decent living conditions at least.

As this was a scab region—the miners having joined the U. M. W. of A. only when they struck in April—of course all the organized section felt doubtful about the outcome but still admired the courage and grit of the West Virginia miners.

Trouble arose immediately about the middle of the first month of the strike when a number of strikers picketed the house of a scab at Glendale, W. Va. The result was 19 miners arrested, their indictment under the Redman Act which carries a prison sentence of from two to ten years, and the decision to try each separately.

Ten Years for Picketing!

The trial of the first picketter was held in May and culminated in his conviction and a sentence of ten years in the state penitentiary! The rest of the cases were continued to the September term of court.

Of course, injunctions were issued forbidding picketing of any kind and state police were stationed. Everything was being done to break the spirit of the striking miners and compel them to return to work at reduced wages. The local press carried statements to the effect that only a limited amount of coal was needed and that a great many miners were working at reduced wages and supplying all the coal needed and that the strikers were hurting only themselves and the BUSINESS MEN of the community—special stress placed on busines men. Storekeepers refused to give credit to some of those who had dealt from them for years and paid their accounts regularly. In fact, the strikers were treated more as some undesirable and hated animals than human beings. But in spite of all this a good percentage of them are still holding out, existing as they can, hopeful of victory.

Injunctions.

For a while the more drastic injunctions were lifted and peaceful picketing was allowed—but for only a very short period indeed. On July 6, Judge J. D. Morris, of the Marshall county court at Moundsville again prohibited picketing of any kind, giving as his reason the flimsy excuse that it was a crime—a crime because he, Judge Morris, and the coal operators back of him, said so, and there was end on it.

In fact, thruout the whole strike it can easily be seen that Judge Morris has been acting, not in the interests of the miners, but in opposition to them, and has been proving himself nothing but a tool in the hands of the coal operators. In meting out "justice" he has always managed to give the most severe sentences possible. Here is the most recent of his activities along the line of meting out "justice."

Picketing a Crime Against Government.

On July 3, seven picketers were summoned to the court house and placed in the county jail, and kept there until Monday, July 6. On that day Judge J. D. Morris prohibited peaceful picketing—it being according to his views and those of the capitalists a crime against the government of the United States—and charges were placed against the seven men for contempt of court, altho they had committed the deed before it was made illegal. They were given 60 days' jail sentence. Even tho peaceful picketing had been permitted for a short period the authorities did all in their power to arrest anyone doing picket duty on some charge or other.

Here is the coal operators' reward for those who did "scabbing duty" for them while the rest of the miners were making the utmost sacrifices to win the strike. On July 10, 1925, the regular payday of the Glendale Gas & Coal Co., the scabs were informed that they would not be paid until the following month, August, probably about the 25th.

Always Want More.

The motive can easily be ascertained. The capitalists are not satisfied alone with making the people wage slaves and instilling in them ideas which cause the workers to fight against each other, but they also want to control them body and soul, even their very means of existence. It is commonly believed that the purpose of withholding the pay until August 25 was to force the miners to deal at the company store, so the coal barons could make still more profits—for of course the regular dealers would refuse to carry the accounts that long without being paid.

This is the reward for loyalty to capitalism. There is no honor among thieves. It is such acts as these that will awaken the workers to class consciousness. Had no scabbing taken place probably there would have been more of a chance to win the strike. But now it is doubtful. It can be said to the credit of the strikers here that a good percentage of them are still holding out and are determined to win against all odds. May they be successful!

HIGH INITIATION AND LOW WAGES FOR JOB TRUST

Los Angeles Workers Delude Themselves

By L. P. RINDAL

LOS ANGELES, Cal., July 27.—A friend of mine works in the roofing trade, but altho his boss runs one of the biggest concerns of its kind in the city, the work is so slack that he can hardly exist on the low wages paid for a few hours' work a week. This worker never draws a full week's pay; from eight to 24 hours a week, and sometimes nothing at all, is the true condition at this particular place which is a fair example for all the rest.

The wage in this trade is $8 top, and $5.50 low. So nothing can be saved for a rainy day. But, in spite of this low earning power, a great number of roofers (like thousands of other workers) are deceiving themselves with the illusion that they, too, will become rich contractors some day.

Without going into details, it is worthy of note to say that this worker used to be a very active member in the roofers' union. In 1918, however, he left Los Angeles after having obtained the necessary papers from his union. For the last six or seven years he has kept himself off the roofs, but now he is back again and wants to rejoin his craft. Last night he had a talk with the business agent, and what did he find? $50 initiation fee was demanded. But how is it possible to pay such a huge sum for joining a union under such conditions as pictured above?

Strong Unions Not Wanted.

The writer is in full accord with a worker correspondent (D. W. July 9), who, in connection with the action of Muir and Hutcheson in expelling 16 members from carpenters' locals here, says: "Can it be that the union officials do not want the union to become strong and effective? I am suspicious." High initiation fees and expulsions both work in the same direction, to make a job trust out of the unions for officials and a few other sleepy-heads. They do not want the rank and file organized.

Times Hard, But Reads D. W.

Another man of my acquaintance (member of the carpenters' union but in the roofing game now, shingling) said last night, after being asked about working conditions, "Oh, slow!"

This worker always got every issue of the DAILY WORKER, but can never afford to spend enough money at one time, to subscribe. So there you are, the same everywhere. The workers are forced down to the low level of doing things on the installment plan, which is expensive and almost as bad as the Dawes plan.

Being in the city at present, Herbert Hoover, secretary of commerce, declared Los Angeles to be the "eighth wonder of the world" (he is the native son prospect for the presidency, you know). So he went on to talk about "cheap" water and "cheap" power. But he forgot to mention the cheap conditions under which workers have to struggle in this burg of exploitation and Hooverised hot air.

Kate Dial, Prison Comfort Club Head, Dies in California

SAN FRANCISCO.—Announcement of the death of Kate M. Dial, former secretary of the Workers' National Prison Comfort Club, brings grief to the hearts of scores of political and industrial prisoners in the prisons of the country who have been recipients of her kindly devotion. Kate Dial was an untiring prison comfort worker and her efforts and experience in this field are partly responsible for the founding of Intrenational Labor Defense.

For Unemployment Doles.

To the DAILY WORKER: I would like to see a meeting of representatives of all labor organizations called for the discussion of caring for the unemployed workers of this country during great labor crises. In England there is such a movement. There the workers receive a dole during unemployment periods. I. Rosen.

FARMERS PROFIT BY HIGH WAGES OF CITY WORKERS

Plute Press Buncomble Officially Disproved

WASHINGTON, July 27.—(FP—The agricultural press, according to Ethelbert Stewart commissioner of the United States bureau of labor statistics, has accepted the theory that low wages of industrial workers affect the farmer and commerce thru lowered consuming power.

"The agricultural press" he said, is showing a greater appreciation of the position always taken by the bureau of labor statistics, that the earnings of the workers, who constitute the largest numerical element of our population, can not be depressed, nor the volume of employment decreased, without reacting upon the whole range of business."

He illustrates his point by showing that consumption of butter is related to the volume of employment.

MacMillian Expedition to Etah.

WASHINGTON, July 27.—The MacMillan arctic expedition has left Godhaven, Disko Island, Greenland, and was enroute today to its base at Etah. Dispatches to the navy department from Liet. Commander R. E. Byrd said that the "Bowdoin" left Godhaven at 11 a. m. yesterday and that the "Peary" was due to get away at 7 a. m. today.

Another Army Goes To Europe.

NEW YORK, July 27. — Another army of American tourists sailed for Europe Saturday aboard eight big trans-atlantic liners. Steamship officials estimated the departures at more than 5,000. European touring this year has broken all records, the record departures for a single day being 10,000.

SHERIFFS MAY HIRE DEPUTIES TO ANY NUMBER

Seen as Great Aid in War on Workers

SPRINGFIELD, Illinois, July 27.—A sheriff in Illinois may hire as many deputies as he believes necessary to preserve peace and social order and the board of supervisors in his county must make arrangements for their compensation.

Will Be Forced to Pay.

That was the essence of an opinion forwarded today to Carl Priehs, of Taylorville, state's attorney of Christian county, by Attorney General Oscar Carlstrom.

The question arose when James E. Corman, of Pana, chairman of the Christian County board of supervisors, influenced the board to refuse Sheriff Andrew Flesher's recent bill for deputy hire.

Legalize Child Labor.

In a second opinion, handed to the department of labor, the attorney general held that school boys under the age of 14 years may be employed as caddies. He pointed to a statute providing that such persons, volunteering services during school vacation, may be employed at work in which there is no element of danger.

CANADA'S RAIL WORKERS MEET SEPTEMBER 21

Amalgamation to Be on Agenda

TORONTO, July 27.—Arrangements for the accumulation of data on railway operation and cost of living and the extension of publicity facilities are matters to come before the 30th convention of the Canadian Brotherhood of Railroad Employes at Toronto, Sept. 21.

This purely Canadian organization has made a point of challenging unfair statements made in the daily press regarding the position of the railway workers, sending letters to editors well fortified with facts and figures.

This method of publicty has been little used by Canadian labor unions, tho it reaches people, including workers, who never see a labor paper. The Canadian press carries extraordinary misinformation or misrepresentation regarding the labor movement, usually allowed to pass unchallenged.

Amalgamation, co-operation, insurance and political activity are other convention problems.

Brookhart Holds His Lead

WASHINGTON, July 27.—Daniel F. Steck, democrat, contesting the election of Smith W. Brookhart, insurgent republican, to the senate, has gained about 50 more votes in the recount.

Brookhart still has a substantial lead, however, having made a gain yesterday of 300 votes due to the finding of errors in the figures certified by the state of Iowa.

UKRAINIAN MASS MEETING SHOWS UP POLISH ENVOY

Skrzynski Denounced by 1,000 Workers

NEW YORK CITY.—A mass demonstration of over a thousand workers protesting against the arrival of Mr. Skrzynski, envoy for the reactionary working class oppressing Polish government, was held by the Ukrainian workers of the United States at a mass meeting here in Manhattan Lyceum.

The following resolution condemning the Polish government's subjection of the Ukrainian and other non-Polish races was unanimously adopted.

"That it be known to American workers that Poland is subjecting some 10 millions of our Ukrainian brothers and countrymen to the most inhuman treatment, depriving them of all elementary rights to racial and civic freedom and to cultural advancement.

"That Poland has done nothing to help the Ukrainian peasants and workers during the present fearful famine that came as a result of crop failure of last year, and also as a result of the inefficient economic policy of Poland.

"That the credits, voted by Polish diet for famine relief, were distributed by the Polish government agencies among the rich landowners and well-to-do peasants.

"That it is the opinion and the desire of this meeting that no help, material or moral, should be given to the present government of Poland, which has nothing but oppression, prisons and executions for our brothers in Western Ukraine, held forcibly in Polish occupation.

"That the millions of Ukrainians, now under the rule of Poland, cannot be bound in the future by any credit or loan obligations, as may be contracted in this country by Mr. Skrzynski in the name of his government.

"That we demand justice and freedom for those of our brothers and countrymen in Western Ukraine that are now dominated by Poland and other imperialistic States, believeing and knowing that such liberation could be accomplished only by union of Western Ukraine with the present Ukrainian Socialist Soviet Republic.

"That this resolution be recorded, published and known as our protest against official activities of the said Mr. Skrzynski in United States, and against the government he is representing, for the reasons as stated above.

"Down with the imperialistic Poland!

"Long Live the struggle for the liberation of Western Ukraine and its union with Ukrainian Socialist Soviet Republic!

hope these papers will be of help to you.

"Mrs. Tony Stafford, written by Daughter Sadie.

"P. S.—No one has ever offered us any help of any kind since father was taken away from us."

The "papers" enclosed were receipts for payment of dues in the Loyal Order of Moose since 1917, cards issued by the United Mine Workers Union during 1920 and 21 and Staffords army registration card dated 1917.

Organized Labor Forgot Stafford

The labor movement forgot Tony Stafford and his family. During the five years Tony Stafford was in prison for the cause of labor, his wife has been obliged to battle alone. "No one has ever offered us any help of any kind since father was taken away from us."

In a previous leter to International Labor Defense, Mrs. Stafford told of Stafford's enemies. "The E. E. White Coal Co. of Glenn White, W. Va is the Co. who is fighting him. I do not have money to help my husband as I have four small children to provide for, and I find it very hard to make ends meet. My husband did not even get to come home to see his children whom he has not seen for many years. I want you to fully understand that it is because of a grudge against union officials that they are so bitterly against him."

Tony Stafford was an official of the U. M. W. of A. He fought for the unionization of the scab coal fields of West Virginia. He fought for a better life for his wife and four children. His reward was frame-up, imprisonment and now deportation.

Will Take Care of Family.

Intrenational Labor Defense did all it could to prevent the deportation of Tony Stafford. The trick was turned too quickly. It could not be stopped. I. L. D. is now doing the next best thing. It is undertaking to make up in some way for the long neglect his family has suffered. Mrs. Stafford was sent a check of fifty dollars and more will follow. A fund is being raised and the forces of militant labor are being organized under the banner of International Labor Defense to cope with the many similar occurences of working class fighters railroaded to prison or deported, and of families left destitute and helpless.

SYNOPSIS.—The official report of the British Trade Union Delegation to Soviet Russia, two instalments of which have appeared in the DAILY WORKER, and which will continue daily, tells of the intensive investigation of all phases of the life of the workers under the Soviet government and the structure of its administration, from the time the seven British trade union leaders entered the frontier town of Sebezh, Nov. 1, until they left Leningrad December 15. Yesterday's instalment took up the question of finance, which is being continued today as follows:

Gold Standard Restored

The first step was the restoration of the National Bank, with the right to issue currency notes (October 11th, 1922). The issue of notes was entrusted to an issue department composed partly of Governmental, partly of bank representatives, and the whole form and function given to the New National Bank was clearly modelled on the Bank of England. The new currency had a unit of ten roubles, called after an old Russian coin, Tchervonetz. This unit, with the percentage of gold of the old rouble, is secured to one-fourth by bullion and foreign exchange, the remainder by short bills and easily realisable securities. But the bank has done its best to maintain throughout a bullion reserve of not less than 50 per cent., as appears from its published balance sheets. These Tchervonetz notes, which were obviously in imitation of our pound notes, were given an immediate currency for taxes, customs tariff, and certain other official payments. But their introduction into general currency was proceeded with very cautiously and even met with a certain amount of difficulty. Owing to their high denomination and the curious conservatism of Russia, these notes used at first to be returned to the bank in large quantities to be exchanged into the old depreciated currency. Yet the main difficulty of maintaining a double currency, namely, that the worse drives out the better, did not develop, and by the autumn of 1923 the Tchervonetz was coming generally into circulation, and being taken up with confidence. It was considered safe by December 21st, 1923, to make the acceptance of the Tchervonetz obligatory for Government purposes. But the old notes were still the basic currency and the banks were still obliged to give them in exchange when required.

The Tchervonetz

The buying value of the Tchervonetz was at first as high as 11.08 roubles in wholesale dealing and 8.9 in retail. But a year later, after sharp oscillations, due probably to an insufficient basis of business, it had fallen to 7.64 and 5.41 respectively. This depreciation was checked in the autumn of 1923 by intervention of the National Bank. On the whole, it did the new currency as much good as harm, because the reduction by one-qquarter in value reduced the high denomination of the new notes without seriously affecting confidence in them.

Foreign exchange of the Tchervonetz being under closer control was steadier, and the average exchange with the pound sterling has been above pre-war exchange. The following figures show that the dollar exchange is now very steady and the variations in the pound exchange have another explanation than the real value of the Tchervonetz. Under conditions of so complete a monopoly of foreign commerce as there is in Russia, the reactions between foreign exchange value and internal buying value may become somewhat remote. There is, in fact, the risk that official operations may creat an official exchange remote from real market values. But a comparison of the official and the free rates of exchange shows that, though a difference exists, it has not as yet become dangerous. On January 1st, 1923, the free exchange was 4.6 below the official; in March, it was equal; in May, the free was 1.1 above, and in July, 1.1 below. In the provinces, however, the difference became as much as 10 per cent. in 1924.

December 20th	1.94½	9.13

To sum up, we have in the Tchervonetz a currency which is the opposite extreme to that aimed at by War Communism. It is not merely the substitution of a gold rouble for such compromises between money and man-power standards as were presented by the various forms of goods roubles. It is a gold standard which is based on its relationship with foreign gold standards and especially the pound sterling. This close connection between the new Russian currency and foreign commerce, is a powerful guarantee for the good will and good faith of the Russian Government enterprises in methods of foreign commerce.

Regulation of Exchange

This stability of exchange in the Tchervonetz was achieved in face of a trade balance at first heavily against Russia, owing to the difficulty of organising export and the heavy demands for imports due to the famine and reconstruction work. Moreover, foreign exchange was indispensable for the Bank in order to secure the new currency and to start commerce. Consequently decrees were issued on the date of February 15th and April 9th, 1923, regulating dealings in foreign exchange and limiting them to members of the Bourse and banks having general permission to deal. Though not very strictly observed, this legislation has served its purpose and brings at least all Government Trusts and syndicates, as well as the co-operatives, under control in this respect. Further, no payment within the Union may be made in foreign valuta, and holdings of it by State Trusts or co-operatives are strictly regulated. The National Bank must be given the refusal of any such foreign exchange before it is disposed of privately, and no one may export more than 200 roubles' worth without permission, though this is easily evaded. However, with the moneys confiscated from Nepmen trough the G. P. U. for illegal attempts at export of securities, a railway of 100 versts long required by the cotton and grain industries has been constructed in Turkestan.

Although much of this regulation of exchange is not, and probably cannot be, enforced under existing circumstances, it has been effective for its purpose of providing the State with foreign valuta, of use in balancing the Budget. Indeed, early in 1924 the amount available became embarrassingly large and the National Bank found itself being compelled to issue Tchervonetz notes in order to acquire foreign valuta for which it had no use but which were offered by exporters, because a refusal would have checked exportation. Moreover, as the trade balance under the economic plan for 1923-24 is as much as 132 million roubles, it looks as though the State would soon be in a position to free dealings in foreign exchange in so far as it can safely do so without allowing control to pass out of its hands.

Restoration of Single Currency

The last development of currency reform was the Acts of February 14th, 1924, stopping further emissions of the old notes, and of March 10th finally putting them out of circulation as from May 10th and redeeming them at a rate depreciated in certain cases to one-five-thousand-millionth. This old currency had been used to maintain the value of the Tchervonetz by buying it up when necessary, but had been replaced in this function more and more by foreign valuta. The Transport Certificates, of which mention will be found elsewhere, were a currency of small denominations now all redeemed.

The effect of this currency reform on the enterprise and energy of the National Economy was, of course, immediate, and the impetus it has given still continues. Its results can be observed in the returns given elsewhere showing increased production and trade. The consequent improvement in revenue from taxation and conomic profits react, in turn favorably on the currency.

Currency and Budgets

The Delegation has no reason whatever to doubt that the present condition of the currency is satisfactory. The following table gives details:—

1924	Paper Roubles	Tcherv. Gold R.	Transport Certifs.	Treasury Bills	Silver Coins	Small Change	Central Caisse Bonds
	Millions of Tchervonetz Roubles.
1st April	15.36	294.5	20.7	54.6	9.96	3.14	448.9
1st June	9.8	286.6	20.5	124.1	16.6	15.7	518.0
1st Aug.	4.8	301.2	—	162.1	34.6	20.0	570.0
1st Oct.	—	352.85	—	201.75	48.94	25.35	667.9

A handsome silver currency, which to a value of £5,000,000 was minted in England, is in general circulation, and in October a copper coinage appeared. A gold Tchervonetz is obtainable, but does not appear in circulation.

The total of money in circulation rose from 264 million roubles in October, 1923, to 624 million in October, 1924. This considerable emission of currency in the course of the summer led to no corresponding increase of prices, and no fall at all in exchange, and consequently evidently did not exceed the growing demand of business. The only danger of inflation seems to lie in a possible over-emission of bank credits for industry.

The emission of currency for revenue purposes in 1923-24 was restricted practically to that originally estimated for. The emission in 1924-25 is reduced from 180 millions in the previous year to 80 millions, and this latter sum is not, moreover, mere paper but silver and copper coinage. In fact, the use of the mint for revenue is almost restored to its legitimate form of a profit on coinage, and there seems no reason to suppose that the proposed increase of currency is more than business development requires. In other words, careful investigations in the Commissariat of Finance show no reason to fear the renewal of inflation that has been so confidently predicted abroad.

The following figures show the disappearance of the fatal financing Budgets by emission of paper currency:—

Receipts in Kind and Budgets

Nothing shows more clearly the rapid reconstruction that has been proceeding under the "New Economic Policy" than the complete change in the character of recent Budgets. The Budget for 1920 represents the high water mark of War Communism and the elimination of money. Receipts, exclusive of currency emission, were 159,604 million Soviet roubles and expenditure 1,215,159 million Soviet roubles. Of these receipts about one-third came from nationalized production and another third from nationalized trade.

The first Budget under the New Economic Policy was the nine months' Budget, January to September, 1922. This represents a transition from a barter to a business basis. The total receipts were 530 million index roubles, of which about 64 per cent. were receipts in kind, not money revenues. The attempt to reconcile these two bases caused, needless to say, inextricable confusion. We see below the process of transition to a money basis:—

	1921-22	1922-23.	1923-24.	1924-25.
	Millions of Tchervonetz Rubles.
	Per cent	Per cent	Per cent	Per cent
Receipts in kind	550—55	158—11	72— 3	—
Money Revenues	450—45	1230—89	1844—97	2231—100
	1000	1388	1916	2231

Budget of 1922-23

The turning point in the restoration of the Budget to a business basis is in 1922-23. The Budget as at first produced showed receipts of over one milliard and expenditure well over two milliards. The greater part of the deficit—600 millions—was to be raised by currency issue, and it was evident that a currency of the total real value of 90 millions could not stand it.

A Budget Commission was, therefore, set up to take drastic action. The Budget was dealt with on a quarterly and even monthly basis, and great efforts were made to raise revenues, reduce expenditures, and restrict currency issues.

It will be worth while to reproduce this crucial transition Budget of 1922-23 in such a form as will give an idea of the situation.

BUDGET FOR 1922-23.
(Millions of Tchervonetz Rubles.)

Receipts.		Expenditure.
1. Direct Taxes and Customs	230	1. Administration, etc.	318
2. Indirect Taxes	175	2. Transport Communications, etc.	822
3. Transport and Communications	454	3. Industry	123
4. National Industry and Trade	57	4. Agriculture	64
5. Credit Operations	85	5. Electrification	28
6. Currency Issue	387	6. Co-operation	10
		7. Treasury Operations and Miscellaneous	23
	1388		1388

It is obvious that this is a Budget that still contains a large measure of War Communism, and is, still, more concerned with national economy than with government finance.

Analysis of Budget Expenditure

Comparing the principal items of the Budgets of 1922-23 and 1924 we get an idea of the nature of the burden.

EXPENDITURE.
(Millions of Tchervonetz Rubles.)

	1923-24 Per cent	1922-23. Per cent
1. Transport and Communications	672.5—32.7	580—41.8
2. Administration	459.0—24.4	318—22.9
3. Industry	85.0— 4.5	123— 8.9
4. Agriculture	61.0— 3.2	64— 4.6
5. Electrification	42.0— 2.1	28— 2.0
6. Co-operation	20.0— 1.1	10— 0.7
7. Treasury Operations, etc.	100.0— 5.3	23— 1.7
8. Miscellaneous	358.0—19.0	242—17.4

The financing of industry is thus being steadily transferred from the Budget to the Banks; and this financing of industry is still an item of which the investment value is hard to estimate. The subsidy of agriculture shows that nearly half the net proceeds of the rural tax are returned to the land. The increase of the amount spent on electrification is evidence of the very general effort to re-equip industry. While the support of Co-operation in its struggle against private enterprise and against the "scissors" crisis is also an investment. The item "Treasury operations" is mainly repayment of grain and sugar loans.

An encouraging element in these Budgets is the increase of receipts and the decrease of the deficit; anothr is that almost half this increase of receipts comes from transport—showing, as this does, an economic expansion. The increase in taxation comes mainly from the rural tax; moreover, this increase has been obtained from an increase in taxable capacity without raising the rates. An increase that is only beginning may be observed in the receipts from national property such as forests. Receipts under this head are insignificant compared to what they might be.

Budget for 1923-24

The Budget for 1923-24 was produced in December, 1923, the dangers due to the delay being met by a provisional "budget of control." The delay was due to difficulty in finally bringing the whole national accountancy on to a normal basis and in first attempting an allotment of central and local budget responsibilities as between the Union and the autonomous Federations. The fundamental principle of this financial and fiscal relationship is to secure for the whole Union the advantages of a centralized control and credit while giving the local autonomies sufficient resources and responsibilities for their own cultural development and special concerns. This involved a most difficult decentralization, still in course of development.

COAL MINERS DIE IN PENNSYLVANIA AND TENNESSEE

Blasts and Falling Rock Take Their Victims

WILKESBARRE, Pa., July 27—Five miners were added to the long list of fatilities in this part of the anthracite field today.

Otto Brunner, 36, Michael Devine, 34, and Peter Olson 35, were killed instantly when they were caught in a premature blast at the Woodward mine of the Glen Alden Coal company at Eduardsville.

A gas explosion at the Colon mine resulted in the death of Joseph Balcoco, 42.

Joseph Michael, 25, was the fifth victim. He was fatally injured beneath a fall of rock at the Franklin colliery of the Lehigh Valley Coal company this morning.

Worker Seeks Final Appeal Before U. S. Court Against Death

By HELM VOLL.

LOS ANGELES, July 27 — Isaac Wolfgang, who killed a policeman over two years ago, in a rooming house on East Fourth St., of this city has notified the public defender, from San Quentin, that Clarence Darrow will represent him in a final appeal from the death sentence before the United States supreme court in October.

He was convicted of killing Oliver Dinsmore, a policeman, who arrested him while he was about to take a bottle of milk one early morning, from the doorsteps of a house close by where he was living.

The policeman took Wolfgang to his room, and here he beat him so mercilessly that he still has a long red scar on his head. Fearing for his life, he reached into a dresser drawer, pulled out a gun, and shot his assailant.

Wolfgang sailed the seas, at the mast, for many years, and braved many dangers, but when he grew old he had nothing to show for his toil.

ANTHRACITE WAGES SHOWN BY OPERATORS' FIGURES PROVE TO BE FAR BELOW LIVING STANDARD

By LELAND OLDS

(Federated Press Industrial Editor)

Well, now we have it from the operators' own figures, furnished to the U. S. bureau of labor statistics, that the average anthracite worker actually employed in cutting coal from the face doesn't average as much as $2,000 a year at the present wage scale. The figures show that in a half-month payroll period in October-November, 1924, the average wage of miners and miners' laborers was $7.77 per day worked and the average number of days worked 10.8.

Really Below $1,600

These figures cover miners classified as company, consideration and contract miners and their laborers, constituting over 53 per cent of all the employes both inside and outside the mines included in the investigation. Taking all groups of anthracite employes together there were 45 per cent who earned less than $70 for the half-month pay period. As this half month pay period represented more than 1-23 of a normal working year the average annual compensation of approximately half of all anthracite mine workers falls below $1,600.

The bureau reckons that if the average worker employed directly in the mining of coal had been able to work every single day that the mines were open the average annual wage would have been about $2,240, or a close approximation to a minimum living wage budget.

But the figures showing the average number of days actually worked per worker indicate that 85 per cent of theoretical full working time is all that can be expected in the anthracite mines. Account must be taken of sickness and other unavoidable causes of absence. This brings the annual wage down to about $1,920.

Average wages per day actually worked and for the entire half-month pay period are shown for leading occupations as follows:

Anthracite Pay	Per day	Half month
Miners
Company	$6.49	$67.15
Consideration	4.26	78.99
Contract	9.07	98.07
Miners' laborers
Company	5.72	58.57
Consideration	6.21	65.98
Contract	6.47	65.39
Inside workers
Drivers	5.46	61.83
Laborers	5.67	63.09
Miscellaneous	6.70	80.43
Outside workers
Carpenters	6.40	78.53
Laborers	5.25	63.04
Miscellaneous	5.63	71.47

Deductions Reduce Apparent Wage

The contract miners, constituting about 26 per cent of the working force, are the highest paid anthracite workers and receive $9.07 a day. Their work is responsible and dangerous. Assisted by their laborers they drill holes in the seams of coal by hand or by electric or compressed air coal-mining machines, load the holes with explosives, and shoot or blast the coal from the seams.

They are paid a tonnage or other piece rate and from their gross earnings on this basis the cost of labor and explosives is deducted or checked off their pay. This is really the origin of the checkoff and has always been a regular features of the industry.

Not an Easy Job

To make their $98.07 for the half month these contract miners averaged 81.4 hours underground including travel from the shaft to the coal face and return. They have no regular time for dinner or lunch but eat it at their place of work while waiting for mine cars or when some other irregularity causes them to be temporary idle.

Decide Locally Upon Wheat Harvest Wages; Union Scale Unknown

FREDERICK, So. Dak., July 27—The Savo, (So. Dak.) Farmer-Labor club held a special meeting on July 26th for the purpose of establishing a uniform wage scale for harvest and threshing in the neighborhood.

A good number of workers and farmers were present, and after considerable discussion a committee of six was elected, three farmers and three workers to settle the matter. Their decision, adopted by the meeting, was as follows:

Harvest wages 42½ cents per hour.

Threshing wages 45 cents per hour to pitchers, 50 cents per hour to pitchers who drive a team.

Above wages to include board and lodging, courteous treatment and comfortable living conditions.

WASHINGTON,—(FP) — The government is building a model prison for women at Alderson, W. Va., costing $1,900,000, where the inmates will be taught housework and industrial trades to fit them for a "good" life when they come out.

NEW TRIAL FOR BIEDENKAPP AND MAREK REFUSED

Case Is Appealed to Higher Court

Judge Richardson of the Superior Ave., police court, who several days ago fined M. Marek and F. G. Biedenkapp $100.00 apiece after a charge of disorderly conduct had been placed against the two for speaking on the street, listened somewhat inattentively to a plea for a new trial made by Attorney J. O. Bentall.

The evidence in the pervious hearing introduced to show disorderly conduct was a leaflet containing extracts from the report of the Industrial Relations Commission.

Judge Weakens.

Bentall attempted to show the judge how ridiculous it was for him to lay a heavy fine for the quoting of official documents, and showed there was nothing to lead the court to believe that anyone's conduct was disorderly at the meeting. Bental asked for a new trial and to vacate.

The judge weakened. He probbaly sensed the fact that he was making an ass of himself. To save his face, as he thot, he became very lenient and reduced the fines to $50.00 for Biedenkapp and $25.00 for Marek. But he refused to grant a new trial. The dignity of the court has to be upheld. If the judge begins by making an ass of himself he has to continue so for dignity's sake.

On Hunt for Intelligence.

But the defendants were not satisfied. They are appealing the case to a higher court. They hope to find a judge intelligent enuf to recognize a government document when he sees one, and not to suppose as Judge Richardson certainly must have, that the Industrial Relations report was written by Bucharin and Radek instead of Basil Manly and Frank P. Walsh.

FILIPINO GIRLS HELD AS PEONS BY SHOP OWNER

Padron System in Force at Los Angeles

By L. P. RINDAL.

LOS ANGELES, Cay. (By Mail)—There is nothing new under heaven they say, but peonage practice in a community of angels seems to be a little out of the ordinary. The other day it was discovered that Faustino Lichance, a shop owner, had brought two sisters, Filomena and Carmel Garcia, from the Philippines under the excuse to teach them the embroidery trade.

These girls, and others, have been held in peonage under the stipulation that they should work for three years at $15 a month plus room and board, all of which was supposed to cover their passage money. It is charged that the girls were forced to live on the premises as prisoners and to work from 12 to 13 hours a day and that they were already expert embroiderers and did not need to be taught.

When the state labor department, thru Deputy Commissioner Lowry first ordered the release of the girls, Lichance and his sister, Cornilia Fernandez, refused to accede unless they should sign notes for $300 each, it was said. Mr. Lowry then demanded their immediate release and also the release of all their belongings on threat of criminal action.

Said shop is located at 508 North Western avenue, Los Angeles. The slavery system under which these poor girls were held is in Spanish called: "PADRON"—complete submission to the wishes and desires (and the viles also in this case) of the master.

Junior High Schools to Be Built First Is School Board's Decree

The borad of education's new school construction program which entails the expenditure of $51,000,000, has awarded its first contracts for $1,350,000 for the building of three junior high schools, work to be started next week. This in face of the present deplorable shortage of classroom facilities to take care of the tremendous overflow in the elementary schools.

All of last term due to this shortage little children between the ages of 7 and 10 were compelled to arrive at school as early as 7:30 on the morning shifts while others did not begin until after lunch for the afternoon shifts. Still the immediate plans do not include elementary schools.

The new junior high schools will be as follows: The Bridge school, at Byron and Newland Sts., the Mann, Ninety-fifth and Chappell Sts., and the Nightingale at W. Fifty-second and Rockwell Sts.

BUILDERS AT WORK

A NEW PUBLICATION APPEARS

My How the Left Wing Grows!

Last week in this column, we boasted to our Communist Builders about the splendid lot of Communist papers in all languages and other Left Wing publications available to build the Communist movement.

We spoke of four Left Wing Monthlies already published; for Biulding Tradesmen, Printers, Machinists and Railwaymen. And we gladly announced "The Progressive Miner" as the coming fifth journal of the fighting group in organized labor.

But there was a slight mistake. The Progressive Miner is not the fifth . . . it will be the sixth. For without any warning the first issue of the "Progressive Barber" appeared in order to turn the workers about and give the bosses a trimming for a change.

A snappy paper it is. With contribution from the workers in the shops, news about the trade conditions and some bright comment, this is the paper to take with you everytime you go to the barber to have your chin scraped. Take it to your barber and if you want to subscribe (you certainly should!) just send one dollar for a year's subscription (this is not a paid ad) to The Progressive Barber, 1806 South Racine Ave., Chicago, Ill.

May we have more such splendid papers to rally the workers to fight. Paste this paper in your hat along with the others—this is another good tool for Communist Builders!

SIX LECTURES ON IMPERIALISM GIVEN BY WORKERS' SCHOOL FOR $1 THE COURSE, BEGIN AUGUST 7

NEW YORK CITY, July 27.—The revolutionary upheavals in China, in Morocco, and to a lesser degree in India, Egypt and Latin-America at the present time indicate that "all is not well" with the world. These struggles of the peoples in colonial and semi-colonial countries mark the beginning of an epoch of the break-up of the great imperialist powers.

The Communist movement has been the only one to realize the significance of the struggles of the oppressed people in occident and orient alike, and have given their active support to these national-revolutionary movements, because they see in them a powerful force making for imperialist disintegration.

Popular Lectures.

In the light of these facts, then, the Workers' School of New York, has arranged for a series of popular and instructive lectures on the nature of imperialism, and particularly on its work and the forces combatting it in the countries of Asia, Africa, South and Central America.

Beginning Friday evening, August 7, and continuing for six weeks, these lectures will be given at the Workers Party headquarters, 108 E. 14th St.

Many Good Speakers.

Speakers are: Alexander Trachtenberg, Bert Wolf, William Weinstone, Oliver Carlson and a prominent member of the Kuomintang.

Tickets for the entire course of six lectures are on sale for $1.00. Single admission will be 25 cents.

There is no better opportunity for workers to inform themselves of the nature, scope, and struggles of imperialism than is to be had by attending these lectures.

The course is as follows:

(1.) Imperialist Struggles in China, August 7, Kuomintang speaker and O. Calson.

(2.) Foundations of Imperialism, Aug. 14., A. Trachtenberg.

(3.) American Imperialism in Mexico and Latin-America, Aug. 21, Bert Wolf.

(4.) American Imperialism in the Pacific, Aug. 28, Bert Wolf.

(5.) Imperialist Policies in India, Egypt and Morocco, Sept. 4, O. Carlson.

(6.) Imperialism and the Communist International, Sept. 11, W. Weinstone.

COMPENSATION FOR ACCIDENTS IS INADEQUATE

Disabled Miners Get Only $12 a Week

WILKESBARRE, Pa., July 27—Union anthracite miners and their families from the Scranton-Wilkes-Barre (District No. 1,) United Mine Workers of America, have been awarded a total of $307,242 in compensation for accidents sustained on the job since the founding of the district compensation department, October 1, 1923, the delegates at the district convention were informed when the compensation department's report was read.

The department contests claims against the employers under the Workmen's Compensation law and reports that compensation was awarded in the case of 42 fatal accidents. There were 127 fatal mine accidents in all during the period involved. Total disability, various disability periods and permanent facial disfigurement are compensated.

Complaint of the inadequacy of the law is voiced in the report which shows that 26 states pay more than the $12 a week maximum to which injured Pennsylvania miners are limited. At the last session of the legislature a labor amendment raising minimums from $6 to $7 a week and maximums from $12 to $15 was defeated.

Machine Guns for Radicals

Whether advocacy of violence is illegal or not, depends on those who do the advocating. Communists are haled into court and indicted under criminal syndicalist laws because they point out the inevitability of violence in the overthrow of capitalism. But capitalist mouthpieces are free to advocate violence against the workers with impunity.

The latest capitalist prophet to raise his voice in favor of the murder of radicals is Ralph M. Easley, chairman of the National Civic Federation. Not only does Mr. Easley propose that radical publications be barred from the mails, but he urges the use of machine guns against extremist agitators."

What angers the good and patriotic Mr. Easley is the progress being made by Communist ideas among the membership of the American Federation of Labor. In a speech before the hired stoolpigeons of the civic federation Easley praised the A. F. L. officials for their splendid fight against Communism. But evidently Ralph believes that they need some help. He will supply the machine guns. The labor fakers will do their duty in expelling the radicals.

Mr. Easley might do worse than read the story of the late czar of Russia's little picnic with machine guns in St. Petersburg—now Leningrad—in January 22, 1905. The czar won on that day without doubt. His machine guns mowed down the workers like corn stalks before a scythe. But he did not succeed in murdering all the workers.

Today the czar is no more and the workers and peasants rule Russia. Easley may succeed in getting his machine guns into play against the American working class. Indeed this way of dealing with them is not an innovation. The industrial battlefields of the United States covers the bodies of many workers who fell before the gunfire of their capitalist enemies. But the issue is not settled by machine guns, Mr. Easley will learn if he does not know it now.

The fight for the emancipation of the workers will go on until the capitalist class is defeated. There can be no other outcome.

The Chicago Cloakmakers Reply to Sigman

The rousing cheers with which the message of the New York membership of the I. L. G. W. U. which is fighting against the Czaristic machine of Sigman-Perlstein and company was received last Saturday in the Workers Lyceum, shows that the struggle against reaction, corruption and downright treachery in the organization is not confined to New York City, but is reaching out into the section of the international union.

Forced to secure a new hall at the elevent hour, due to the action of Sigman's local tools in bringing pressure to bear on the managers of Carmens' Hall to cancel the contract for the meeting, the representatives of the New York Council of Action, can congratulate the local members of the I. L. G. W. U. for coming out in great numbers to hear the truth in spite of threats of dismissal from their jobs.

The temper of the meeting was almost unanimously against Sigman and for the left wing. It is true, there were a few people present who did not show much enthusiasm. They were sent there to cause trouble but quailed before the overwhelming anti-Sigman sentiment among the workers. The few questions those poor tools asked showed that they have no faith in the rank and file, but that they believe the unions are the property of the officials, to do with them as they see fit.

The defeat of the unholy trinity: Sigman, Perlstein and Feinberg is an accomplished fact in New York. It now remains for the job to be finished thruout the international. There is no doubt but the cloak and dressmakers in Chicago, who have suffered severely from the oppression of this trio will do their part in this work. Sigman, Perlstein and Feinberg must go as a preliminary to reconstructing the union for the purpose of fighting the bosses, rather than fighting for them as is the case under the present regime.

The Line-up in China

The story printed elsewhere in this issue and written by Rev. Harry F. Ward, chairman of the American Civil Liberties Union and now in China, is an interesting account of the Shanghai events from one who is neither a Chinese nor a Communist—both known to be deeply interested in attaining the liberation of China from imperialist domination.

Today's cables report that the Amalgamated Union of Commerce, Labor and Education, mentioned by Ward as the organ of resistance to foreign imperialism, has been raided by Chinese troops commanded by Japanese agent General Chang Tso-Lin in evident support of the treacherous Peking government headed by Tuan Chi-Jui, the provisional president.

The DAILY WORKER points out that the alignment of forces are now more sharply and clearly differentiated than when the Rev. Ward, mailed his story. On one side we find the forces of national liberation represented by the Knomintang Party and the Canton South China government as factors on the national field, with the students, labor unions and small shopkeepers in the Amalgamated Union of Commerce, Labor and Education in the Shanghai area.

On the side of capitalist imperialism we find not only the foreign troops and forces, but their bribed and subsidized allies, chiefly the troops of Chang Tso-Lin from the north, the venal and vacillating Peking government plainly influenced by imperialist diplomats of the type of the American minister, MacMurry, and the Shanghai Chamber of Commerce, which Ward intimates is much more interested in its capitalist profits than in national liberation.

The sharpening of the struggle between these forces may, we point out, bring more clearly into relief the fact that Rev. Ward abscured—that the fight for national liberation may take the form of the struggle between labor and capital, for the reason that only the proletariat is a really revolutionary class, willing to lead the fight and sacrifice to win—the historically rising class.

If the Irish Republicans boycotted spiritual establishments of their bishops as well as they did the landlords, they would not be obliged to beg the pope for assistance.

Now that William Jennings Bryan, has given a complete exposition of his ignorance there should be no difficulty in electing him presdient.

Anybody sending us the name and address of an important official of the ku klux klan who has not yet been arrested for rape, sodomy or grand larceny, will be remembered in our last testament.

The Present Situation and Immediate Tasks of the Party

ernment is insisting on the execution of the Washington conference treaties in order to strengthen the position of the American capitalists particularly against the Japanese and the British interests. In pursuing this imperialist policy the American government is attempting to hide its aggressive plans against the Chinese people by posing as a friend of China. In this hypocritical maneuver the American imperialists are trying to undermine the growing influence of the Soviet Union in the Far East and especially in China.

IV. The Political Situation in the United States.

1. Since the late imperialist war, fundamental and radical changes have taken place in the economic structure, class composition, and class relations in the United States. American capitalism has become a world power. Finance capital with its imperialist policies is dominating the life of the country. Large sections of the farmers have been expropriated in the recent agrarian crisis and thrown into the ranks of the proletariat. The tendency toward the levelling process which took place during the war thru the loss, to a certain extent, of their privileged position by the aristocracy of labor and the improvement of the position of the unskilled workers. The proletarianization of the farmers, the influx of large masses of Negroes into industry, and the great diminution of immigration from Europe, have made the American working class more homogeneous thus creating the basis for a sharper and more conscious struggle of the workers against the capitalists. The increased centralization and power of the American government and the tremendous increase of the governmental bureaucracy, during and following the late imperialist war, as compared with the pre-war period, and its continual brutal interference in the class struggle in favor of the capitalists and against the workers, is gradually instilling political consciousness into the minds of the masses and is creating the basis for a great political mass movement of the workers against the capitalists.

2. The period of jubilation and confidence in the camps of the capitalists, following the election of Coolidge to the presidency, has largely evaporated. Instead of industrial prosperity, the country is approaching a period of depression. Conflicts and friction within the capitalist class, are again coming to the surface. Witness the internal struggle in the ranks of the republican and democratic parties and the revival of disatisfaction with present conditions among the farmers and the city petty bourgeoisie.

3. A characteristic indication of the internal conflicts within the bourgeoisie is the intensifying struggle within the protestant churches between the so-called fundamentalists and the modernists. The Scopes trial is only a more spectacular manifestation of the general political disintegration of the American bourgeoisie.

4. As a result of the changes in the bourgeoisie (centralization of the government, growth of government apparatus, greater intervention in strikes) and changes in the working class, a movement developes for the formation of a labor party, indicating the growing political consciousness of the American workers. Even the breaking away of several millions of workers from the two old capitalist parties to support the candidacy of LaFollette indicated an advance in the development of the class consciousness of the American workers.

5. In the last election campaign the movement for the formation of a labor party was diverted into support of the LaFollette petty bourgeois progressive movement. The following factors are contributing toward a new forward swing of this movement. The recent wage reductions, the stagnant industrial situation, the defeat of every legislative measure favorable to the working class, the continual interference of the government on the side of the capitalists and against the workers in every industrial conflict, and lastly, the profound disappointment of large masses of workers in the effectiveness not only of the old political parties, but also of the non-partisan methods of the trade union bureaucracy and the "progressive" policies of LaFolletteism. The closer we approach the congressional elections of 1926, the more pronounced will become the political consciousness and activity of the American workers. The prospect of a strike in the anthracite regions, the resistance of the textile workers to wage cuts, the ferment in the garment industry in resistance to Governor Smith's award, all indicate a stiffening in the resistance of the working class. These struggles are creating increasingly favorable conditions for this movement.

Independent working class action and the formation of a political proletarian mass party—a labor party—is becoming more urgent.

V. The Trade Union Movement.

1. The trade union movement of the United States continues on the downward grade. It is losing membership. It is weakening organizationally. And is generally losing much of its effectiveness as an organ of economic struggle.

2. The reactionary trade union bureucracy met the open shop offensive of the capitalists with schemes of class collaboration instead of class struggle tactics. This false policy is responsible for the tendency toward degeneration of the trade union movement. An intensive struggle against the class collaboration schemes, such as labor banking, B. and O. plan, arbitration, the abolition of strikes, etc., is the best means of rejuvenating and strengthening the unions.

3. The left-wing in the trade unions is growing in number and influence. Such successful struggles of the left-wing against the reactionaries as took place in recent months in the unions of the miners, machinists, carpenters, and needle trades, is sufficient proof of the growth of the left-wing in the trade union. The tremendous success of the minority movement in England and the general turn to the left of the British labor movement, are bound to exert a revolutionary influence upon the labor movement of the United States.

VI. The Situation in the Workers Party.

THE present situation in the Workers Party of America raises the following principle problem for solution: The Workers Party faces serious dangers from its right wing, the non-Communist Lore tendency, which tends to undermine the Communist basis of the party.

Another impediment to the growth of the party and its becoming a real Bolshevik Party is its present social-democratic and federation form of organization. The sooner the party centralized its apparatus and completely reorganizes on the shop nuclei basis, the better for its growth and development.

Organized factionalism is a third sore in the body of the party. It not only demoralizes the membership but actually endangers the integrity and unity of the party.

The failure of a large percentage of our proletarian members to join the trade unions and to actively participate in Communist work in these organizations is a weakness which must be overcome.

And last, but not least, is the low degree of theoretical knowledge and training that prevails in our party, together with an insufficiently wide political outlook.

VII. The Concrete Tasks of the Workers Party.

1. BOLSHEVIZE THE PARTY. The specific immediate measures to bolshevize the party are the following:

a. Liquidate Loreism. This tendency must be liquidated politically in the sense that the party will wage a relentless struggle against Loreism and all other forms of opportunism. Enforce absolutely loyalty and discipline with regard to its own decisions and those of the C. I. Eradicate the conception that the W. P. is only a propaganda organ, no federation autonomy, full and complete control of the party press by the C. E. C., and no concessions to reformist prejudices and non-Communist views. Organizationally the Lore tendency must be liquidated in the sense that no representative of the Lore or Poyntz group will be permitted on the next C. E. C., and that no leading party organ (committee of editorship) will be led by followers of the Lore tendency.

b. Liquidate factionalism. No organized factions; that is, no organized groups within the party having a political platform of its own as distinct from the party platform and owing allegiance or discipline to its own organized group as against the party discipline. All existing groupings shall be immediately dissolved. The next C. E. C. shall be authorized to impose measures of party discipline, including in the most extreme cases expulsion from the party, the main effort of the party shall be directed against the most dangerous manifestations of such organized factionalism.

c. Reorganize the party on the shop nuclei basis and centralize its apparatus and leadership in accord with the organization letter of the C. I. and the special resolution of the C. E. C. to be submitted to the convention.

d. Educate the party and its leadership in the fundamentals of Marxism and Leninism

e. Widen the political outlook of the party. Educate and train the party to the understanding that the working class must be the leader in the struggle against every form of capitalist oppression and that the party must take cognizance of and react to every manifestation of the class struggle no matter how obscure or superficially remote from the immediate struggle of the workers for better conditions of labor.

The Party Press.

a. The existing daily organs of the party must be developed into real mass organs of the American workers.

b. Special measures shall be adopted to insure a completely centralized party control (editorial, ownership, etc.) over all party publications.

c. Special care shall be taken to develop theoretical and scientific publications. All efforts shall be made to speed up the publication of Lenin's works.

Building the Party.

a. The incoming central executive committee shall continue and intensify systematic campaign to recruit new members from among the workers into the party.

b. There shall be developed a real organization department to extend and strengthen the party organization.

c. In the United States our party does not at the present time face a revolutionary situation. The problem in the United States is to break the bonds which still tie the working class to its exploiters and to develop a consciousness of its interests as a class and conscious struggle for these interests as a class. Our party must be the medium to unify the industrial struggles of the workers and to break the bonds which hold the workers in the political parties of their exploiters. The policy of the party in the present situation must have this main objective—the awakening and the arousing of class consciousness for relentless class struggle against the capitalist system.

1. Extend and Intensify the Application of the United Front Tactics.

a. Propagate continually the idea of a united front of labor against the united front of capital.

b. Take the initiative in organizing united front action from below on every burning issue in the class struggle.

c. Expose the treachery of the Second International and of the reactionary trade union bureaucrats. Popularize the ideas and principles of the Comintern and Profintern and recruit members into the Workers Party.

d. Concentrate on the campaign for world trade union unity and for the recognition of Soviet Russia.

e. Work systematically for a united front of labor on the political field with the aid of such slogans as a united labor ticket in parliamentary elections and a Labor Party.

3. Trade Union Work.

a. To stimulate and support the crystallization of a progressive opposition bloc in the trade unions against the reactionary bureucracy.

b. Build Communist fractions in every union.

c. Participate actively in the work of the T. U. E. L. and build Communist fractions within it.

4. Compaign for a Labor Party.

a. Carry on a systematic campaign in every labor organization for a labor party. This campaign shall invariably be based upon the immediate needs and upon the economic and political struggles of the working masses.

b. A central point in this agitation shall be a review of the political experiences of the American workers with the LaFollette movement and the labor party movement since 1921. This review shall aim to drive home to the workers the following lessons: (1) The hostility of the old political parties to the workers; (2) The total ineffectiveness and bankruptcy of the non-partisan methods of Gompers and the conference for progressive political action; (3) The intermediate position of the petty bourgeoisie between the capitalist class and the working class and the contradiction of its class interests both to the class interests of the bourgeoisie as well as to the class interests of the working class which forces them to vaciliate between the bourgeoisie and the proletariat, between a political alliance with the bourgeosie or a political alliance with the proletariat. This vacillation of the petty bouregoisie manifested itself in the opposition of the LaFollette movement to the old capitalist parties on the one hand, and to the labor party movement on the other hand, prior to and during the last presidential elections, etc., and in the break up of the conference for progressive political action over the labor party issue; () The insincerity and treachery of the socialist party in the labor party movement; (5) The role of the Workers Party as the only consistent supporter and fighter for a labor party; (6) Participate in all non-partisan political bodies having trade union affiliation and fight within them for a labor party; (7) Utilize the slogan, "For a united labor ticket" as a step towards a labor party; (8) Build local and state labor parties on the basis of mass trade union support in accord with the special central executive committee resolution on the labor party that will be submitted to the convention; (9) In all this work guard against the premature splitting of the left wing from trade union non-partisan committees having mass support and rank and file representation and the formation of labor parties consisting only of the Workers Party and its sympathizing organizations. The labor party, whether local, state, or national, must be a genuine mass organization built upon the mass trade unions.

5. Anti-Imperialism and Anti-Militarism.

a. Carry on a systematic and active agitation against American imperialism particularly in Latin-America. Demand the withdrawal of American armed forces from foreign lands.

b. Combat the new militaristic wave and strive to develop a united front against the rising military caste in the United States, the new military and naval appropriation, against military training in the schools, camps, etc.

c. Carry on an active agitation against the Dawes plan.

d. Give active support to the activities of the All America Anti-Imperialist League.

6. International Labor Defense.

a. The party must continue to participate actively in the work of the International Labor Defense and assist it to become a real mass organization of the proletarian class struggle, fighting for the defense of working class prisoners.

7. Work Among Negroes.

a. The party shall actively support the struggle of the Negro race against all forms of racial discrimination and for complete economic political and social equality.

b. The party must extend its activities among the Negro workers and to recruit into its ranks the most conscious elements from them.

c. The party shall continue its active participation in the calling and building of the American Negro Labor Congress on the basis of the special resolution on the subject.

8. Agrarian Work.

a. The coming party convention shall formulate and adopt an agrarian program laying down our demands, line of policy, and forms of organization for the agricultural workers and poor farmers.

b. The central executive committee shall establish a special agrarian department to be in charge of the party's agrarian work.

9. Work Among Women.

a. The coming party convention shall adopt a special program for work among women.

b. The program shall provide for an intensive campaign to organize the women in industry and to unify the existing organizations of working class women in a national organization.

c. The central executive committee shall establish a special department of work among women.

Resolution on the Liquidation of Loreism

The following resolution was unanimously adopted by the Parity Commission for submission to the National Convention of the Workers (Communist) Party:

1. The Communist International has given a correct definition of Loreism. Loreism is opportunism. It is a right wing deviation from the revolutionary Leninist line of the Comintern and must therefore be relentlessly combatted.

2. The chief characteristics of Loreism as they manifested themselves in the development of our party are the following:

a. An underestimation of the fundamental changes in American capitalism since the late imperialist war and consequently a similar underestimation of the revolutionary potentialities of the present day class struggle in the United States. This opportunistic trait of Loreism has been finding refuge under such false pretenses as "soberness" and "realism" in the analysis of economic and political conditions.

b. Another characteristic of Loreism is its complete lack of understanding of class relations. The totally un-Marxian Lassalean maxim of the "one reactionary mass of non-proletarians" is for them the very essence of Marxism. The attitude of this tendency toward the farmers is determined by that incorrect maxim. With this concept of a fixed borderline between a clearly defined working class on the one hand and one unified and unchangeable reactionary mass on the other it is quite natural that these elements see in every manouver of our party a useless action and an indefensible adventure.

c. Failure to understand the true role of the Workers (Communist) Party as a militant revolutionary organization of the working class. This feature of Loreism manifests itself in a tremendous overemphasis of the propaganda functions of our party as against and to the exclusion of its fighting role, its active participation in the political life and struggles of the country. Opposition to the united front tactics of the Comintern that were presented by Loreism in the early days of this policy, and opposition to political manouvers in general, both spring from the same opportunistic conception of the role of our party.

d. On the surface, a slighting and sceptical attitude, but in reality a fundamental opposition to the agrarian and colonial policies of the Comintern. This opportunistic attitude springs from a non-Leninist conception of the role of the proletariat in the class struggle. Loreism fails to understand the objective need and possibility of alliances between the working class on the one hand and the oppressed farmers and the colonial peoples on the other hand, with their revolutionary proletariat playing the leading role.

e. Opportunistic compromises and deviations on the trade union field and in other working class non-partisan organizations. These deviations take the form of struggle for office for the sake of the office to the total neglect of our main task which is to win the working masses of these organizations for the revolutionary class struggle and for the leadership of the Communist Party.

f. Concealed and open opposition to centralized party control of the activities of party members inside the party and particularly in non-party organizations. Considered from this angle, Loreism means a social-democratic distortion of the principles of Communist organization and Communist discipline.

g. A consistent sympathetic attitude and support for the right wing groups in the Communist International, (support of Serrati, Levi, Brandler and Trotskyism).

h. An extreme readiness to make concessions to reformist prejudices and non-Communist views of politically backward workers to the extent of sacrificing Communist principles and policies.

i. A sneering attitude towards the Bolshevization slogan of the Communist International, and

j. Opposition in principle to underground (illegal) work and an unwillingness to understand the absolute necessity for a Communist party of combining legal with illegal work.

3. The Workers Party is in full agreement with the thesis on Bolshevization adopted at the last Plenum of the Communist International which says:

"The Bolshevization of the parties must first of all and above all be directed in the fututre against these right wing distortions which threaten to foil the historic mission of the Comintern."

4. The growth and Bolshevization of our Party demand the complete and thoro liquidation of Loreism. This becomes doubly necessary in view of the present world situation marked by a slower tempo of revolutionary development which tends to strengthen reformist illusions among certain sections of the proletariat. A truly Bolshevik party, free from the taint of opportunism, is the best and most effective means of checking the development of social-democratic illusions among the workers. In the Workers Party of America, Loreism is the most dangerous tendency, for the additional reason that it reflects in the sharpest form the resistance of the antiquated Social-Democratic forms of organization to the reorganization of the party on the basis of shop nuclei.

5. The party is ready for the complete political and organizational liquidation of Loreism. Thru six years of development of our movement marked by intensive inner struggles of a young, growing Communist party, the point has been reached when the overwhelming majority of the Party is ready to take a definite and clear stand against Loreism. This by itself is a sign of the growing maturity and Bolshevist quality of our Party.

6. But the first prerequisite for the successful liquidation of Loreism is the liquidation of the factional struggle between the Majority and Minority and unification of the two groups on the basis of the policies and tactics of the Comintern.

7 Thru an intensive ideological campaign against Loreism, the unified party will succeed in winning over to the position of the CI all proletarian and basically Communist elements of the present adherents of Loreism. It must be the ambition of the Party not to surrender a single worker to the ideological influence of Loreism.

8. Loreism must also be liquidated organizationally. This means that no organized Lore or Poyntz groups will be permitted to exist in the party, that neither Lore nor a Loreite will be permitted on the next C. E. C. of the Party, and that no leading party organ or committee will be directed by followers of Loreism.

9. The decision of the Comintern on Loreism expresses the conviction of the overwhelming majority of the Party. The Party will put this decision into effect in the best possible manner and in the shortest possible time

BRITISH GOVERNMENT FEARS STRIKE

RICKERT'S A. F. OF L. 'UNION' REFUSES TO QUIT SCABBING ON AMALGAMATED UNION STRIKERS

The few strikebreakers of the International Tailoring Company, who are scabbing on the striking members of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, without exception are members of the United Garment Workers of America, the DAILY WORKER has learned.

The executives of the company, whose employes have been on strike for five weeks, when interviewed at their offices, 847 Jackson Boulevard, declared that reports that the United Garment Workers scabs had been withdrawn were false, and that the agreement between the A. F. of L. union and the International Tailoring Company is still in effect.

At the local offices of the United Garment Workers, 175 W. Washington St., the union official in charge, George C. Slater, declared that he is still supplying garment workers, when he can get them, to take the places of the strikers, and that the scabbery will continue.

When asked if he could reply to the charge that the "union" was scabbing on the Amalgamated strikers, Slater said, "We are a bona fide American Federation of Labor organization, and the Amalgamated is not."

Bosses' Letter Same as Pickets

The American Federation of Labor officials thus take the same position as the garment bosses. In a letter to a former customer, which has been turned over to the Amalgamated, the International says that the Amalgamated is "too radical," and that the A. F. of L. union will meet their terms.

Bosses Tell of A. F. of L. Support

The letter sent by the International Tailoring company to all its customers thruout the country, and signed by Ray Reeder, declares that the International has the support of William Green and the United Garment Workers in its effort to break the strike. The letter is a plea for the customers to wait for orders, and an admission that no business is being done.

The bosses letter states in part:—

"I think within a week to ten days

AS WE SEE IT

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY

THE textile workers who have received the ten per cent wage cut in New England probably voted for Coolidge in order to insure prosperity to the country for the next four years. Now, the poor Dubbs are getting it in the neck. Thousands of workers find their standard of living suddenly lowered without having a thing to say about it. Yet, those workers may be opposed to Communism and may even join the capitalists in hating Soviet Russia, where the workers have everything to say in how much they shall get of the fruits of industry.

THE young men were discussing their problems on a street corner a few days ago and as I was passing by them one was saying to the other, "The companies are paying bigger dividends than ever before, yet it is hard to get a job, and when you get a job, there isn't much money in it." The speaker wore a pair of overalls, and looked fit, not the type you meet slinking along the slave market on Madison, worn out in the struggle, defeated and ready to kick in. The workers are thinking and talking just the same.

THE SHANGHAI STRIKE EVENTS TOLD BY A NEUTRAL OBSERVER; AN APPEAL TO U. S. UNIONISTS

By HARRY F. WARD

SHANGHAI—(By Mail.)—The Shnaghai strike will stand out in labor history. It began because the police fired 44 shots into an unarmed crowd May 30. Now after three weeks it is still going strong. The unique thing about the strike is that the merchants and bankers are in it. To tie up banks and shops for the three weeks as tight as tho it were a national holiday is something of record.

COMMUNIST PRINTERS IMPRISONED FOR LONG TERM BY SOFIA TERROR

(Special to The Daily Worker)

Stoitcho Vassilyeff, Traitcho Rostoff, Ivan Mandeff, were sentenced to 8 years strict detention and 270,000 leva fine for organizing an illegal printing press to serve the purpose of the Communist Party—and for printing illegal literature. The contents of the printing shop have been confiscated.

V. Tashkoff and Y. Kostadinoff were each sentenced to 4½ years strict imprisonment and 70,000 leva fine. Gatyu Ivanoff has been acquitted.

Appeal against sentence may be lodged with the higher constitutional court within a period of one month.

FARMERS OF U. S. MADE ONLY $649 IN PAST YEAR

Report Explodes Cal's "Prosperity" Bunk

WASHINGTON, July 28.—The department of agriculture has made an analysis of the income of the farmers during this past year of much advertised prosperity. The statement starts out by saying that the gross income for the year ending June 30, 1925 was nearly a billion dollars larger than in the previous year and the net income was something like $725,000,000 larger.

But way down at the bottom of the report the analysist gets down to cases and shows what the net result to the individual farmer amounts to. "The average net income per operator, including all farmers, amounted to only $876 in 1924-25, compared with $764 the preceding year, and covers returns on the farmer's equity in his farm.

"If a conservative rate (4.5 per cent and what investor is content with that rate today) of return for the operators' net capital investment is deducted from the net income, the return for the operator's labor and management and for the labor of his family was only $649 in 1924-25, and $531 in 1923-24.

"The average wage for hired farm labor was $569 compared with the return of $649 for the labor of the farmer and his family."

GET READY FOR LABOR DEFENSE DAY, SEPT. 13TH

Many Cities Now Making Last Preparations

Many cities are already reported to have made definite preparations for local conferences and mass meetings on Sept. 13th, set aside as "Labor Defense Day." The cities are New York Chicago, Los Angeles, Cincinnati, Philadelphia and Binghampton, N. Y.

"Labor Defense Day" was designated by the newly founded, International Labor Defense, a non-partisan individual and collective membership organization for the defense of class war prisoners of all beliefs and affiliations. In the afternoon of Sunday, Sept. 12th, local conferences will convene of representatives of labor organizations and branches of the I. L. D. formed in the meantime. City organizations or International Labor Defense will be composed at these conferences. In the evening of the same day mass meetings will be held at which all available labor speakers will be mobilized.

Chicago is the first to start branch organizations on the basis of individual members. Seven provisional branches have been set up and books and dues stamps, which cost ten cents per month, supplied to the applicants.

The major work of ILD will be to legally defend members of the labor movement proceeded against for their activity, to supply material aid and comfort to class-war prisoners and their families, and to demand the release of labor's prisoners of which there are 128 in America.

UNITED FRONT OF SILK WORKERS TELLS BOSSES TO SIGN BY AUGUST 1

PATERSON, N. J., July 28—Ribbon silk workers of Paterson, both in the United Textile Workers, A. F. of L., and the Associated Silk Workers, independent, have notified employers that the 44-hour week guarantee and a guaranteed minimum of $38 a week, with varying piece work increases, must be granted by August 1. Failing an answer a strike is expected. The Associated conducted a long strike last summer and fall that forced most of the broad silk bosses to yield.

PROFINTERN REQUESTS ALL ITS SECTIONS TO AID CHINESE WORKERS

MOSCOW, July 13.—(By Mail)—The Red International of Labor Unions has requested all its affiliated organizations and also the organizations and minorities sympathising with it, to take action in all trade unions for the mobilization of practical measures of assistance for the fighting working class of China.

They must see to it that the trade union bodies and where possible, the central committees of these bodies, declare their solidarity with the relief action of the International Workers Relief and carry out trade union help together with the International Workers Relief.

ANTHRACITE WAGE PARLEY DEADLOCKED

Coolidge Will Assist Bosses When Needed

(Special to The Daily Worker)

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., July 28.—With a national hard coal strike threatened for September 1, and with both operators and miners' union officials apparently deadlocked. Talk of federal intervention came to the forefront again today.

Operators and miners representatives gathered here this morning to resume their joint committee conference, but surface indications were that there was little prospect of breaking the deadlock. It is understood, however, that President Coolidge is disinclined to interfere at once, being willing to break the strike, however, if the operators are not strong enough to defeat the miners.

John L. Lewis, international president of the United Mine Workers of America, was to re-submit their demand for a small wage increase and the check-off system.

EUROPEAN CAPITALISM SHAKES BEFORE INTERNATIONAL UNITY OF ALL COAL MINERS' UNIONS

LONDON, July 28.—With the 1,200,000 British coal miners ready to down tools at midnight Friday, the British government trembles before a general strike unprecedented in European history. In fact all European capitalism is faced with rebellion of miners, as 74,000 miners struck today in the Saar Basin and the French miners threaten to walk out in the Nord and Pas de Calais departments.

Today, Herbert Smith, vice-president, and A. J. Cook, secretary of the Miners' Federation, are in Paris attending the meeting of the Miners' International, where they plan to obtain an agreement from the continental miners' representatives, to cut off at the source any coal shipments from the continent to the British Isles in case of strike. The outcome of the Paris meeting is yet unknown at this hour. It is chiefly the aim of the British miners to prevent the shipment of the 10,000,000 tons of coal now lying at the pit heads in the Ruhr.

German Miners Under League Rebel

The miners in the Saar Basin are making common cause with the French miners in demanding that their wages, paid in fast depreciating French francs, be revised to accord with the continually climbing cost of living. The Saar Basin is under the government of the league of nations and has an area of 742 squares miles and a population of 652,000.

The strike of the French miners in the Word and Pas de Calais, originally scheduled for Monday night, was postponed by the National Federation of Miners, while representatives confer with the ministry of labor.

Conference Wednesday

The main hope of British capitalism to avert the strike of the British miners lies in the conference due tomorrow between the owners and miners at the instance of the government, Premier Baldwin having finally decided to intervene to stop the strike if possible.

It is understood that the mine owners are already backing up on their previous determination to cancel the agreement on August 1 in their effort to force a wage cut and longer hours of labor. The Baldwin cabinet is also meeting today to consider its action and the king is in hourly communica-

RAID OFFICES OF COMMUNIST PARTY IN PARIS

Painleve Gives Order to Steal Literature

PARIS, France, July 28.—The police have raided the headquarters of the Communist Party, damaging the contents, and confiscating literature. The police conducted the attack upon orders given by Premier Painleve.

Among the literature taken were postcards showing French officers standing beside a table on which were the decapitated heads of Riffians. The cards contained the inscription, "French civilisation in Morocco—12,000 killed and four billion francs wasted. Workers and farmers gave all that—see what for."

Along the French front airplanes alone are active, the French not having begun their much heralded offensive.

Marshal Petain will leave for Paris soon.

SHANGHAI STRIKERS CALLING A GENERAL CONFERENCE AUGUST 1

MOSCOW, July 13.—(By Mail.)—Recently the situation in Shanghai has become intensified. On July 10 the English police fired into a demonstration of students. One student was killed and ten wounded. In the working class quarters of Shanghai the foreign police has been considerably strengthened. The French police have fired upon workers who attempted to prevent the loading of a steamer by strikebreakers.

The strike committee intends to hold a general Chinese conference of workers, students, businessmen and peasants for August 1 in order to centralize the protest movement and to control the Chinese government in its negotiations with the foreign powers.

The Industrial Work of the Workers (Communist) Party

The following resolution was unanimously adopted by the Parity Commission for submission to the National Convention of the Workers (Communist) Party:

1. The State of the Unions.—The trade union movement continues to pass thru the crisis in morale and membership which developed in the course of the tremendous industrial struggles from 1919 to 1923. These struggles, taken as a whole, constituted the greatest defeat ever suffered by the trade unions in the history of the American labor movement. Beginning in 1919, the employers waged a relentless warfare against the unions, striving to take from them the concessions they had won during the war period and to break up their organizations. The struggle extended into practically every industry, and everywhere the unions suffered greater or lesser defeats. This was the case in the steel, meat-packing, textile, shoe, railroad, printing, mining, clothing, metal industries, etc. In consequence the organizations have lost tremendously in membership. In 1920 the A. F. of L. totalled 4,075,000 members, but in November, 1924, it had fallen to 2,865,979. In several industries the unions have been virtually wiped out altogether. Only the organizations of highly skilled craftsmen and workers occupying key positions in the building, printing and railroad industries have been able to maintain themselves without serious losses. During this period the independent unions have all also suffered heavily, a case in point being the I. W. W., which dropped from 35,000 in 1922 to approximately 15,000 at the present time. The whole labor movement, which has not yet recovered from the great blow of the employers, is still slowly on the retreat. Its morale is at a low ebb.

An important factor preventing the recovery of the trade unions is the heavy unemployment which has prevailed with but slight periods of relief since 1921. At the present time unemployment is particularly seen in the coal, clothing, textile, iron and steel industries.

In the unionized bituminous fields of Illinois, Indiana, Ohio and Pennsylvania, the situation is greatly worsened by a shift in production from these fields to the unorganized territories in West Virginia. The employers are on the offensive all along the line. They are taking advantage of the situation by driving ahead with their "open shop" movement, one pronounced manifestion of which is the establishment of company unions in hundreds of plants and industries. They are also forcing wage cuts in many industries. The textile industry has just passed thru an extensive wage-cutting campaign and a similar one is now threatening the shoe industry. The anthracite bosses are threatening a wage cut, likewise the steel magnates. The clothing industry has also suffered wage cuts. Only in the building trades and among the more skilled railroad workers have the unions been able to secure even slight wage advances. The past year has been marked by fewer strikes than any year for several years.

In the face of this persistent crisis the bureaucracy has stubbornly refused to adopt the measures necessary to pull together again the forces of labor and to bring them into an offensive against the empolyers. Amalgamation, a Labor Party, and a general militant policy, have been repudiated overwhelmingly by the bureaucracy. The latter turns its attention more than ever to the development of its policy of class collaboration and surrender to the employers. The high tide of this movement was reached at the El Paso Convention of the A. F of L., where the central points of policy dealt with the development of labor banks, the B. & O. Plan, workers' insurance, and similar schemes. Within the past few months the new president of the A. F. of L., Green, has announced a general organization campaign to recruit the diminished strenght of the unions in the various big industrial centers. But this scheme, never seriously intended, will not materialize into anything concrete. It is already going the way of such plans in the A. F. of L., by being sabotaged to death.

2. The State of the Left Wing in the Unions.—The left-wing movement is at present operating under great difficulties in the trade unions. The ferocious attacks by the bureaucracy thru expulsions, blacklistings, etc., have in most unions driven the Trade Union Educational League underground, which has rendered its work exceedingly hard. Besides, many valuable connections with progressive elements in the unions have been lost in the last two years thru the Labor Party splits (which were forced by the weakness and treachery of the progressive leadership), and thru the growth and development of the LaFollette movement, which the left-wing sharply opposed. In the bitter fight that has gone on between the bureaucracy and the left-wing, the progressives in the middle have become demoralized and disorganized and have to a considerable extent fallen under the control of the reactionary bureaucracy. The rank and file of the unions have lost much in morale by the many defeats in strikes and by the poisonous campaigns of class collaboration constantly carried on by the officialdom of the unions. But among them there is a smoldering discontent, and wherever the left-wing can break thru the opposition of the bureaucracy and crystallize this discontent into definite movements, the masses rally in bitter struggles against their misleaders and against the employers directly. In the Carpenters' Union election, the T. U. E. L. militants developed a powerful opposition to the Hutcheson machine. Likewise in the Machinists' Union against the Johnston administration. The election in the Miners' Union, where Voyzey polled 66,000 against Lewis' 134,000, according to the official figures (in truth he was in all probability elected) was another demonstration of mass support to left-wing leadership. The latest manifestations of the left-wing's successful rallying of the masses against the bureaucratic officialdom in spite of a maze of difficulties, is the present upheaval in the needle trades unions. Altho bitterly persecuted in the unions and driven underground in many organizations, the T. U. E. L. militants have been able in many cases to smash thru the official opposition and to swing great masses behind them and their demands.

3. State of the Progressive Bloc. In the trade unions there are many elements, so-called progressives, who are not advanced enough ideologcially to join directly to our Party or the Trade Union Educational League. These are the elements out of which shall be constructed the "progressive" opposition bloc against the ultra-reactionaries now controlling the bulk of the unions. At the present time these progressive elements are without definite leadership, organizations and policies. In 1921-22, the organization of the Trade Union Committee for the Relief of the Russian Famine was an expression of this tendency, in the face of Gompers' opposition. In the A. F. of L. convention they also secured a degree of organization in 1923-24 around the slogan of the Recognition of Soviet Russia and in the Trade Union Committee for the Establishment of Trade Relations With and Recognition of Soviet Russia. The C. P. P. A., which was an outgrowth of the general movement for the political organization of the workers independent of the two old parties was also, in its earlier stages, a definite organization of the progressive elements against the Gompers' machine. All these movements, however, have been greatly weakened. The progressives are, for the most part, completely demoralized and are being used as tools by the reactionary bureaucracy against the left-wing.

Main Tasks of the Party in the Trade Unions.

THE main tasks of the Party in the trade unions are:

1. The revolutionizing of the existing unions thru strengthening and organizing the left-wing in the unions by bringing all the proletarian elements of the Party into the unions, by the organization of trade union fractions, the building up of the T. U. E. L. and the stimulation of the organization of the progressive opposition bloc.

2. The organization of the unorganized by the strengthening of the existing organizations, the creation of new unions in industries where none exist, the building of shop committees and the utilisation of the shop nuclei as points for inaugurating campaigns to organize the unorganized.

3. The unification of the trade union movement by the stimulation of the campaign to amalgamate the craft unions into industrial organizations.

The Party Organization for Trade Union Work.

THE Party organization for the carrying on of the trade union work is still in a primitive and undeveloped state. Considerable improvement has been made during the past year or so. The Industrial Department has been definitely organized. The District Organizers are submitting regular monthly reports and are devoting more and more attention to the work in the trade unions in their respective localities. But only a start has been made. Our system of Party fractions in the unions is still weak and scattering. The Trade Union Educational League groups exist only in the more important industrial centers. This situation must be remedied, and for this purpose a whole series of organizational measures are necessary. We must look forward to the creation of effective fractions and T. U. E. L. groups in all unions and in all industrial centers.

Necessary Organizational Measures.

WHILE putting into effect the following organizational measures and in carrying out the trade union program of the Party generally, a constant campaign must be prosecuted to awaken the membership to the vital importance of winning over the masses of workers now organized in the trade unions. Anly tendency to consider work in the trade unions as in some way secondary or unimportant must be ruthlessly liquidated. Likewise all tendencies such as to consider party work in the trade unions a function of a specially selected section of our Party or the labeling of Party activities in the trade unions as syndicalistic must be vigorously fought against. Because of an insufficient understanding of its importance, the trade union work has often suffered in the factional fighting in the Party.

NEW EVOLUTION CASE PROMISES PYROTECHNICS

Daring Treasury Clerk May Lose His Job

WASHINGTON, July 28—Washington's evolution case assumed a national aspect today.

Reiterating his intention to "fight to a finish," Loren H. Wittner, treasury clerk who filed the suit, announced that a dozen leading scientists and educators from all over the country were prepared to testify in his behalf that evolution was taught as a fact and not merely as a theory in Washington schools.

Wittner's suit is based principally on the charge that the theory that man descended from a lower order of animals constitutes disrespect to the bible.

The names of the scientists Wittner guarded with secrecy, imposed on him by his attorneys.

"When granted a hearing, I will have an imposing array of nationally known scientists to back me up," said Wittner.

Ask For Dismissal.

But it developed that Wittner may not get his hearing. When the suit comes up before Justice Siddons in the district of Columbia supreme court tomorrow, the government attorneys handling the defense will ask for its prompt dismissal on technical grounds. They will not attack the constitutionality of the legislative "rider" to the district appropriation bill, which Wittner is attacking, and they will seek, if possible, to avoid a hearing on what constitutes "disrespect to the holy bible" in the curriculum of Washington schools.

The defense expressed confidence that the court would grant its request, particularly because the supreme court has held that a taxpayer who has no material personal interest cannot enjoin public funds. Wittner would stop salaries of Washington science teachers.

If the suit is thrown out on technicalities, Wittner declared he would file another petition in an acceptable legal form and continue the battle "to take religion out of the schools of the country."

WASHINGTON, July 28—Asserting that "disrespect to the holy bible" is not being taught in Washington schools, District of Columbia legal officers today filed a motion to dismiss the evolution suits instigated by Loren H. Wittner, treasury clerk.

The suit was assailed chiefly on technical grounds, the principal contention being that Wittner has no rights before the district supreme court as he is without material personal interest in the case.

The filing of the dismissal motion took Washington by surprise as it had been expected such a move would be postponed until tomorrow, the last day set by Justice Siddons to receive the answer of the defense to Wittner's petition asking that salaries of Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of schools, and W. P. Hay, head of the biology department, be stopped because capital children were being taught disrespect to the bible thru the teaching of natural science.

the inevitable tendency of capitalism to grasp for more and more profit, throws millions of American workers permanently on the sidewalk, as has happened in England. The owners of the textile mills that cut the wages of their slaves ten per cent have nothing to worry about. Perhaps they are over in Buckingham palace waiting to kiss the king's hand or to take a drink of his champagne out of golden vessels. Wherever they may be, they are not producing wealth, but wasting it.

THE foreign expert on the Milwaukee Leader accuses the Communists of inconsistency, because they opposed the Dawes plan for Germany while they demanded loans for Soviet Russia. Only a social democrat would see anything inconsistent in this. The Leader editor cannot see what the British trade union delegation saw at a glance, namely, that Russia is ruled by the workers and not by the capitalists. Loans granted to Russia will go towards the building of industry for the use of the producers, while loans granted to Germany under the Dawes plan or to any other country, go to stabilise capitalist economy and crush the workers. The Dawes plan helped to enslave the German workers. This the German wage slaves will readily admit.

SOVIET RUSSIA is getting along very well without loans, tho had she been able to secure them, the process of reconstruction would be accelerated. Russia is not so very anxious for loans now. A big Berlin bank has put up a guarantee of $1,500,000 for the export of Russian sugar. The workers' republic is ready to buy several million dollars worth of machinery in England, and Chamberlain does not know whether to bite his tongue off or not, for his threats of war. Nothing succeeds like success. Even the leaders of the reformist unions of France and Belgium who were bitter foes of the Soviet Union had their eyes opened by a visit to that country. They went to scoff and returned praying, that their own countries would follow Russia's example.

WHO has not heard about Armenia? What Belgium was to the Allies Armenia was to the Greeks. The capitalists of the world have been using Armenia as a blanket to cover their crimes. They were out to save the soul of Armenia from the terrible Turks and the Bolshevik Russians. We don't know what is taking place in Turkish Armenia, but an English woman nominated by the British government to serve as joint secretary of the Armenian Fund, declares that "Moscow has saved Russian Armenia." Her interview to The Daily Herald will be found in another section of this paper.

PEOPLE are still babbling about the League of Nations and even political wise acres are thundering against foreign entanglement as if the United States were not up to its ears, not only in Europe but in every other part of the world. It was American finance together with the American government that brought pressure to bear on Germany in favor of the security pact, which provided for entrance into the League of Nations. The bankers put over the Dawes plan without the sanction of congress even tho the power and influence of the administration was behind it. The bankers are running things in this country so boldly that they no longer try to hide the fact.

COUNT Ilya Tolstoy, degenerate son of the great novelist whose writings are being published by the Soviet government for distribution among the peasantry whom he loved, spoke recently before a gang of bankers in Glacier Park, and ruled the Bolshevik outside the pale of civilization, at the same time predicting their speedy demise. After dwelling on the atrocities committed by the Bolsheviki and applying the rod of castigation to the hide of the proletariat, the count expressed his fear lest the people when overthrowing the Bolsheviki should massacre them. Thanks for small mercies Mr. Count of no account.

we'll be nearly back to our normal schedule."

"What's the trouble? Our agreement with the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America expired May 1st, and they insisted that we sign a new one."

"We're Glad To Be With Them"

"The Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America are not, and never have been, recognized by the American Federation of Labor (this is written in capital letters). As a matter of fact, perhaps you read it in the papers, William Green refused to sit on the same stand with Sidney Hillman. Mr. Green is president of the American Federation of Labor, and Mr. Hillman is president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers."

"From now on we are operating with the United Garment Workers affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. It's an entirely different organization; WE'RE GLAD TO BE WITH THEM, and you'll be glad that we are with them, because you'll get better service all along the line."

"We Need Time"

"Explain things to your customers and give us a few extra days, THAT WE NEED until we have them on the run good and plenty. Explain things to your customers and send us your business. We'll take darn good care of it.

(Signed) Ray Reeder,

International Tailoring company."

A dispatch from New York stating that the A. F. of L. union had withdrawn its scabs, was no doubt circulated to enable William Green, president of the A. F. of L., to hide the scabbery of the United Garment Workers, of which Thomas A. Rickert, vice-president of the A. F. of L. is president.

Green Still for Scabbery

The dispatch state, "The Chicago strike against the International Tailoring company and the J. L. Taylor combine is reported in good shape, with the company discontinuing the use of the United Garment Workers label."

Green has not changed his position since he wrote the Chicago Federation of Labor that the Amalgamated was a "dual" organization and he would not take action against the Rickert scabs.

Rickert Agreement In Court

The International company has presented a copy of the A. F. of L. union's agreement as evidence against the Amalgamated in their effort to secure an injunction restraining the strikers from picketing. Yesterday the high priced attorneys for the firm began their fifth day of argument before Judge Hugo Pam, room 941 county building. They said they would conclude today, when William A. Cunnea, will take up the case for the strikers.

Police violence has temporarily abated, no arrests being made yesterday. Many sluggers and police are kept on the picket line at 847 W. Jackson Blvd., but they have failed in their attempt to intimidate the strikers.

Many Strikes In New York

NEW YORK, July 28.—Strikes continue in the New York clothing industry, with fifteen more walkouts called by the Amalgamated to unionize shops previously unorganized and to enforce union standards in delinquent shops. Six of the 18 strikes previously called have been settled with victories for the union.

The Amalgamated has gone into the capitalist courts and, has applied to supreme court judge Churchill for an injunction restraining the International Tailoring company, from attempting to "injure, disrupt break up, interfere with and destroy the Amalgamated Clothing Workers Union."

Nothing From Employers Court

Earlier in the week the International got out a temporary restraining order against the Amalgamated, and it is now seeking to have this made permanent. Of course, the Amalgamated can expect no aid from a court the chief purpose of which is to uphold the employers and the capitalist system.

WEST VIRGINIA MINERS FIGHT LIKE HEROES

While Officials Play Traitor to Union

(By Worker Correspondent.)

SHINNSTON, W. Va.—For the last thre months I have been looking for work, but I can't find anything except scab mines. They are working every day.

Just the other day I went to Morgantown section around Scott's Run. I heard Gilbert Davis was to resume operations on union basis, but when I got there I learned different. The miners went to work and did not know whether they were going to receive the Baltimore contract.

When the miners went in the company succeeded to load three railroad cars mut when the miners heard that the company wanted to establish a company union they all at once walked out in a body. The miners are 100 per cent on strike.

I succeeded in bumming my way from Shinnston to Morgantown. But was disappointed after I got there. The boys told me they are out for the Baltimore agreement and nothing else. So, naturally, I had to come back home, back on picket line the next morning at Owings, W. Va.

George Dorsey, former member of the U. M. W. of A. is now going in the mines scabbing for the Consolidation Coal company. I suppose they got tired of paying him for yellow dogging for them. So George, rather than quit, went scabbing where he is protected by the state police.

We have an Italian scabbing here at Owings, but it is understood that if he don't work, he would go to jail on account of peddling moonshine. So while he is scabbing for the Consolidation Coal company he is O. K. otherwise he would have to serve two years in prison.

Our former board member of Sub District No. 4 got his leg smashed a little, but as usual he is out every morning in the company store. His name is John Kostelac and everybody knows that bird.

All Unions Meet Thursday

Thursday, all the executives of the trade union movement of Great Britain will meet to discuss the aid to be given the miners in event of a strike.

The Transport Workers' Union and the Railwaymen have already pledged not to move coal by rail or water during the miners' strike. Speaking here yesterday, J. Bromely, labor member of parliament, alluded to the demands of the railway companies for a five per cent wage cut. He insisted that such demands be resisted to the uttermost, that the railwaymen and the miners were both involved and each must stand by the other against the greed of capitalism.

Big Profits—Cramp Talks Rail Action

Stephen Walsh, a member of the former Labor cabinet, speaking at Wigan, told how the operators' own figures show that they had made an average profit of $80,000,000 each year since the 1921 lockout, yet pretended to be too poor to pay the present low wage scale.

C. T. Cramp, secretary of the Railwaymen's Union, declared that the matter might not end with the rail and transport workers merely refusing to move coal. If men were suspended or blacklisted for refusal to handle coal, all of the railwaymen would be ordered out.

Fascism Ousts Chicago Tribune Writer But it Doesn't Mean Anything

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

TODAY, the fascist government of Italy ousts George Seldes, the correspondent of the Chicago Tribune, because Mussolini rule feels hurt at some of the news he has cabled to the United States.

The Tribune settles the matter in a wire to its Washington bureau that will be presented to the Italian ambassador declaring, "We don't care to stand on Seldes and will be willing to send another one of our experienced correspondents in his place, but not if he is subject to censorship."

Another correspondent will be sent. He will be a little more tender with the Mussolini government, meekly submitting a little more to its wishes, and all will be well. The Tribune has no differences with Italian fascist rule. They are birds of a feather. But even the Tribune gets a correspondent that occasionally wants to send out some of the news as it really happens. Its weeding out process, against these writers, is therefore a continuous one. What has happened to Seldes is not an isolated case.

• • • •

It is interesting to note that the American ambassador to Rome, Henry P. Fletcher, is an agent in aiding the Mussolini government to suppress news hostile to it. It was to Fletcher that the fascist foreign office turned when it wanted to get Seldes, because Seldes was presenting in his dispatches to the United States the views of the political antagonists of the dictator. Not the views of the Italian Communists, to be sure, but simply those of the bourgeois opposition.

It develops that the correspondents in Italy of the Associated Press and of the New York Times are both Italian subjects. These two most important sources of American information on Italian developments are therefore directly under the thumb of Mussolini. Neither one dared sign a meek protest to Under Secretary Grandi of the fascist foreign office, protesting against Seldes' expulsion. It can thus readily be seen how this news is badly tainted at the source.

• • • •

The Italian correspondent of the DAILY WORKER, more than a year ago, was evicted from Italy. He was seized, escorted to the border and put out of the country. He was given no notice. Fascism wanted to get rid of him, for he spoke for a class that is directly hostile to, and seeks the overthrow of Mussolini rule. So it acted quickly, once the decision was made. Since then no correspondent of the DAILY WORKER has been able to function openly under the fascist dictatorship. That is the difference between the DAILY WORKER and the Tribune, that openly espouses the social system that fascism champions.

• • • •

The Tribune tries to cajole Mussolini with the threat that it is "getting more interesting news on Russia than any other newspaper with a correspondent accredited there." It infers that it is not compelled to have a correspondent in a country to get "the news." This is quite right. The Tribune can, and it does manufacture news about the Union of Soviet Republics in its own office. It wouldn't print the facts if it had them. At first blush the editor would say that the facts about the economic reconstruction in the Soviet Union are not interesting. The readers of the Tribune want something thrilling, riots, counter-revolutions, bloodshed; but the facts about conditions in the Workers' Republics do not yield such thrillers.

• • • •

Only the DAILY WORKER publishes the facts about Soviet Rule. It alone gave space to the encouraging report of the Franco-Belgian trade union delegation, published yesterday, not only about conditions in the Soviet Union, but also about the struggle for world trade union unity. That news came slowly, by mail. But news is anything interesting that has not been published before, and the American working class receives it exclusively thru its own paper, the DAILY WORKER, while the high-priced correspondents, with unlimited expense accounts and the cable at their elbows, continue to send piffle and prevarication as it suits them.

Mussolini isn't worried that the Tribune will continue at all times to attack proletarian rule in the Soviet Union. Mussolini also doesn't worry that the Tribune will send another correspondent to Rome suitable to the purposes of the fascist dictatorship, and the incident of the expulsion of Seldes will be quickly forgotten. In the language of the Tribune's own comics, its little friction with Mussolini "doesn't mean anything."

CROUCH IS HURT, OFFICERS HOLD UP TREATMENT

Communist Waits Hours for Army Doctor

By WALTER M. TRUMBULL.

FORT SHAFTER GUARD HOUSE, Honolulu, Hawaii—The stupidity and lack of logic used by imperialist officers and their subordinates in the capitalist United States army is about unbelievable. Soldiers in the army see examples of this stupidity every day.

In the army if a man is ill he reports to the first sergeant of his company on battery and the sergeant places the man's name in the sick report book. In the guard house the provost sergeant or the sergeant of the guard has this duty. The sick report book is sent to the dispensary at seven o'clock and the prisoners who are ill report for treatment after completing the morning work at eleven o'clock.

Stone Falls on Crouch.

It happened that Comrade Paul Crouch was injured while working on the stone pile at the quarry. A rock weighing between fifty and seventy-five pounds fell on his foot. The accident occurred at about eleven o'clock in the morning, just before time to stop work for the noon hour.

Comrade Crouch reported to the dispensary for medical treatment but because he had not had his name placed in the sick report book he was refused treatment. He was notified that he would have to walk to the guard house, a ten minutes walk, have his name placed in the book and come back for treatment.

Injured Untreated.

Upon reaching the guard house Comrade Crouch was informed by the officer of the day that he would have to wait until one o'clock before he would be permitted to report for treatment. At one o'clock he was told that he would have to wait until the following day.

Lt. Kreuter and Sergeant Gaddy, the prison officer and the provost sergeant, have given orders to sentries prohibiting a man from reporting for treatment unless he has been enrolled in the sick report book.

It amounts to this: A man must be possessed of supernatural powers and must be able to tell at six thirty a. m. that he is going to be injured in the course of his work, have his name placed in the book and thus be able to obtain medical treatment that same day. Otherwise wait until the following day for relief. Does it sound logical?

Medical Attention A Joke.

This is the formula, however, that must be complied with if one wants medical treatment while in the guard house. Furthermore, it is the formula laid down by men from West Point—Men who have been called the "Pride of America."

Crouch returned the next morning with his name on the sick report book. "A very bad foot." This from the doctor. He ordered that Crouch be kept in quarters. Crouch had already worked two half days with the injured foot, and then when the authorities finally condescended to give him attention, he was told that he had a bad foot. "The best of medical attention!"

Thus it is with men in the service. They are not allowed to know or do anything for their own comfort. They must await the pleasure of their superiors even tho these superiors have nothing more to do than a round of golf.

BIBLE FOE IN TREASURY MAY LOSE HIS JOB

Wittner Did No Want "Help from God."

WASHINGTON, July 28—The publicity which Loren H. Wittner has received since he started his anti-bible controversy in the district courts may cause him to lose his government job.

It was revealed today that Wittner, who admits he is an atheist, struck out with a pen the words, "swear," and "so help me god" from the oaths which he took at three separate times in the government service.

The solicitor of the treasury department, who is an official of the department of justice, has been asked to rule on the question of whether or not Wittner is legally an employe of the government since he failed to make the required oath.

OMAHA LOSES ACTIVE COMRADE

OMAHA, Nebr., July 28.—Comrade Arthur P. Kramer, a young and active member of the Omaha English branch of the Workers Party, died at Mercy Hospital in Council Bluffs, Ia., from tuberculosis. He was stricken with paralysis about a week before he died. Comrade Kramer attended the Federated Farmer-Labor Party convention, also the St. Paul convention. He was active in the local labor movement, a member of the Railway Clerks' Union, and had been delegate to the central body where he had put forward a few measures taken from the left wing program. He was a student, becoming a recognized leader in the unions; of a cheerful disposition, had many friends and his influence had already made its mark. He was about 24 years of age and had been a member of the Workers Party for over two years, or since our English branch was organized.

Freight Hits Work Train.

CARLINVILLE, Ill., July 28—Three men were injured early today when a Chicago and Alton work train carrying 200 laborers crashed into a string of freight cars on a siding near Blerd Crossing. An open switch was blamed for the wreck.

Those hurt were: Joe Novak, chest injuries.

Jess Sones, fractured collar bone.

Victor Chism, badly bruised about body.

RUSSIA TODAY, is the official report of an impartial official body of British Labor—who (with special experts) have travelled unhindered thru every section of Soviet Russia, and in their report give a complete picture of life in the world's first workers' government.

No book in years has received so much attention from the world trade union movement. In England alone over fifty thousand copies of the book were sold. All workers who wish for world trade union unity have given high praise to this book. Capital and its henchmen have denounced it bitterly.

RUSSIA TODAY should be in the hands of every worker.

GARMENT BOSSES CALL IN LABOR HATING CROWE TO DO DIRTY WORK AGAINST AMALGAMATED STRIKERS

The bosses of the International and J. L. Taylor Clothing companies, not satisfied with the brutalities practised by the city police force and their hired sluggers, have called o nState's Attorney Robert E. Crowe for assistance in the attempt to establish a non-union shop by terrorizing the Amalgamated strikers.

Crowe, ever ready to help in any fight against organized labor sent a detective from his private force to the plant of the International Tailoring company. It is understood that an assistant states attorney is "invest- company. An assistant state attorney is "investigating" charges that union pickets are assaulting scabs.

When one of the striker asked the beefy and brutal looking detective from Crowe's office who he was and why he was bustling about yelling and trying to frighten the pickets he was told that "I'm from Crowe's office. I'm here to see that the law is not broken. These fellows will have to move on and keep moving."

He refused to give his name and said he was there to investigate charges that the unionists have been assaulting scabs. When the striker offered to secure evidence for him that it was not the unionists who were being assaulted the gent who represents the might and majesty of Mr. Crowe swore roundly and denounced the striker as a liar.

When it was pointed out to him that he was supposed to be attempting to find out the truth about the assault charges he grew red and bellowed, "Move on. Get the hell out of here before I run you in. You can't tell me my business. I know what I'm doing. Get the hell out of here."

Efforts will be made to find from states attorney Crowe information as to who asked him to send his private thugs to the scene of the strike and to find if he is honest in his efforts to get at the truth about the sluggings that have occured at the International and Taylor plants.

If Crowe is as anxious to punish those who have beaten up unoinists as he has been in the past to help frame and railroad to jail members of working class organizations he will find the strikers ready to help him.

He can have his detective investigate the assault committed on a striker by officer No. 4011 if he is not a tool of the bosses in this strike as he was in the strike of the International Ladies' Garment Workers Union.

SCAB HAT FIRM BEGS JUDGE FOR ANTI-UNION AID

Tries in Vain to Run Away from Union

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., July 28.—F. Berg & Co. big open shop hatters, at Norwalk, Conn., admit they are whipped by the United Hatters' Union, unless Judge John J. Walsh of the court of common pleas makes permanent a temporary injunction he granted against picketing. Hearings are being held, with David Fitzgerald, mayor of New Haven, acting as counsel for the union.

The Berg firm moved to Norwalk last May from Orange, N. J., with the announcement they were out for lower costs and would never do business again with the union The firm had been in business in Orange for 60 years and the transfer of its plant put a large porcentage of the hatters of Orange on the unemployed list and struck a blow at the union.

But the union followed the shop and when the plant opened its doors in Norwalk union agents told Berg he would have to sign up. "You have not a chance," replied Charles Berg, rebuffing them.

But union pickets began to be so effective that Berg's non-union hands quit in batches and the company, in its petition to the judge bewails the "complete ruin" that is ahead. There will be no ruin but uninterrupted production if the firm signs up, says the union. Otherwise the fight will go on. The union had experience with injunctions in Orange, where the Bergs, in former efforts to go open shop, tried these writs in vain.

Bookkeepers' Union Officials Imitate Pogroms by Sigman

NEW YORK.—The Bookkeepers', Stenographers' and Accountants' Union in New York is very small. The greatest part of its members are employed in union local offices, radical papers and charity institutions. A very small percentage is employed in business offices and only five bank employes. The bankers and office managers' of New York hate to see their offices organized and the officers do not possess the nerve and ability to fight hard enough. They held few meetings in the lower Broadway section, but a policeman told the president that he does not approve such meetings and the meetings were stopped. The members kept on demanding of the officers some work and they had to do something to increase the membership. So they decided to gain the sympathy of the bankers and businessmen by cleaning the union of "Communists," real or supposed to be Communists. As a rule there will always be Communists found in a union, when the officers want to show their loyalty to the capitalists.

The officers of the B. S. and A. U. picked out George Primaw, a very active member of the union, who had the nerve to criticize the president's inactivity and suggest some ways of organization. They brought charges against him that he is a member of the Workers Party and therefore a member of the T. U. E. L. Primow is in the union long enough, but they never brought charges against him. A trial committee was appointed to try Primow. The majority of the trial committee, under the influence of Organizer Freina denied Primow a fair hearing.

The minority of the trial committee, Chernow and Cooper, appealed to the trial committee for a fair trial, so that no one could accuse the Bookkeepers' Union in unfairness to the members. The trial committee, i. e., the majority refused to listen to the appeal.

As the constitution of the union provides the case was put to the membership and the minority of the trial committee appealed to the membership for a fair trial. Kitzes also took the floor to demand a fair trial for Primow. The leading "LaFollette socialists" defended the position of the majority, trying to quote W. Z. Foster and Lenin, and they certainly showed their complete ignorance. Their appeal did not do much good to them as the vote was 16 to expell Primow against 13. By the way, there are about 900 members in the union. Such a close vote did not please the officers of the union and the socialist lights in the union at once decided that Cooper, Chernow and Kitzes are Communists and must be expelled at once.

"Brother" Steinberger, the leading ignoramus of the S. P. and the most inactive member in the union, brot the charges. The charges are vague but the desire to get rid of the Communists is visible. Let the bankers know that the Bookkeepers' Union is also a respectible organization and there is no danger to let they boys join it. The B. S. and A. U. will be placed on the list of the "reliable" unions very soon.

Bakers Care for their Own.

SEATTLE—(FP)—All unemployed members and their families in Locals 9 and 227, Bakery and Confectionery Workers, Seattle, were taken care of by the union at a cost of $17,015.51 for the six months, December to June, according to Secy. Paul K. Mohr. The relief was partly from the union treasury and partly by voluntary surrender of certain days on the job by employed members.

Politician Hits College That Took John D's Millions

LAKE GENEVA, Wis., July 28.—Two hundred delegates to the Wisconsin State Federation of Labor convention at Lake Geneva heard Assemblyman Wm. Soleman, a member of the Painters, denounce the University of Wisconsin for accepting a donation from the Rockefeller foundation. The foundation subsidizes education that is to its liking.

"Let wealth gain a foothold and wealth will expect something in return", Coleman said.

TELLS HOW UNION PAINTERS FOUGHT FOR CONDITIONS

But Union Failed to Protect Members

(By T. K.—Worker Correspondent)

STAMFORD, Conn., July 28.—I am a Young Worker League member here in the so-called prosperous town in Stamford and am employed as a painter with 19 others in a silk mills, situated on the Post Road on the boundary between Stamford and Sound Beach where approximately 600 workers are employed.

Seventy-five per cent of the help are girls and boys, mostly girls, their age ranging from 12 to 18 years.

I take this opportunity to write an article on the working conditions in an open shop where all sorts of young help are hired to keep the wages low.

The production at the factory is turning the raw silk into selling quality. The mills is divided into several sections, each divided into their respective departments, preparing the silk for the market.

Union Painter On Job

In regards to the reason for this writing, the following situation arose in the new section of the building where we painters (all union) are laboring.

The job is in the control of the owners of the place and the hiring is done thru the superintendent due to the job being day work.

The painting job for the old section of the building was given to a New Jersey contractor and the company experienced a heavy loss. Hence the day work job—all other trades on the premises under contract. It is a test by which the company means to experience in order to save money thinking the men will hustle if put under a strict and conservative foreman.

Slave Driver Foreman.

Unfortunately for the boys doing the painting the foreman secured his position by being the first man hired and was recommended to same by a store owner who handles paint supplies and an agent for the material used on the job.

While on the job two men were laid off for reasons unknown to any of us. We had our own reasons—reasons that would have shocked many in the building trades had the truth come out and the victims given a fair trial at the union meeting.

One of Those Climbers.

Our own reasoning would have fired the present foreman who is rushing the job for fear he would lose his place and who is taking advantage of this fact—that only 20 months have passed since his admission as a journeyman from his class of apprentice.

A feeling of dislike arose amongst the painters upon learning who the foreman was and trouble came sooner than we predicted.

Shop Steward Idea.

During the idle minutes left from the half hour at noon we spoke of electing a "shop steward" to see that we were treated like human beings, namely, stopping five minutes ahead of time to wash, to see that water is brought to us for drinking purposes and to take care that any conflicts arising between the foreman and the men would be settled with as much discretion as allowed thru the union.

We finally had one elected, and accordingly on the day of his election, he blew his whistle, which he had purposely bought, and the men quit for the day.

Shop Steward Fired.

The following morning the newly-elected "steward" was notified that his services would no longer be required.

Upon investigation by the man in question he was duly told that he was overdoing his privilege as a union man, and had no business to broach a subject without consulting the officials concerning any problem of such nature. That closed the affair of the discharged men so far as the factory was concerned.

No Aid From Union.

At the union meeting the case was brought up and thru misunderstanding between the delegate representing the local union and the body as a whole, the case was settled very dishonestly.

Fortunately, the other man in question, together with the ex-"shop steward" are capable of securing a job elsewhere.

STEEL MILLS INSTALL NEW SKILL KILLERS

Wage Cuts Loom; Men Bought Like Cattle

By THOMAS.

(Worker-Correspondent.)

PITTSBURGH, Pa., July 28.—While at the present time actual mill work is almost dead in the Homestead Steel works there is great activity in the repair sections. Old buildings are being torn down and replaced with new buildings, more modern and twice the size of the old ones. They have torn down two big machine shops and replaced them with one big shop with all the latest modern machinery which is claimed can be worked by unskilled laborers.

New machinery is installed in the rolling mills which will do away with practically all the men who are now straightening rails and changing the course of the steel from one roll to another. A new modern boiler house has been erected which will do away with fifty men.

Skill Useless, Job Gone, Wage Cut Coming.

At the same time all this work is being done, runners are being circulated that the mills are not paying their way, that wages are too high, also that there is too much competion from foreign countries.

The old, old story, but it is being circulated in all the "safety" meetings, and the workers should take it as a warning of something to come—which means there is going to be an attack on wages around this section soon.

I have something to say about the employment office. Having occasion to seek a new position as a laborer I visited the Homestead plant of the Carnegie Steel Company.

There were about two hundred seated around the benches when the chief labor foreman walks in, orders all men to stand up, he then walks around looks at every man, the same as a farmer would when he buys a horse or a cow, and finally picked on one big husky fellow. He then tells the others that one is all he needs today.

Bought Like Cattle.

It is time the workers organized to stop all this degredation of having to be picked and selected as tho they were animals. Let us workers of the steel industry again organize and become the fighting force we were a few years ago.

There is a very favorable sentiment for a union around here, but the leaders of the present union do not try to organize, they do not even put out leaflets. If something was done to try and organize I think the mass of workers would follow.

Strike Vote Wins Arbitration Issue Against Boston "L"

BOSTON, Mass., July 28.—As the result of the overwhelming strike vote of the employes of the Boston elevated system the company officials have yielded the point the men demanded and agreed to arbitrate the wages dispute according to the system prevailing for 14 years. Judge Nelson P. Brown has been chosen as third arbitrator by James H. Vahey, union representative and Roland W. Boyden of the Boston Elevated Co.

The distinctive feature of the old arbitration method, retained by the company's back-down, is that the representatives of each side are chosen directly by their respective bodies. The company had demanded a less representative system whereby the union's spokesman would be selected by the company from a list of five men nominated by the union, and vica versa. Until the strike vote the company stood pat and the state government was indifferent. After the strike vote the company spoke vaguely against compromise at first, but Governor Fuller became interested, admitted that the men were technically correct on the arbitration point, tho attempting to prejudice public opinion against their declaration for more wages.

The union demands wages be raised from 72 cents to 95 cents an hour; the company calling for a 7 cent per hour cut.

Trade Unions of Sweden Increase Membership 47,315

WASHINGTON, July 28.—According to a consular report just received at the end of 1924 the 34 unions affiliated with the Federation of Trade Union of Sweden had a combined membership of 360,337 compared with 312,022 at the end of the preceding year, an increase of 47,315 or 15.1 per cent Of the 34 unions 31 showed an increase and three a decrease.

The unions affiliated with the Federation of Trade Unions of Finland had a combined membership of 47,312 at the end of 1924, an increase of 695 during the year.

ANTHRACITE MINE EMPLOYMENT CUT 72 PER CENT IN ONE YEAR; SPEEDED MEN MAKE BARE LIVING

WASHINGTON, July 28- -The total number of wage earners in the 56 collieries of the Pennsylvania anthracite mine fields in October and November, 1914, was only 44,500 as compared with 157,743 in the same period of 1923. In other words there has been a reduction of 72 per cent of the number of workers in the anthracite mines in one year.

These and other startling figures are in a report on wages, hours, earnings and working conditions in the anthracite industry made by the bureau of labor statistics and published in the Monthly Labor Review that has just been issued.

Statistics Conceal Deductions.

These statistics show that contract miners averaged only 10.8 days work in a half month period and earned $1.20 an hour for the actual time they spent in the mine or $143 for the time spent at the face. This is an increase of about $1.50 a day over 1922, with which year the comparisons are made in the report.

There were slight increases also in the pay of company miners and other classes of employes. But the miner's wage given above, is reduced by the charges for powder, fuses, caps, tools, hospital fee and rent deducted by the companies.

"The increase in average earnings," says the report, "is due in part to the September, 1923 increase of 10 per cent in wage rates, and in part apparently, as is usually the case with tonnage or piece workers, when the opportunity for work is less, to speeding up in 1924, resulting in greater production per man per hour than in 1922, and also to the inclusion of data for employes of 31 collieries in 1924 that were not included in the 1922 study.

"Company miners who are paid by the hour worked five-tenths of a day less, but 16 hours more, than contract miners and their half monthly pay checks averaged about $30 less than the contract miners. So with the consideration miners, they worked about 16 hours longer, but at the end of two weeks received nearly $20 less.

The report shows 34,111 underground employes and 16,380 surface employes, and of the former, 11,778 were contract miners, 961 consideration miners and 1735 company miners.

Report Slides Over Explosive Charges

Concerning the contract miners the report says: "Based on time at the face, 23 per cent earned less than $1 an hour, but based on time in the colliery, 33 per cent earned less than $1 per hour." Based on the same formula, the report shows that 99 per cent earned less than $3 an hour. By far the largest number of contract miner's laborers averaged between 80 cents and $1 an hour. The cost of explosives and other labor are paid from the miners' gross earnings, the report says, but it makes no attempt to compare those expenses in 1924 with previous years.

SURVEY SHOWS PART TIME WORK IN MANY PLANTS

Employment in the Coal Mines Shows Decrease

WASHINGTON—(FP)—An analysis of industrial employment during the month of June that has just been made by the United States employment service discloses part-time operations in many plants. The heat wave that swept the country is said to have been one of the contributing causes as well as the fact that at the end of June in many industries a few days to two weeks are set aside for inventory and repairs to plant, causing a curtailment of the operating force.

The major indusries reporting part-time operations and slightly curtailed employment during the past month were the textile mills which showed reduced working forces as compared with May; shoe factories in the New England states; and steel plants. Employment in the coal mines, except in West Virginia, showed a further decrease in June.

Road construction is increasing and large building operations and municipal improvements are under way. The feature of the month, according to the analysis was the increased demand for farm help.

Textile Mills Slow Up.

At the same time the department of agriculture issues a survey of farm population which shows that on January 1, 1925, there were approximately 109,000 fewer hired farm laborers than on January 1, 1924. On January 1, 1924 there were 3,194,000 farm laborers and on the same date in 1925 there were 2,085,000.

More to and From Farms.

These figures apply to farm laborers who reside on farms at least 30 days. They do not take into account the casual farm laborers. The movement of laborers from farms to cities in 1924 is estimated to have been 461,000, while the movement in the opposite direction is estimated at 352,000.

Of the gross movement from farm to city 22.2 per cent were laborers and of the gross movement in the other direction 25.2 per cent were hired laborers.

SMALL CROWD TO HEAR BIG FAKER BLOW HIS HORN

By Helm Voll, Worker Correspondent.

LOS ANGELES, Cal. July 18. —(By Mail)—The meeting of Carpenters' Local 426, on July 17, was not well attended. Whether this was due to the hot weather, the mass meeting at Music-Arts Hall, or the fact John Horn, retiring secretary of the Central Labor Council, and now a member of the board of public works, was scheduled to speak, I am unable to say.

Horn began his talk by saying he was now granted the opportunity he had sought while the political campaign was on. "Time healed many wounds." He said he bought the Times every Sunday and in one issue were figures to show the union membership had decreased. Those figures he had found were of 1923 and not 1925. The membership had constantly increased, he said, and there were now fully 50,000 trade unionists in Los Angeles.

After he left a motion was passed to find out on what terms we could reaffiliate with the C. L. C.

The Main Objection

The principal objection to reaffiliating with the C. L. C., was, that it did not live up to the constitution of the A. F. of L. which says in effect that number of delegates shall be based upon membership, instead of not more than 3 delegates from each local, as is the rule in the C. L. C. This is detrimental to the best interests of the carpenters who have the largest membership.

Another thing called attention to, was that the local had $2,000 invested in the Labor Press, the rival of the Citizen, organ of the C. L. C. Some kind of agreement should be made, it was pointed out, to protect the union against a financial loss.

GIBSON PICKETS BRING ACTION AGAINST FINK

Union machinists striking against wage cuts and the 9-hour day at the Gibson Spring Co. plant are on the trail of undercover men in the Chicago local who are trying to sap strike morale.

Business Agent J. J. Uhlman is bringing charges against Michael Ward before the union trial board and will ask for expulsion and a $1,000 fine. Ward's alleged stunt was in pretending to be strong for the union but saying that it was no use holding out against the company which is a new adherent of the open shop Natl. Metal Trades Assn.

IMPORTANCE OF WOMEN GROWING IN INDUSTRIES

Wages Received by Them Are Pretty Low

By LELAND OLDS.

(Federated Press Industrial Editor)

Growing importance of women in the trade union movement is emphasized in a New York department of labor report on wages and hours of organized women in the state. The report is based on an investigation covering 30,803 women members of trade unions in 11 cities.

The highest union wages paid to women were for machine operators and proofreaders in the newspaper printing industry in New York City. Day jobs paid $60 and night work $65 for a 45-hour week.

The lowest rate shown is for waitresses in Schenectady amounting to $10 a week, supplemented by meals and some tips. Other low rates are $13 a week paid joggers in the book and job printing trade of Elmira; $14 to hand sewers and pasters of leather pocketbooks in New York City and $15 a week to embroidery shuttlers in the women's garment industry of New York City.

The highest and lowest full-time union weekly wages paid women are shown by industries as follows:

N. Y. Union Women Workers	Highest	Lowest	Hours per Wk.
Garment	$55.00	$15.00	44
Hats and caps	50.00	27.00	44
Fur and leather	35.00	14.00	44
Metal trades	19.20	16.50	48
Book printing	53.00	13.00	44
Newspaper	60.00	43.00	48
Knit goods	30.00	16.56	44
Silk	39.60	12.56	44
Theaters	54.50	16.00	—
Upholstery	36.75	32.00	44
Hotels, restaurants	20.00*	10.00*	54

*plus meals and tips

Practically all industries paying union wages to women pay for regular overtime at time and one-half rates. Makers of children's dresses, bathrobes and housedresses in New York City get doubletime for all overtime as do women in union upholstery firms. In Rochester waitresses get approximately doubletime for all overtime. In Schenectady they get only straight time for extra hours.

In the women's garment and hat and cap industries no Sunday or holiday work is permitted. Elsewhere the overtime rate is generally doubletime.

For the same industry the rates are much lower in the smaller cities than in New York City. Thus bindery women get from $25.50 to $40 a week in the union shops of New York City, compared with $21 in Albany, $18.50 in Buffalo, $13 to $18.50 in Elmira and $20 in Niagara Falls and Rochester. Gold layers get $27.50 in New York City and $21 in Albany. Platen press feeders in book and job printing get $29 in New York, $16 in Buffalo, $22 in Rochester and in Syracuse. Finishers in knit goods mills get $22.50 in New York and $16.50 outside.

The rates shown are for work paid on an hourly basis. Combining all cities it was found that 14 per cent of the women worked piecework and the remainder timework. Piecework predominates in the upstate cities.

LOST! $2,000,000 IN CUSTODY OF FRANK FARRINGTON! FINDER RETURN TO ILLINOIS MINERS

By ALEX REID

(Secretary of the Progressive Miners' Committee)

(Article V.)

Everyone in the miners' union remembers the $2,000,000 assessment for our brothers in the Herrin strip-mine case, where our brothers were on trial for their lives, against organized capital. Every miner gave cheerfully all he could and many gave who could not afford to give, but they were willing to suffer deprivation for the defense of the Herrin heroes, that the position of the Illinois miners once and for all would be made clear to the world, that the Illinois miners would not permit their union to be wrecked by any organization of capital, or any other kind, irrespective of the consequences to themselves.

Hiding in Springfield.

When the men of Herrin and surrounding country were lined up in that bitter struggle to protect their jobs, to feed their wives and families, was Frank Farrington down there as their leader, and adviser?

No. Nothing of the kind! That kind of work is far too dangerous for the Illinois faker, he was sitting in his expensive quarters in Springfield far away from the turmoil and strife, like the "good leader" he is—not!

The coal diggers, in spite of the coward, finally won their battle, both at the bloody strip-mine, and in the capitalist court. When the smoke of the battle had cleared away and "peace" reigned in that community, the miners began to wonder where the two million dollars went that Frank had collected for the strip-mine case. It had disappeared entirely, gobbled up, without any trace or discovery since by the rank and file of the Illinois miners.

Spurns Demand for Accounting.

The outraged coal diggers demanded to have an accounting, but Frank has consistently refused to do so, and no doubt will continue to deny that accounting until the progressive miners of the state force him to open up the books. While it may be true that publication of some expenses may not be wise policy, yet out of the $2,000,000 the miners were assessed, we were supposed to buy the Herrin strip-mine, but there is a standing reward to anyone who can discover any trace of the title deeds to that property. Many are asking, "If the mine belonged to us, why is there no account shown from it in the financial reports of the miners' union, as it is one of the few mines working in the state at the present time? And why is no mention made of the mine in the last financial report? Even the name is gone now from the records.

Another $100,000 Gone.

Since that time Farrington's office has loaned another $100,000 of the miners' money to the Lester strip-mine, and the miners are now asking who the hell owns this strip-mine anyway?

The correspondence between John L. Lewis and Frank Farrington in connection with the strip-mine, commencing tomorrow, will be an eye opener to those who have still any faith left in the union fakers. Keep your eye open for tomorrow's issue of the DAILY WORKER.

RAIL UNIONS OF INDIA BATTLE OPEN SHOP OF BRITISH RULERS; ASK AID AGAINST PERSECUTION

By ART SHIELDS.

(Federated Press Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK, July 28.—Sixty thousand railroad workers of northwestern India who have been battling four months against the North Western Railroad Co. that operates over a 1,200 mile territory from the Punjab to Bengal are appealing to the American labor movement to help them carry on the fight that means the life or death of their organization.

The appeal was transmitted by M. A. Kahn, general secretary of the northwestern railmen, to his fellow countryman, Sailendra Ghose, secretary of the Friends of Freedom for India, with instructions to take what steps were necessary to put the case, with its desperate need, before the American labor unions at once, and Ghose says that a campaign will be gotten under way speedily.

Strike Against Open Shop.

Nothing so critical as the present strike has been seen in the rather brief history of the transport unions of India. Previous walkouts were smaller and more local in character. The strike started as a defensive measure when an organizer was discharged from a repair shop, and quickly spread over the territory.

A recital of conditions among Indian rail workers shows why they welcome organization. Hours are 12 per day for all the northwestern workers save some of the more highly skilled men and wages range from 8 annas—16 cents—to 3 ruppees—$1—per day. The lowest wages barely permit a worker to buy enough bread or rice for himself, on a slim ration basis, with nothing left over for family or extra personal expenses.

Political Persecution By British Government.

Not only are hours long and wages low but civil liberties appear to be at a lower minimum even than in the mining towns of West Virginia. Nationalist papers from India tell how the workers are housed in company huts and barracks within the railroad compounds under the tyrannical supervision of company police.

At present many of these miserable houses have been taken by a policy of evictions. Where the courts have not intervened the workers have been housed in hastily erected emergency homes on waste lands or lands loaned by sympathizers.

Fight to Finish.

The North Western Railroad is closely allied with the Imperial government which guarantees its five per cent dividends and is showing its sympathy with the employers by persecuting the strikers. An official government communique from Simla warns the public that the strike is a movement of illiterate workers and will be resisted by the government to the finish.

On the other hand, the All India Railwaymen Unions' Federation with which the Northwestern strikers are affiliated sends out a call for solidarity and support which follows, in part:

Indian Labor Calls for Aid.

"The workers must bear in mind that the troubles prevailing among the North Western Railway workers today may be their troubles tomorrow, as the flat denial of any sort of negotiation strikes at the very root of trade unionism in India"

"The conditions of strikers and their families may be better imagined than described. Seventy-five men have already been (June 23) hauled up and are being tried in Criminal Courts at Sukkur, about 35 men have been arrested at Lahore and about a dozen at Krrachi.

"They require proper legal defence, and their families, including many thousands, require immediately monetary help. Some of them are anxious to go home but are stranded for want of train fares.

"The public and all the Unions should at once contribute their mite to the All-India Railwaymen's Unions Federation at its office at No. 72, Canning Street, Calcutta."

TWO WORKERS, DEPORTED FROM MOROCCO, JAILED UPON ENTERING FRANCE

BORDEAUX, France, July 28.—Alfred Schmidt and Hermann Oescher, arrived here from Morocco, having been expelled by the French on the charge that they "were Communists". They were arrested and thrown into jail on their arrival.

LONDON, July 28—Miners from the collieries around Durhan mobbed Dr. Welldon, dean of Durhan Cathedral, because of their resentment of recent statements made by the churchman about the threatened coal strike.

SYNOPSIS—The preceeding instalments of the official report of the British Trade Union Delegation to Soviet Russia told how well the Soviet government treats its counter-revolutionary political prisoners, and described the Soviet form of government. The preface and introduction told of the extent of the travels of the seven members of the delegation, who, visited not only the industrial centers, but took extended trips thru the agricultural regions. The last two instalments took up the question of Soviet finances, which is being continued today. The instalments will appear in the DAILY WORKER every day.

The Budget of 1923-24 increased in its totals by half a milliard—an augmentation that can be compared with that of the Tsarist Budget of 20 years before, 1904, which was 2,738 million roubles, as compared with 2,235 million roubles in 1903. This increase in 1904 was the result of the Japanese War, but the augmentation in 1923-24 was partly the result of a return to normal conditions, partly of a revival of economic productivity. Thus the total of foreign trade rose in 1923-24 to half as much again; the internal trade total trebled; freights rose by half; the credit on free balance at the National Bank increased five times. The country consequently carried the increased burden without being checked in its growth.

Growth of Budget

It follows then that the Budgets are growing rapidly in their totals, and this process having now passed through the stage during which the Budget was restored to its normal form and function, a question may arise whether the growth is not greater than the growth of the national income justifies.

In comparing present with pre-war figures it must be remembered that the Empire included industrial districts of Poland and the Baltic States, from which large revenues were received. Various estimates calculate the national income at 50 pre-war roubles a head as compared with 101 pre-war roubles in 1913. This, with a population of 130 millions, gives 6.5 milliards, and a Budget of 1.4 milliards would, allowing for the difference in pre-war values, be equivalent to about 15 per cent. of the national income. This would not be an undue burden. Another estimate, that of Gosplan, puts the total of production in milliard roubles, as follows: 1913 at 18.2; 1922-23 at 10.7; 1923-24 at 12.1. On this basis the Budget revenues would be 18.9 per cent. of that value in 1913 and 13 per cent. in 1923-24. Another calculation shows that the increase of the Budget total by 200 millions had absorbed two-fifths of the increase of the national income. All this seems to compare well with pre-war conditions in Russia and present conditions abroad.

Budget Deficits

The progress made towards balancing the Budget may be summarized as follows:

In 1921 the deficit in proportion to the total revenues, both ordinary and extraordinary, was 86.9 per cent.; in 1921-22 it was 83.1 per cent.; in 1922-23 it was 40 per cent.; in 1923-24 it was 25.9 per cent.; and in 1924-25 it is estimated at less than 10 per cent. These figures show a remarkable financial recovery.

Ordinary and Extraordinary Budget

It will be observed that in the Budget for 1924-25 ordinary revenues cover ordinary expenditures, and there is on this basis no deficit at all. The extraordinar yexpenditure is represented by the financing of industry, agriculture, etc.—that is, investments by the State in State enterprises—and is covered by loans and profits on coinage (not on paper currency). This would seem to be business budgeting, provided the State enterprises are good investments for the national savings, as to which information will be found elsewhere.

Internal Loans

The substitution of credit operations for currency emissions as a means of balancing the Budget began in 1922-23. The first loans were for short terms and in kind—bread loans, sugar loans, etc. They were a transition from the levies in kind of War Communism to the long term money loans of today. The lists for the bread loans were closed early in 1924 and for the sugar loans soon after. These were followed by the First Lottery Loan to be taken up by workers and peasants, which produced some 48 millions, as much as then did all the taxes together, and of which about half was actually subscribed by wage-earners before the list was closed. At this time also a small floating debt arose from the renewal of short-term Treasury bills for the financing of the short-term Budgets.

The Budget of 1923-24 shows a deficit of 457 millions, which is covered to the amount of 195 millions, by currency emission, by 30 millions of foreign valuta, the proceeds of the sale of wheat, by 22 millions of sales of stores, and by 200 millions "credit operations."

The next series of loans were long-term loans floated in the course of 1924—the 8 per cent. Internal Gold Loan, the 6 per cent. Rural Lottery Loan, and the Second Lottery Loan, of which the first is to be taken up by industry and trade, the second by agriculture, the third by the well-to-do in the towns. The following figures show that the proportion of the 1923-24 deficit to be covered by credit operations—namely, 200 millions—had practically been provided by mid-summer, 1924. Since then the loans have been going off well, though it would be interesting to ascertain the proportions of purely voluntary subscriptions.

Accuracy of Accounts

The State accountancy of the Union is on a very different footing to what it was under War Communism and during the first transition years to the New conomy Policy. The first Budgets were merely approximations and had little relation to the results subsequently realised. Thus the revenues which in 1922, were estimated at 1,707 millions pre-war roubles produced 794 millions. But if the annexed Table II. of Budget estimates for 1923-24 be compared with Table III.—the realized revenues and expenditures—it will be found that the Budget figures do now represent the facts. For the purpose of obtaining this information, the Delegation's experts were given access to confidential data in the Commissariat of Finance as here reproduced, and these, like other data in this chapter, can be substantiated generally if required. Though it is not easy to verify all details in the present state of statistical development of the competent departments.

BRYAN PASSES SHORTLY AFTER 'MONKEY' TRIAL

Commoner's Last Fight Was with a Fly

William Jennings Bryan is dead. The man who has appeared oftener on the front page than any other political figure in this country's history, passed away at the home of a friend in Chattanooga, Tennessee, shortly after the Scopes trial, where Bryan led the forces of superstition against science.

Bryan't last spectacular appearance in public life was a fitting climax to a life spent in exceeding windy platitudes and making money. He was nicknamed the "Commoner" because he pretended to be the man "of the people," as most any successful demagogue in a capitalist country must.

Killed a Fly

According to reliable reports, the last act of Bryan before he passed away was to kill a lower form of life in the shape of a fly. To the end he was the bitter foe of anything that was not in the market for real estate.

Bryan being a famous man will be buried in the Arlington National Cemetery. Millionaire distillers and beer barons may visit his tomb and lay wreaths on his grave. This will be no more ironical than the life story of the man who claimed to have made sacrifices for the people.

Democratic leaders, while outwardly shedding tears over Bryan death, inwardly thank their stars. Lately Bryan has made a nuisance of himself with his religious bunk. The practical catholic section of the democratic party, prefers to worship their religion at a distance. They have a well developed contempt for religions that take to the vacant lot. They also know that the more it is talked about the less people believe in it. They were very angry with Bryan for waking the sleeping Darwinian bull pup.

Would Be Ape Trial

Had Bryan lived, the next convention of the democratic party would be divided between those who felt that they had a kindship with other forms of life and those that believed they came from the old reliable rib. By that time the K. K. K. would be either dead or in jail on a charge of disorderly conduct, and Bryan would get on the front page during the whole convention which might last until the next century.

Altogether, worse things could happen to the democratic party than Bryan's death. With a quarrel between Dawes and Coolidge looming, the democrats feel that a nomination for the presidency in 1928 will not be as much of an insult as it was in 1924.

Bryan was born in Salem, Illinois, in 1860. He was nominated for the presidency on the democratic ticket in 1896, after he delivered his famous "cross of gold" speech. He was nominated for the same office twice more but he never landed. The voters mistook eloquence for knowledge. They were afraid he was too intelligent. Had he waited until after the Scopes trial, he might have pulled thru.

Nominated Wilson

He nominated Wilson at the Baltimore convention in 1912 and served as secretary of state in Wilson's cabinet. He broke with Wilson over the submarine note to Germany. During late years he has devoted himself to the lucrative practice of selling real estate and defending the bible.

Bryan was very fond of money. He once figured in a case where he succeeded in inducing a wealthy old Nebraskan to leave him his fortune estimated at nearly half a million dollars. Bryan wrote the will, bequeathing the estate to himself leaving to the widow of the deceased with the proverbial dime, instead of the legal one third. His greed resulted in the supreme court leaving Bryan without a sou. Since then, Bryan went after the dough at Chautagua courses and in other ways. He died a rich man.

Lithuanian Women to Hold Convention in New York, Oct. 14

The Lithuanian Women's Progressive Alliance, an organization of Lithuanian working class women which carries on fraternal, benevolent, educational and similar activity, is to hold a national convention in New York City on October 14. At a district convention held in Carpenters Hall, Springfield, Ill., Nellie Malonius, an active member of the Young Workers League, was elected in a field of three candidates. Nell Katulis, of Chicago, reported the convention for the "Vilnis", organ of the Lithuanian Section of the Workers Party, and addressed the convention, telling about the work done by the organization in and around Chicago, where she is an active member.

George Starkevich, of Springfield, also spoke, bringing the greetings of the A. L. D. T. S., the "Lithuanian Literary Society", whose thousands of members have rendered valuable service in many working class campaigns.

WARNS CHINA AGAINST U. S. HYPOCRISY

Reports Russ Warning Against Trickery

SHANGHAI, China, July 28—The Chinese press reports the receipt of cables from Moscow, wherein prominent Communists warn China against the trickery of the imperialists and advise China against accepting the American program for a conference supposed to consider revision of the unequal treaties in accordance with the imperialists' agreement at the Washington conference.

The message warns China that if it accepts the American proposals it is certain to be enslaved many years and the hypocrisy of the American and other imperialist powers will be shown when once China binds herself to accept the proposal and the tide of Chinese liberation movement is allowed to die down.

China is warned that even the proposed conference to revise the customs to give China more funds, is undertaken only because the imperialists think these funds will be used by the present Peking government now evidently controlled by foreign imperialist influence, only to suppress the liberation movement. Only cancellation of the treaties and the drawing up of new ones on the basis of complete national sovereignty can be regarded as a solution, China is advised.

Confiscate Property But Are Not Accused of Being Bolsheviks

WASHINGTON, July 28—(FP)—A high powered automobile that has become identified with a well known Washington bootlegger, drew up today in front of the headquarters of the prohibition unit, and commissioner Haynes stepped out of it.

Many a time has that car been chased by federal prohibition agents over the roads or Maryland and Virginia. The last time that occurred, something went wrong with it and the car, its contents and driver were caught.

Now the prohibition commissioner has it under the ruling of the court that his unit may use captured cars. It is said that Commissioner Haynes has driven a different model car about every week since that ruling went into effect.

Who wouldn't be a prohibition commissioner?"

Not Sick, But Sore.

LEAVENWORTH, Kans., July 28—Reports in circulation in Kansas City today that Dr. Frederick A. Cook, notorious explorer serving a sentence here for oil frauds in Texas, was seriously ill, were emphatically denied by prison officials here this afternoon. Dr. Cook, they said, was up and doing his daily work as usual. It is reported however, that the doc does not think it fair to have him in jail while A. B. Fall is at large.

Neutral Observer Sees Shanghai Strike

city under Chinese government, the French settlement governed by them, and the International Settlement governed by a municipal council, composed of six British, two Americans and one Japanese. One of the Americans is chairman.

The strike is confined to the International Settlement because its police did the shooting, and to British and Japanese ships because the British are the largest and dominant element in the International Settlement and a British officer ordered the police to fire. Also it was the killing of a Chinese laborer in a Japanese mill that led students to make the speeches which caused the crowd to gather on the day of the shooting.

A Political General Strike.

The labor men of Shanghai are anxious to have the workers of the United States understand that this is not a fight between capital and labor but a patriotic movement, in which Chinese capital and labor are for the time being united for certain common purposes. It is a general strike, mainly for political ends. It is a protest against foreign injustice and oppression and an attempt to get justice and freedom.

The strike is conducted by the Amalgamated Union of Commerce, Labor and Education. The constituent bodies are the Federation of street Unions composed of some 10,000 small shopkeepers organized by streets; the General Labor Union of Shanghai, a federated body representing about 180,000 workers, about 92 per cent of whom are in the International settlement; the Shanghai Students' Union; the Chinese Students' Union, a national body. Each of these four organizations sends six delegates to a central executive committee which makes the general policy of the strike, but each of them is then responsible for conducting its own part of the undertaking.

The students are the active propaganda force. They brought the merchants in to begin with and they kept them from quitting at the end of the third week. They stopped all classes but insisted on staying in the colleges and schools, as their food had been paid for. They spend their time getting out printed matter, making speeches and collecting funds.

The Role of the Unions.

The labor unions have the most difficult and vital part of the job. Eighty per cent of their membership has joined since the strike began. But they expect to hold most of them afterwards unless extraordinary repression is adopted. Running a strike in Shanghai is about as difficult an undertaking as in West Virginia or Pennsylvania. No processions allowed, nor any meetings, not even on private property. Martial law is in force so that the Amalgamated Union Daily, which since the strike has replaced the Shanghai Workers Weekly, has to be printed in the Chinese city and can be circulated in the Settlement only secretly.

Nevertheless the workers have made the strike effective enough to compel the discussion of demands which would otherwise have been completely rejected and to lead international authorities to admit that they are keeping marines on shore duty not merely to protect life and property, but to break the strike—if they can. Strike leaders claim the following degree of success: Public utilities 50 per cent out, but not 50 per cent effective because the remaining workers are kept on duty by armed guards; street transportation 70 per cent out and effective; shipping (British and Japanese) 80 per cent; household servants 50 per cent; factories 95 per cent.

Terms of Settlement—and a Bill of Rights.

When the delegates of the Chinese government came to Shanghai to investigate and negotiate with representatives of the foreign powers, the Amalgamated executive committee submitted to them four conditions upon which the strike would be called off: rescinding martial law; withdrawal of foreign forces and disarmament of volunteers and police; release of all Chinese now in custody, restoration of schools and colleges, now closed as Bolshevik centers and occupied by American marines. They added a bill of rights with 13 demands, as the basis of negotiations after the strike was settled.

These had to do with puishment, compensation, apology; rights of free speech and press, of organization and strike; labor regulations; Chinese representation in the government (they pay 80 per cent of the taxes) and in the high police offices; dropping certain proposed objectionable ordinances and stopping extension of roads into Chinese territory; permanent withdrawal of British and Japanese naval forces from the river; return of the mixed court in which Chinese are tried to its original form of a real joint court; and the abolition of extraterritoriality.

Chamber of Commerce Wavers.

The Shanghai chamber of commerce, composed of the big merchants and bankers, which did not enter the Amalgamated Unions, but did join the strike, had first submitted 13 demands which were supposed to represent all. But it turned out that they had changed some of the points.

They had dropped one or two demands dealing with international relations as being against the original treaties, and most significant of all they had omitted "the right to organize and to strike." Hence the students and workers acted again separately and carried the small shopkeepers with them. Here is the future line of cleavage when this fight against foreign control is over.

Merchants Lose Money—Wait to Quit.

The chamber of commerce announced the end of the merchant part of the strike at the end of the third week but had to withdraw it because the students and workers carried the street unions of shopkeepers and had public opinion with them.

The shops are putting up banners inscribed: "We must sleep on straw and live on bile so that we shall not forget this disgrace." The merchants have lost close to $1,000,000 net profit to date. This is a Chinese tactic of sympathy and sacrifice without corresponding inconvenience to their opponents.

Will Merchants Hold Out?

Now the chamber of commerce crowd want to switch to a concentrated tieup of British and Japanese shipping and a boycott of their goods. The latter is hard because it involves stocks now on hand. The shippng queston is easier because the Seamen's Union are good fighters. They brought the British to terms before in Hongkong to a degree without parallel since the Boston tea party and its results.

Now in Shanghai they have refused to accept strike funds supplied by public contribution. They say, "We have our savings. We can live on them for a while. Give money to the workers who haven't anything." The question is whether when the merchants re-open they will provide the funds for a sustained shipping strike and go thru with the economic boycott.

Split on Class Lines.

The tendency of the merchants is to bargain on the demands, seeking to get the vital points of their class interest, which are representation in the municipal council and joint control of the mixed court. It will take the students, of whose tongues and pens the merchants are afraid, to keep the workers from being sacrificed. Their leaders point out that this is a movement for the national emancipation of labor, to secure the right to free speech, the right to organize and bargain collectively.

For them this is the first vital point in the demands. Next they put the abolition of extra-territoriality, that is, the right of foreigners on Chinese soil to be exempt from the control of the Chinese government. After that they want the withdrawal of foreign forces forever—no more foreign gunboats stationed at Shanghai. The announced platform of their daily paper is: To oppose foreign oppression; to struggle for the national independence and liberty of China; to abrogate all unequal treaties; to restore to China all territory leased as settlements; to demand the withdrawal of foreign soldiers from China.

Appeals to American Labor.

The secretary of the strike committee sends this message to the workers of the United States in the name of the laborers of Shanghai:

"We are longing for help from the workers of the world, especially America and other similar countries. We want you to say something against the forces that are doing us injustice. We want you to speak out and say that such things should not be done to the workers of China or of any other place. We want you to understand two points. First, we have no right to organize and to bargain collectively and no freedom of speech. Second, this movement to improve our condition of labor. It is not anti-foreign nor Bolshevik. It is labor for labor's sake.

"We want you to know the conditions in our shops. The working hours in mills and factories average over 12 a day. The wages average about $10 a month. (1 Chinese dollar, 50c). The lowest is 15 cents and the highest is $1 a day. The equipment for sanitation in our factories is so poor that the death rate is correspondingly high. The workers in our mills are very roughly treated.

"Under such conditions we naturally expect sympathy from the workers of other lands, especially from America. But now you even united against us with the other powers, sending your forces to suppress us."

CALIFORNIA HAS GOOD HANDS OFF CHINA MEETINGS

PALO ALTO, Cal., July 28.—The meeting here for "Hands Off China" drew a good crowd, including some prominent residents, who were greatly horrified by the revelation of the terrible conditions of child labor in Shanghi. Good advance notices of the meeting had been obtained in the press, which also gave a fair review of the address, that is, as fair as can be expected for they twisted the speaker's reference to the projected now Washington conference as an endorsement, whereas it was just the opposite.

SAN JOSE, July 28.—This is one of the "deadest" cities of the state so far as working class activity is concerned. Yet it was possible to get a small group together to protest against the interference of this country in the affairs of China. DAILY WORKERS and Workers Monthlies were sold and the ground laid for future activity.

U. S. Flag Made in Japan.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 28.—A local policeman tried to pull Tom Lewis off the soap box last Saturday night for not having an American flag as required by the ordinance. He was considerably taken back when Lewis drew out of his pocket such a flag and announced to the crowd that it was "Made in Japan". The meeting thereafter proceeded without further interference.

BERKELEY, July 28.—The demand that this country keep its hands out of the Chinese embroglio was raised beside the sacred portals of the University of California by Comrade Dolsen at Sather Gate in the first open-air meeting held in this city for the Chinese workers. The secretary of the Unionist Guild, W. Jowett, also spoke.

OAKLAND, July 28.—In Oakland a move was made by C. C. C. to organize a class of young speakers. A committee of one from each branch was elected to have charge of street meetings, Sunday evening hall meetings, which it is proposed to start, and the class work, under general supervision of the Educational Director, Vivian Wilkinson, Comrades Lewis and Dolson will train the class. Successful meetings continue at 10th and Broadway on Tuesday nights. It is intended to add other nights each week for the practice of the class and the scale of the DAILY WORKER.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 28.—The San Francisco C. C. C. conducted the dance at 225 Valencia tonight and attracted a big crowd of both young and old. Discipline and duty were temporarily forgotten in the dizzy whirl to Frankl's union orchestra music. The Young Workers League give a dance August 1.

BUILDERS AT WORK

The British Report Is Becoming Unanimous

Everybody's Doing It.

The Report of the British Trade Union Delegation to Soviet Russia, now being published serially in the DAILY WORKER, created a great stir in the world trade union movement. And every day more favorable reports are coming from labor bodies.

The official women's delegation of the British Trade unions has just returned making a most favorable report on Soviet Russia, calling for world trade union unity.

And now comes news that a Franco-Belgian delegation has also returned from a trip of investigation thruout Soviet Russia, with a most favorable report. This report, like the British one is soon to be published.

Above all this, the visit of Purcell to this country as a delegate to the American Federation of Labor Convention is going to stir American labor on the question of World Trade Union Unity and recognition of Soviet Russia.

Now Is the Time!

Never was there such a good time as the present to talk to the workers in your shop and local trade union on this question.

That you will get subscriptions to the DAILY WORKER we take for granted. That's the job of a Communist at all times. But now also is the time to get a bundle of the DAILY WORKER everytime you go to your union meeting. Now is the time to take a pocketful of copies of the DAILY WORKER to the shop. Let the workers see the truth about a workers government as written by an official body of British Labor.

Rush your order in today, tell us how many copies you want and on what days of the week you want them. This is a fine building job for a Communist Builder.

Our Readers' Views

A Good Word for Our Daily.

To the DAILY WORKER: Permit me to say a good word for your paper. To come home in the evening after several hours a day in the service of upper-crust capitalists it is a refreshing experience to glance over the DAILY WORKER, chase thru "As We See It", the editorials, special editorials and features.

What a contract to Brisbane's fake pro-labor sop, columns upon columns of rot devoted to crimes, legs and cheap graft squabbles, day in and day out.

And as for our dear liberals, in the face of potential Communism they hang between heaven and hell.

Keep hammering to the line as you have been doing.

LAND SHARKS OF CALIFORNIA GET HEARST AID

Publisher Has Some Land Himself

By FRAPEIESA.

LOS ANGELES, July 28. — Hearst papers everywhere are making the most of the "California earthquake" letter of their proprietor to Sir Joseph Duveen. The contents of the missive are clearly intended to deceive Easterners for the profit of boosters in this state. They minimize effects of the earthquake with great unction.

A Great Estate.

Some two years ago Hearst completed purchase of an estate near Santa Barbara. In Sir Joseph Duveen's England that domain would be such as a duke might possess with pride.

Hearst's acquisition followed the dashing of his dream of founding a line of landed aristocrats on his Babicora ranch in Mexico. The new constitution of the southern republic requires that that holding be subdivided for distribution among the Mexicans.

So, the newspaper magnate, convinced that California offers the best inducements to America's coming nobility, has settled in this state. His dukedom makes him a neighbor of the select hundred whose sway there is none to dispute in this section.

Valued Aid.

Since the earthquake shook down Santa Barbara, Hearst observed the desperate efforts of Southern California boom promoters to stem the slump. Realizing that, being slavebonded to the bankers and their pals, this state depends on a constant inflow of Eastern capital and workers to avoid panic, he decided to contribute his mite of matter-of-fact bunk to the general fund.

Hundreds of letters, telegrams, etc., have been received by Hearst from fellow boomsters "congratulating him on his fair and frank letter which is expected to result in untold value to the state."

Some Bunk.

There is enough bunk in half of one paragraph in the letter to discredit the entire 1200 words of boost, to-wit: "Santa Barbara itself is near an earthquake fault. It is a small town of 30,000 inhabitants. Most of the buildings that collapsed were of the flimsy, seaside resort character. Twelve people were killed."

This would lead Easterners to believe that the earthquake fault is confined to Santa Barbara whereas the entire coast of California from San Diego to Eureka is just a subject to earthquakes as Santa Barbara. The entire Coast Range escarpment is an earthquake fault, a term which, as used by Hearst, would suit a California real estate agent very well for purposes of deception.

Some of the buildings demolished or so seriously damaged that they must be rebuilt were the most modern in the United States, especially the hotels, offices, etc. There was not a hotel or other important business structure that was not damaged beyond repair.

Few Deaths.

The reason why great mortality did not result from the schocks at Santa Barbara and San Francisco (19 years ago) was not given by Hearst, but here it is: In the former the earthquake occurred at 6:30 a. m. and in the latter at 5:50 a. m. Luckily few persons were on the streets at the time. If the disasters had occurred during business hours there would have been many more deaths.

Hearst regrets that there were any deaths. But why? His paper, the Los Angeles Examiner, gives Aimee MacPherson, the holy lady who operates the Angelus Temple in this city, unstinted free advertisement. As a healer of souls and bodies she should have been called to Santa Barbara to call the 12 dead back to life. That is strictly in her line. And then there would be no regrets whatever to express. All the boomsters could howl in unison and draw the coveted Easterners to Southern California and get their money.

USSR to Open New Air Line in Siberia Soon

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 28.—Preparations are under way for the opening of a new Yakutsk-Irkutsk air line in Siberia, 1,770 miles, which will connect the Lena and Aldan gold fields with the Siberian railway at Irkutsk.

The three lines which were organized in the volunteer air fleet in 1923 now maintain regular communications between points on the trans-Siberian railway and remote republics in central Asia. During the first five months of the year 558 passengers were carried and the total air mileage was 84,686.

The volunteer fleet has been successful in cleaning out agricultural pests. Detachments of planes fly over infested districts spraying the insects with poison. Recently one detachment cleaned up a plague of locusts in the valley of the River Kuma, in the Caucasus.

These Are Plain Words

The "Daily Metal Trades" published in Cleveland, Ohio, does not like the idea of employers regarding themselves to the extent of conferring with leaders of organized labor on matters affecting the running of their business. Why cannot employers recognize the fact that their business is for them to do with as they see fit, and hire or fire any worker they see fit, squawks this infuriated editor.

The wrath of the metal trades organ was aroused over an invitation extended to John L. Lewis by certain bituminous operators to sit in on a conference where difficulties other than wages questions would be ironed out. The operators knew what they were doing, and a less brainless tool of the employers than the editor who wrote the editorial spasm would agree that Lewis would not do the operators any harm.

What this editor has to say about union labor, however, expressed the iews of the leading capitalists of the country. It is, that the unions must be destroyed. After telling of the progress of the open shop in the mining fields of West Va., Kentucky, parts of Ohio and Pennsylvania he writes:

"The oldtime methods of 'closed door' negotiations are looked on askance, in dickering with labor unions, in these days of plain talk... Hundreds of coal mines are being operated successfully and profitably in the United States on an open shop basis."

That editorial was written in the city where a decision of the supreme court makes the union illegal in a public service corporation, such as a streetcar line. No doubt judges can be found to make similar decision with regard to the basic industry like the mining industry. The capitalists are out to smash the trade unions, weak tho they are now thru the negligence, inefficiency and treachery of the reactionaries. The employers are using every method they can avail themselves of for this purpose. They are rapidly destroying the miners union, thru development of the scab fields.

The operators are not afraid of Lewis. As long as he permits them to dig non-union coal in Kentucky, West Va. and other open shop regions, why should they not tickle his vanity by letting him in on their harmless confab? The only way the deterioration of trades unionism can be stopped is by action of the rank and file for the purpose of getting control of the unions, giving them a progressive program, to fight the bosses and to break loose from the policy of cooperation with the employers which is fast turning the unions into auxiliaries of the companies. The company union differs only in name from labor organizations that follow the policy of collaborating with the boss in the runing of industry. As usual the boss gets all the increased profits that flows from the speeding up, that this system introduces, while the workers get nothing but compliments.

The function of trades unionism is to fight the employers. When it drops that function, it has no excuse for existence. But trades unionism will not down. The workers will have their unions, and bigger and beter unions than now, despite the opposition of the employing class and the treachery of fake leaders.

William J. Bryan

The passing of William Jennings Bryan has unloosed a flood of eulogistic piffle which is usually the last resort of the capitalist babbitry whenever a goodly member of their company passes on to the happy hunting grounds. Bryan being a front page proposition during his political career, it is only proper that he should encumber it for two or three days after his death and give some usually ignored politicians the opportunity to slip by the city editors.

Of Bryan nothing much can be said except that he could deliver a speech well. The text was not of much consequence. It is doubtful if he ever developed a new idea or made an improvement on an old one. He did little to direct the current of American development. But he was an attractive fly on the wheel of American capitalist progress and sometimes like LaFollette, he tried to put on the brakes.

Bryan was the voice crying in the wilderness peopled by classes that are in trouble, but don't know exactly what is the matter with them. The big capitalist treat them rough. And they found in the democratic party for a while, the political arm that represented them in their struggle against the big fellows. From this section has come the assortment political nostrums represented by green backery, free silver, knownothingism, A. P. A.-ism and later still by ku kluxism. Bryan was on hand to lend his tongue to all those quack remedies.

Lately the democratic party has been crumbling. The big capitalists have gobbled up the north-eastern wing of it and the southern section took to religion and moonshine, having put over prohibition. Bryan became the philosopher of this latest stage in the degradation of the southern middle classes. He made a gospel out of their disease and appeared in the role of medicine man. It is quite likely that he was never happier than about the time death called him away from his business.

Within a year three notable figures whom the working class of this country can well afford to lose have passed out of the picture. They are: Samuel Gompers, Robert M. LaFollette and William Jennings Bryan.

When Great Men Die

When great men die, things go on very much as usual. This is what happened on the stock market the day after William Jennings Bryan breathed his last:

> "Stocks of the motor, mercantile and specialties companies led an aggressive rally near the close. Sears Roebuck, Montgomery Ward and many department stores continued their spectacular upward movement. Coca Cola made a new high at 135. International Harvester sold up 3 points at 120. Marland Oil broke thru its 1925 high record and sold up to 46½."

But, watch out for some flopping on the stock exchange if the anthracite miners in Pennsylvania go on strike. The moral is, that the wheels of industry don't stop moving when parasites return to the dust. But when workers refuse to work they do stop.

Victor Berger says there is no instance in history of a genius rtansmitting that gift to his progeny. Arthur Brisbane who believes his own father was a wizard, disagrees. We are inclined to believe that Victor's father was a genius and that Victor is nearer the truth than Arthur.

The Industrial Work of the Party

(a) Bringing the Membership into the Union.

The Party shall require all its proletarian members to join trade unions, using the sharpest disciplinary measures, if necessary, to bring this about. To facilitate this there shall be in each nucleus, branch, C. C. C., D. E. C., and other Party units specific comrades charged with the responsibility of supervising the trade union work of the Party in their respective spheres.

(b) Party Trade Union Fractions. While building and strengthening the unions, educating the rank and file, fighting the corrupt bureaucracy and the employers, the Communists must not fail to thoroly organize themselves to secure leadership over the trade union masses. This is to be accomplished thru Party fractions. At present the fractions in the trade unions are weak and inadequate. The Party must devote major attention to their extension and strengthening. The District Organizers shall be held directly responsible, in conjunction with the Industrial Department, for the building of the trade union fractions in the various industrial centers and unions.

(c) Trade Union Educational League. All units of the Workers Party shall give active support to the Trade Union Educational League, which unites the various elements comprising the left wing into a movement against the reactionaries in the unions and to transform the trade unions into organs of revolutionary struggle against the capitalist class. In the various localities where the party has local organizations, these shall be held responsible for the building up and maintenance of local groups of the league. The members of the party who are also members of trade unions shall be required to take an active part in the league, and to subscribe to the class struggle propaganda fund, which will be initiated by the league. Wherever groups exist the party fractions shall function within them as distinct organizations. Party members of the league shall resist the tendency, which arises from the pressure of the reactionaries and from the failure of some of our membership to distinguish between fraction and T. U. E. L. groups, to restrict the T. U. E. L. simply to Communists. Efforts must be made to extend and to bring non-party elements into the league and to broaden its field of activity. The party units must give active support to the coming national conference of the T. U. E. L. and strive to make it a real representative gathering of the left wing. Efforts shall be made to give the league more of a mass character and a definite organizational form by building up the body of subscribers to the class struggle propaganda fund and by the establishment of various forms of left wing trade union united front committees which are brought into the closest possible connection with the league.

(d) Stimulation and Support of the Progressive Bloc. The party must stimulate the development and support the unification of a progressive bloc in opposition to the reactionary bureaucrats. For this we must apply the principles of the united front. Every struggle of the workers either against the employers directly or against the bureaucrats, as well as all the vital issues of the left wing program, shall be utilized for the development of such united fronts against the reactionaries. Trade union elections shall be utilized to this end. There is a growing tendency for so-called progressive elements to develop opposition to the reactionary trade union bureaucrats and to put up condidates against them in the union elections. This tendency must be stimulated and developed by the Workers Party as one means of bringing masses of workers under its direct influence. In union elections, whether in local unions, central labor councils, or international unions, the Communists, where not strong enough to win with their own candidates, shall combine with the "progressives" and support joint candidatse upon a united front basis. The foundation for these united fronts in union elections shall be agreed upon minimum program covering the more pressing problems, economic and political, confronting the unions. In such united fronts, however, the Communists shall run as Communists, and shall make this clear by special statements to the union membership outlining the party trade union program. The danger shall be carefully guarded against of allowing these united front movement to degenerate into opportunistic scrambles for office. An especially potent slogan for the building of a progressive bloc is the demand for world trade union unity, a slogan which has served as a strong rallying cry for all the progressive and revolutionary elements in the British trade union movement. Efforts must be made to link up the struggle of the progressive wing of the British movement with that of a progressive trade union bloc in this country in a general demand for world unity as proposed by the Comintern and the Profintern.

(e) Financing the Party Trade Union Work. To finance the party work in the trade unions, there shall be set aside 10 per cent of the income from dues of the national office of the Workers Party.

Organize the Unorganized.

TODAY in the United States there are four million workers organzied in the trade unions while fifteen million industrial workers and many more millions of agricultural and other workers are outside of the trade unions in the ranks of the unorganized. The campaign for the organization of the unorganized to be carried on within the existing unions, as well as for the formation of new unions where none exist, is a vital and necessary part of our trade union work. This issue shall be linked up closely with the economic demands of the workers.

It is exactly those workers in highly mechanized industries who because of the conditions under which they work will respond most readily to Communist influence who are in the ranks of the unorganized. The condition existing in the United States so far as the trade unions are concerned is to a considerable degree parallel to the conditions which existed in Great Britain a quarter of a century ago. There too a highly reactionary trade union bureaucracy was in control of the trade unions and opposed all progressive measures in the struggles against the employers. It was only with the advent of the "new unionism" which came into existence thru the organization of great masses of previously unorganized workers that the trade unions changed their policy and the labor party was formed and industrial unionism developed.

The organization of the millions of workers in such industries as the steel industry, the rubber industry, the automobile industry will bring into the American trade union movement new and more militant spirits and will greatly increase the influence of our party and aid materially in achieving our end of winning the organized masses for the revolutionary Communist struggle.

Shop Commitees.

THE party shall carry on an active campaign to organize shop committees in the industries generally. These shop committees shall be elected by all employes of a given industrial establishment irrespective of sex, color, nationality, skill, etc. The shop committees shall serve to unite all the workers in the various establishments, whether members of unions or not. The shop committees shall voice the demands of the workers and form the basis for common struggle against capitalism. The shop committees shall be utilized for the organization of the unorganized. One of the main tasks of the shop nuclei is the formation eventually of shop committees and the support of the shop committees in the organization of the unorganized into the trade unions.

Amalgamation.

THE campaign to consolidate the craft unions into industrial unions must be pushed with vigor. The amalgamation campaign must be more definitely concrete, however, in view of the bitter resistance it is meeting from the trade union bureaucracy. It must be more closely linked up with the workers' everyday struggles and identified definitely with their economic demands. The movement shall be intensified and extended by thus bringing it closer to the workers' immediate interests. The shop committees and shop nuclei shall, in their work, always keep in mind the necessity of amalgamating the trade unions into industrial unions.

International.

1. The reactionary leaders of the American Federation of Labor are using their influence to make the unions of Mexico, Central and South America, subservient to the program of American imperialism in the countries of the western hemisphere. The party must, thru its industrial department, establish contact with these unions and endeavor to win them away from the leadership of the bureaucrats of the American Federation of Labor and for a militant fight against American imperialism in cooperation with the left bloc of the trade unions in this country.

2. The movement for world trade union unity initiated by the Russian unions in cooperation with the English trade unions which is endorsed by the Red International of labor unions offers a great opportunity for a campaign against the leadership in the American Federation of Labor. Even Amsterdam has been too "radical" for the Gompers machine. It is our task to familiarize the trade union movement of this country with the movement for world trade union unity and aid in the fight to have the American trade unions join in an international conference to unify the trade union movement of the world.

3. We shall also fight for the support of the Anglo-Russian committee, and for the affiliation of the various national unions to the International Federation in their respective industry.

4. Canadian Autonomy. The party shall support the movement of the Canadian unions for autonomy within the American trade unions. This autonomy shall take the form of the establishment of Canadian sections in all American unions having branches in Canada, these sections to be united in the Canadian trades and labor congress, and to have full right to declare strikes, to organize the masses, and to raise all necessary funds.

Party Policies for Trade Union Work.

STRIKES and Wage Movements. The party must take an active part in all strikes and other wage movements. It must have programs of demands for all such mass movements, and the Communists must fight for the leadership of these struggles. The wage cutting campaign of the employers must be met with a counter campaign of strikes.

Class Collaboration. The party must carry on a relentless warfare against the many schemes of class collaboration, such as labor banking, workers' insurance, B. & O. plans, etc., now being foisted on the workers by the reactionary bureaucrats. The organization of company unions and sham forms of industrial democracy has made great headway in American industry during recent years. The employers attempt to set up organizations under their control to prevent the workers from joining unions which will actually fight their class battles. These policies of class collaboration must be met by a militant fight for the policy of class struggle. The party must constantly expose the corruption and treachery of the reactionary bureaucracy. In the matter of labor banks, the policy shall be to fight against the establishment of new banks upon the present basis, and to demand that those now in existence be reorganized along cooperative lines.

Unemployment. In the unions the party shall carry on an active campaign against the menace of unemployment. It shall, where necessary, advocate and organize unemployment councils. It shall demand that the employers and the government provide work and funds amounting to full maintenance of the workers.

Work Among the Negroes. Negro workers are a growing factor in industry. The employers are using every effort to play them off against the white workers and vice versa and thereby to defeat both. The bureaucracy facilitates this scheme of the employers by setting up union restrictions against Negro workers. This tendency must be relentlessly combatted. The Workers Party must lead an active fight thruout the trade union movement to bring the Negroes into the unions and to secure for them equal rights and protection with white workers in the industries and in society generally. Where white unions refuse to accept Negroes, new unions of Negroes shall be formed.

Recognition of Soviet Russia. The party shall carry on an intensive campaign in the trade unions for the recognition of Soviet Russia, using as one means to this end the report of the British trade union delegation to Russia in abridged form.

Expulsions.—The party reiterates its anti-expulsion policy. Where expelled workers are few in numbers they shall remain in local T. U. E. L. groups. But, where they are numerous they shall be formed into unions of the expelled. Those expelled members shall endeavor to fight their way back into the old organizations. In the case of delegates expelled from Central Labor Councils, the policy shall be to insist upon their right to be seated by being reelected by their local union. This should be reinforced by securing support from the unions of the locality, and by formal appeals, backed by wide agitational movements, to the executive boards of the International unions involved, and with appeals taken to the conventions in case of unfavorable action.

Injunctions.—Whenever and wherever an injunction is issued by courts against strikers, depriving them of their rights, the party shall endeavor to arouse the strikers and the trade union movement in general to mass violation of the injunctions.

Independent Unions.—The party endorses the paragraphs relating to the I. W. W. and other independent unions adopted by the Third World Congress of the Red International labor unions providing for the calling of a conference of these unions, and contained in the program for the Trade Union Educational League outlined at the congress.

Communist Work Among Women in the U.S.

The following resolution was unanimously adopted by the Parity Commission for submission to the National Convention of the Workers (Communist) Party:

RESOLUTION ON WORK AMONG WOMEN.

I.

THE work among women is an important phase of the party activity. This work has been neglected by our party since its organization. Only some local organizations such as New York, Boston, and Detroit have made a beginning in this respect, but there has been no centralized direction and definite plan of work on a national scale. These conditions must be changed. Our party must from now on take up this work systematically in order to establish Communist influence among the women workers and draw them into the general struggles of the workers.

2. Policy for Work Among Women in the Factories.

1. It must be our aim to establish in the factories where women are employed circles of working women for the discussion of the problem of their place of work and for the discussion of general problems of the working class. As these circles are developed in certain industrial sections they should be combined into conferences of delegates from the circles of that section and later on a city-wide scale.

2. These circles should also be the medium for expression of the social life of women workers and the means of providing educational opportunities. Thru the development of this form of their acttvities our party members working within them will be able to influence the social life and the education of the women workers and thus facilitate the work of political education of these workers.

3. Wherever the party has shop nuclei organized in factories where women are employed one member of the nucleus shall be charged with the responsibility of organizing such circles of women workers. In those sections where nuclei do not yet exist the party organ responsible for work among women shall appoint comrades working in factories where women are employed to take up this work.

5. The work among the women in the factories must be closely coordinated with the work among the women in the trade unions. For this purpose there should be appointed in the party trade union fractions in unions in which there are women workers a comrade charged with the work among the women trade union members, who must be in contact with the comrades conducting the work among women in the factories.

3. Work Among the Housewives.

1. Our party must also seek to organize circles of housewives for participation in and support of the struggles of the workers. These circles should be organized in all the working class sections of the cities.

2. The party units in the various sections of the cities shall appoint from among the party members a comrade specially charged with carrying on this work of organization of circles of housewives.

3. The housewives circles shall be combined thruout the sections of the city and on city-wide scale thru conferences of delegates from these bodies.

4. The housewives circles should carry on social and educational activities similar to those to be carried on by the circles in the factories. They must be drawn into close cooperation with the women circles in the factories thru the initiation of common campaigns and thru conferences in which the members of both circles participate as well as thru conferences of delegates from both forms of organization. This is particularly necessary in times of strike and other workers struggles.

5. The organizations of proletarian housewives which have been created thru the efforts of our party members, such as the United Council of Working Class Women in New York City, the Mothers League of Boston and Detroit Proletarian Women organizations should be made the basis for the development of our work in these cities.

4. Conferences of Working Women.

1. In order to unite the work of the women factory circles and the housewives circles, conferences of working class women shall be called.

2. These conferences shall be held periodically at least once a month, and shall discuss and act upon all problems arising out of the lives of the working women.

3. The "Conference of Working Women" shall consist of (a) women employed in shops, factories, stores, etc.; (b) Local trade unions consisting wholly or partly of working women; and (c) organizations of working class housewives.

4. These conferences shall elect Executive Committees to carry on the work between the meetings of the Conferences. These committees shall be known as "Committees of Working Women."

5. The following is to be the basis of the program of the "Conferences of Working Women."

a. To carry on an active campagin to unionize the working women.

b. To fight for equal pay for equal work.

c. To combat child labor.

d. To encourage and asist working women to become citizens of the United States.

e. To fight for government maintenance of working mothers for a specified period of time before and after childbirth.

f. To develop political consciousness and activity among working women.

g. To participate in all struggles of the workers jointly with other labor organizations.

h. To provide for the educational, cultural, and social needs of the working class housewives.

i. To render material and moral support to workers engaged in struggles against capitalists. (Relief in times of strikes, lockouts etc.)

j. To combat the high cost of living.

k. To fight for better housing facilities for the workers.

l. To fight for better sanitary, fire prevention, and educational facilities for working class quarters.

m. To fight for government maintenance of the school children of the workers.

n. To participate in all struggles of the workers jointly with other labor organizations.

6. These conferences shall be called in each locality by a special committee to be known as "The Provisional Committee of the Conference of Working Women." The Provisional Committee is to be made up of men and women engaged in or otherwise connected with the struggle of the working women.

7. Such provisional Committees shall be established immediately. Before calling the conference, a widespread agitation must be carried on among women in the shops, factories, stores, and in the unions popularizing the task of these conferences.

5. Party Organization for Work Among Women.

THE following organizational apparatus shall be established in the party at once to conduct the work among women:

1. In all leading committtees of the party such as the Central Executive Committee, District Executive Committees, City Executive Committtees, and after the party reorganization is affected, the Section Executive Committee and Sub Section Executive Committee, and at present in the present existing branches and shop nuclei, an individual member or sub committee shall be appointed as responsible head of the work among women. This sub committee or individual member shall be authorized to form a larger committee by drawing into the work other comrades, particularly women from the factories. The sub committee or individual member, however shall be responsible for conduct of the work to the leading committee making the appointment.

2. In order to keep before the party the necessity of systematically carrying on the work among women and in order that this work shall support and be in line with the general political policies of the party, the question of work among women should be placed on the agenda of the leading committees and regular reports on the progress of the work submitted. The Organisation Committee of the C. E. C. shall also place the question on its agenda and once each three months at least it should come before the C. E. C.

3. Whenever the party initiates a campaign the instructions sent to the party units shall contain a special section instructing the party units how to apply this campaign to the work among the working women so that the women are drawn into all the general campaigns of the party.

4. The first step in putting this program into effect shall be the calling in each city of city conferences to consist of all the members of the branch and nuclei sub committee on Women Work and also the women committees from the trade union fractions. These conferences shall be made thoroly familiar with the program and mobilized to carry it out in the following manner. Similar conferences shall be held from time to time and at a later stage of development of the work it may be possible to hold these conferences on a larger scale.

5. At all times the party members in the non partisan organizations must form Communist fractions and work under the direction of the party sub-committee on Women Work in their respective localities.

6. Press and Literature.

1. The party should publish literature making especial appeal to working women and the party press should from time to time carry articles dealing with current political questions from the same angle.

GE[illegible]MAN WORKERS VISIT RUSSIA

PERLSTEIN AND FEINBERG RESIGN AS I. L. G. W. RIGHT WING CALLS SCHLESINGER TO SAVE SIGMAN

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK CITY, July 29.—A new turn in the fight of the membership of the International Ladies' Garment Workers was taken last night when Perlstein and Feinberg resigned their positions in the I. L. G. W. at the meeting of the Sigmanite Joint Board.

The resignation of Perlstein was popular, even in the Joint Board, which accepted it unanimously and with a sigh relief. Feinberg's resignation was accepted by a vote of 28 to 9.

Feinberg made a declaration that his resignation is for the purpose of creating complete unity in the struggle against the Communists. This "altruism" on the part of an international official was approved by Sigman, who stated that the general executive board recommends the acceptance of the resignation.

Sigman Hasn't Resigned—Yet!

Sigman, however, has not yet resigned. On the contrary, he has taken over the administration of the New York joint board in an effort to save the pogrom gangsters from the complete debacle to which they have brought the New York joint board.

Schlesinger, experienced reactionary and now improved in this natural reaction by considerable training as Abe Cahan's business manager on the Jewish Daily Forward, is being sought by the Sigmanites to enter the fight in order that the Sigman right wing machine which is going to pieces before the battering of the left wing, may be bolstered up again.

"Disorganization" Promised.

This "reorganization" by the resignation of Perlstein and Feinberg is hailed by the Forward as meaning a new and intensified drive against the Communists—which in turn means in reality a new and more bitter fight by the class traitors at the head of the international to prevent the union being controlled by its membership in its dealings with the bosses.

AS WE SEE IT

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY

WILLIAM H. JOHNSTON, alias "B. and O. Bill" has decided to organize a "third party" this fall. Bill may need something to play with by the time the left wing in the Machinists' Union gets thru with him. Judging by the names of those appearing in the publicity story on the third party venture, Bill's plan will not get very far, but it will get Bill's name in the papers. Ousting progressives from the Machinists' Union and floating fake third parties should keep a man from dying of ennui.

THE British government's new naval plan calls for the expenditure of 290 million dollars. That is a lot of money for a tottering empire to spend on war vessels that may be out of date a few years after they are floated. But capitalism cannot help itself. It is a social madhouse. America is arming against Japan and Japan is arming against America. England is arming against both and all are arming against each other. How can such a system survive?

WHILE he was living, he was the moron's chief spokesman; now that he is dead, he is the nation's saint. This is Bryan. The theory is that a good Indian is a dead Indian. But what about those who spent their time dwelling on Bryan's colossal ignorance as displayed during the "ape" trial? They are now vieing with each other in heaping honors on him as one of the greatest minds that the United States ever produced.

EVEN Walter Thomas Mills, organizer for the socialist party when he was not selling "colonies" to the easily convinced, believes or pretends to believe that Bryan was the greatest figure in this country's history. TORY CABINET QUIZZED ON BIG NAVAL PROGRAM

Britain Has Forty-Nine First Class Cruisers

LONDON, July 29.—Ramsay MacDonald, former labor premier, made an attack in the house of commons tonight against the government's new cruiser program. He asked the government against whom Britain was arming herself.

"We cannot say America or Japan are our possible enemies," declared MacDonald, "and if it is France the problem is not naval but aerial.

"We have forty-nine modern cruisers already, and the power next to us, is Japan, which has eighteen.

"I demand to know what is the national danger which is causing these ships to be laid down. I ridicule the idea that we spend the taxpayers' money when there is no need for such a program."

MacDonald, in opening his attack on the proposal to lay down four cruisers this year, said if the money were spent in the development of Britain's natural resources, "it would do more to promote national security and prepare for a crisis." When MacDonald was premier he sanctioned the laying down of six new cruisers.

WOOD ENSLAVES FILIPINOS, LABOR PARTY CHARGES

Demands Control of the Government

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MANILA, July 29.—The Filipino labor party appealed to Gov. General Leonard Wood here today against the "existing semi-feudalistic system of labor in the Philippines which keeps laborers in semi-slavery and bondage.

Incensed at Wood's lack of sympathy for a reorganization of the Philippine government system whereby Filipinos would have greater control of the executive department, majority leaders were planning to send a special envoy to Washington to appeal to President Coolidge.

The politicos (the labor party) have proposed to Wood the creation of a cabinet of Filipinos enjoying legislature. This system, the politicos believe, would be the only way of realizing the spirit of the Jones act, the organic governing law of the Philippines, granting Filipinos considerable autonomy.

Gen. Wood, however, refuses to make any change in the system of government in the islands.

The present break between the governor general and the politicos resulted from the wholesale resignation of cabinet secretaries in 1923 as a protest against General Wood's usurpation of governing powers.

According to present plans of the politicos the Washington envoy will also seek to consolidate a plan to change the Jones act with a view to final declaration of the status of the Philippines.

Senator Sergio Osmena appeared almost certain today to receive the commission as envoy. He is expected to arrive in Washington late in September.

A large number of the workers and peasants, realizing that no hope can be expected from the imperialistic American government, are demanding a workers' government.

T.U.E.L. in Call for Fight Against "B. and O. Bill"

Calling on the rank and file in the International Association of Machinists to rally to the struggle against the crooked Johnston administration, which has embarked on an orgy of expulsions, by expelling J. F. Anderson, his opponent for the presidency of the union, the national committee of the Trade Union Educational league, has issued a statement setting forth the facts in the fight in the machinist' union and outlining a program for the progressives to follow. The T. U. E. L. statement declares that Anderson was elected even after the entire vote of Anderson locals were thrown out by Johnston's selected ballot counters. The statement in full reads:

Anderson's Suspension

THE suspension of J. F. Anderson from the Machinists' Union by William H. Johnston is a brazen challenge to the great majority of the rank and file of the International Association of Machinists. Having completely lost the confidence of the membership, Johnston is forced to do one of two things, either accept the defeat administered to him in the general election, or hold on to his official position thru crooked means and by launching a reign of terror against the militants and expelling all those who attempt to expose him.

The Johnston machine has chosen

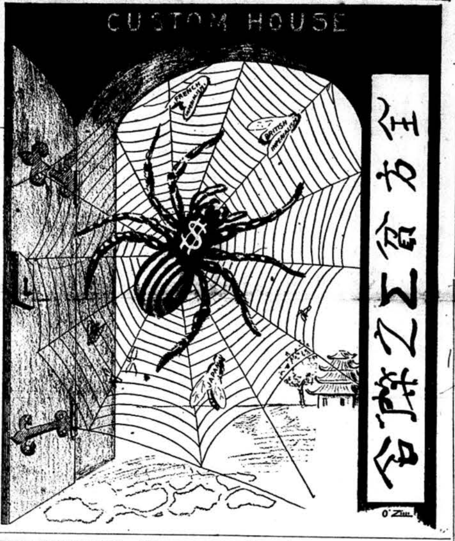
AMERICAN PLANS IN CHINA



NEXT SUNDAY'S PICNIC EVENT OF THE SEASON

Prominent Speakers on the Menu

Next Sunday, thousands of workers will flock to Riverview Picnic Grove, Belmont and Western avenues, to make merry at the Fourth Annual Workers' Press Picnic. Besides the usual attractions that make picnics what they are, there will be a corps of speakers headed by William Z. Foster, chairman of the Workers (Communist) Party of America.

Ella Reeve Bloor, the champion hiker of the western world, will be there after beating the railroads over the continent. If the rest of the proletariat traveled like Comrade Bloor, railroad stocks would bring nothing on the market but contempt. Besides being a hiker Mother Bloor swings a vicious tongue and speaking for himself the writer would rather listen to "Mother" Bloor flaying the capitalists than play pinochle.

H. V. Philips the genial young Negro revolutionist who is organizing the American Negro Labor Congress, will be on deck. Color will be given to the occasion by a sprinkling of Negro comrades from the South

TWO MINERS COUGHT IN SLIDES AT STRIP MINE AT DANVILLE, ILL.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

DANVILLE, Ill., July 29.—Precautions were taken here today to prevent other land slides in a strip mine where William Thain, 38, and William Murphy, 23, met death Tuesday. Thain was caught under a steam shovel when a seventy foot bank caved in. Murphy was trapped by a slide while efforts were being made to recover Thain's body.

U. S. Makes Fuss Over Kidnapped Imperialist Ignoring Own Crimes

PEKING, July 29.—"Money and bullets!"

Manchurians bandits holding Dr. Harvey Howard of the Rockefeller institute for ransom today demanded cash and ammunition as the price of his release.

Elbridge Greene, first secretary of the American legation, today was enroute to Mukden to secure the aid of Marshal Chang Tsolin, Manchurian war-lord, in effecting the release of the American.

It is to be remembered that no such fuss was made by the American government to free the Chinese students illegally held by the foreign municipal police at Shanghai—nor any move made, even yet—to punish these foreign police troops who continued massacring Chinese for nearly two weeks. Yet their responsibility was certified by the Peking diplomatic corps.

BELIEVE COAL BARONS WILL FORCE STRIKE

Operators Following Listening Policy

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., July 29.—No compromise! That was the attitude unofficially expressed today by miners and operators of anthracite as they resumed their joint conference on the wage question.

They were as far apart as they were when negotiations were started more than two weeks ago.

Upon the result of the negotiations depend whether or not there will be a strike in the hard coal fields September 1.

It was freely stated this afternoon that, in the view of the way negotiations are procedeing, a "break" is inevitable, probably in a week or so when the miners will have finished outlining their case.

The union officials are getting nettled at the policy adopted by the operators. The operators in the joint conference are "listening" to the miners' demands—they are not arguing against them, as in former years. They won't have any reply until the miners have said their say. Then they will reply. If the answer is unsatisfactory to the miners, the "break" will be inevitable, those in close touch with the situation said.

DELEGATION IS GIVEN MIGHTY GREETING IN LENINGRAD ON ITS ARRIVAL IN THE SOVIET UNION

(By International Press Correspondence.)

MOSCOW, U. S. S. R., July 14—(By Mail.)—The arrival of the German workers' delegation in Leningrad grew into a mighty demonstration of international proletarian solidarity.

At nine o'clock in the morning the steamer with the delegation berthed in Kronstadt, where the delegation was greeted by the sailors of the Baltic fleet and by the whole population with great enthusiasm. On the way from Kronstadt to Leningrad a meeting was held on the steamer which unanimously adopted the following resolution and appeal to the proletariat of the Soviet Union:

"We send you in our capacity as the first delegation of the workingmen and women of Germany, our proletarian greetings and the greetings of the working class of the German republic."

"First of all we want to thank you for your energetic support for the thousands of proletarians held in the prisons of the bourgeoisie. Despite the calumnies which the bourgeoisie has spread about you, we have come to you to learn your real situation.

"As honest workers we want to know everything relating to the political and economic situation and to the life of the workers and peasants in your country. Millions of German workingmen and working women await an objective and truthful report from us, the workers delegation composed of Communists and social-democrats, with impatience. We believe and hope that our visit to you will strengthen the political and economic relations between the working class of Germany and the working class of Soviet Russia."

On the way to Leningrad the delegation exchanged greetings with the passing steamers. The steamer berthed in Leningrad under the singing of the International on board and on the shore where many thousands of people had assembled including numerous delegations from the shops, the trade unions and the youth organizations, who greeted the delegation with enthusiasm.

Moissev welcomed the delegation in the name of the trade union organizations of Leningrad and concluded his speech with a cheer for the international unity of the world proletariat. The chairman of the German delegation, Freiberger, declared in his answering speech that the German workers were proud to feel the ground of the first red capital under their feet. The masses greeted this declaration with storms of applause and cheers and accompanied the delegation thru the town to the Palace of Labor.

EXPEL WORKER FROM MD. CAMP FOR RADICALISM

Read Young Worker, Officer Started Riot

By IRVING SOLLINS.

(Worker Correspondent.)

BALTIMORE, Md., July 29.—Harry Miller of Philadelphia, citizens' military training camp student, was expelled from Camp Meade, Md., today charged with reading the Young Worker and distributing leaflets calling for a boycott of the C. M. T. C., and demanding hands off China. He was declared "an agent of Russian Bolshevicks" by General Upton, commandant of the camp.

General Upton declared Miller was misled by Communist bunk and class hatred and ordered him expelled from Camp Meade. Miller was arrested while reading the Young Worker to a group of students and was immediately placed under a guard of four soldiers.

The commandant of Miller's company, Captain Turner, incited a group of students to a riot against Miller but another group more sympathetic protected him from flying stones. It is sifinificant that a riot was incited while Miller was defenceless being under guard.

Considering the fact that Miller is not a Young Workers' League or party member but that he recognizes that C. M. T. C. students are future strike breakers and cannon fodder for American imperialism it is important to note that he is called a Russian agent because he has liberal views. Miller is a member of the Knit Goods Workers' Union of Philadelphia.

TEXTILE STRIKE IS THREATENED IN NEW ENGLAND

Coolidge Busy Playing with Politicians

(Special to The Daily Worker)

SWAMPSCOTT, Mass., July 29.—The prospect of a new industrial problem, comparable to the impending crisis in the anthracite industry, was confronting President Coolidge today.

The latest threat is that of a complete tie-up of the textile industry of New England, brought forward by the action of William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, in throwing the entire power of his great organization behind the textile workers in their protest against recently enforced wage reductions.

This step by the federation head followed almost immediately upon the president's suggestion that he considered the wage reductions localized, and Green's characterization of these cuts as unwarranted, unethical and a step backward is considered generally thruout New England to have solidified the opposition of the workers.

In the meantime, a political outing—the annual gathering of the Essex County Republican Club engaged the attention of President Coolidge today.

It was reported here that the action taken by President Green was designed to assist the anthracite miners in their conference at Atlantic City.

The miners are demanding additional wages. The textile workers are preparing to fight an ordered reduction.

WOOD CARVERS TO BUILD UP STRONG UNION

By F. HANZL.

In order to accomplish this most essential object of building, strengthening and perfecting our union, it is necessary to clearly understand the cause of our present state of affairs and its effect on the membership and wood carvers in general.

In order to do that it will be necessary to go into the history of its past struggles against the encroachments of the Furniture Manufacturers' Association and the development of organized capital in general, so I will point out the most significant events which I consider had the most demoralizing

BRITISH NAVY TO BREAK STRIKE, IS THREAT; TRANSPORT WORKERS PLEDGE 'NO COAL FROM EUROPE'

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LONDON, July 29.—That the British government is preparing to break the great coal strike—if it comes—is disclosed by the statement of the cabinet that Premier Baldwin is willing to take over the mines, if the conference being held today has no results—and the exposure of plans of the British navy to break the strike with sailors and marines landed from the British fleet.

Mr. Montague, labor member of the house of commons for West Islington quoted on the floor what he claimed as a copy of a secret admiralty fleet order, containing an instruction by the Auditor-General that—"extra pay at double rates was to be credited to naval personnel employed on or standing by for work on railways, light and power works, motor transport or pumping out mines."

This is a plain case of the British war office preparing for war against its own working class by forcing the members of the navy to scab on their brothers of the unions.

In Connection With Strike.

Reading from the document Montague stated that it related to the—"remuneration of naval personnel employed on, or standing by, for industrial work in connection with a strike."

Double rates were to be paid these scabs, but only single rates paid those unloading foodstuffs carried in government ships. Similar application was to be made in respect of purely local strikes.

"I would like to draw the attention of the house, Mr. Montague said, "to the fact that this so far goes beyond any national emergency."

The document, he went on, stated that it was clearly understood that repayment by the firm or undertaking concerned for the services rendered would be made direct to the accountant-general of the navy.

Sailors and Marines Drafted as Cheap Scabs.

Officers and ratings, before being drafted for emergency duty, were to be informed that in no case was payment to be accepted by them from the firm or its representatives unless this payment had been authorized by the admiralty. Montague declared that no "national emergency" existed to justify such activities.

He protested against—"private firms being protected at their own request upon payment at double navy rates—which will probably mean cheap strikebreakers, and against the services of officers and ratings of the government being entirely at the disposal of the firms, whether it is a question of national emergency or not."

The First Lord Speaks.

"I think we ought to have from the first lord of the admiralty a very complete statement as to the precise way in which naval ratings are to be used. Trade unionists are fearing this danger. It is an extremely important question to trade unionists."

The first lord of the admiralty, Mr. Bridgeman, declared that breaking strikes was a—"totally false impression of what the order means. The order refers to a general disturbance."

Take Sides? Not at All!

Mr. Montague: (Quoting the order) "Local strikes."

Mr. Bridgeman: "I think not. Well, perhaps he may be right, but the main intention of it is to regulate the action of officers of the navy and the men in a general strike, the object being to exert what power the government can in preventing the general public of this country having its food supplies cut off. To say that the navy would take part in the strike on one side or the other is totally wrong."

Just Scab—Nothing Worse!

Mr. Montague: "May I ask the first lord how it is that the order states the method by which the accountant-general of the admiralty should be reimbursed by private firms."

Mr. Bridgeman: "The firms might be millers, handling sacks of flour necessary for food for the people. That might be a private firm, but that makes no difference to the duty of the navy, which is not to take part in the strike on one side or the other."

Labor Party Never Revoked It.

Mr. Batey (labor, Spennymoor): "Will he let us see the order? Will he let us read it?"

Mr. Bridgeman: "I am qhite ready to send around a copy of the order. It has already been quoted. I am not in the least ashamed of the order. It is not a new one issued by me. It was issued in 1919, and I think it has been revised since, in 1923, and it is now in a revised form and reissued."

"The labor party," added Mr. Bridgeman, "when it was in office would have been perfectly justified in revoking the order if they had felt it was unfair. They knew it was not. They knew that it was only in the interest of the general public, and the defense of those interests is the duty of any government, whether by us or by them."

Hope that a strike will be averted is growing in view of unofficial statements that the owners will give in to Premier Baldwin's appeal that they withdraw their notices ending the present working agreement on July 31. The present conference was obtained only after difficulty, since the miners were unwilling to meet the owners, telling Baldwin that the owners' proposals for a 20 per cent wage cut and longer hours would first have to be withdrawn before they would talk to them.

International Union in Action.

The miners are facing the situation with stout hearts, cheered by the conference of the Miners' International at Paris yesterday, which made the decision to "Undertake international action in the event the British mine owners put their threats against the miners into execution on August 1." European transport unions have promised to see that no coal shall reach Enginad from the continent.

A. J. Cook, secretary of the Miners' Federation, declared when leaving Paris that he thought a strike was inevitable, if it does not come now it will come later a week or two.

Hall Caine Godsakes the Owners.

The conference today is regarded as a last hope of bringing an agreement before the strike begins. How it is regarded by the British nation may be seen by the fact that the distinguished novelist, Hall Caine, has written an article in the Evening Standard entitled, "For Gods' Sake Stop!"

Sir Hall declares that if the mine owners allowed the strike to come with the whole strength of the trade unions standing behind the miners, they must not expect the miners to go back to the pits "beaten and crushed."

Predicting a national upheaval, the great novelist says:

"There will be but one end and the coal owners—as owners—will not be here to see it. They will have lit their fires and perished in the flames."

Premier Baldwin is attending the conference between owners and has notified every cabinet member not to leave the city, but to hold themselves in readiness for instant call.

A CHINESE CONFERENCE OF THE POWERS? MAYBE, BUT WE WON'T SWEAR IT

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 29.—While the time of meeting has not yet been determined, all the powers, including Great Britain and Japan, have signified their intention to appoint representatives to a conference on the abolition of extra-territoriality in China, it was announced at the state department today.

The DAILY WORKER wishes to point out that altho the above announcement is the official statement of the state department, it fully expects an equally official statement of the state department tomorrow denying the first official statement. We do not, of course, infer that the state department of the U. S. government is conducted by liars, but from the frequent contradictions put out by it upon this matter of a Chinese conference, we are bound to observe that if they are not able liars they are excellent diplomats.

KLUXERS DENIED BAIL, AFRAID TO COMMENCE TRIAL

May Appeal to State Supreme Court

NOBLESVILLE, Ind., July 29—Judge Fred Hines in Hamilton County circuit court today overruled the motion of attorneys for D. C. Stephenson, Earl Klenck and Earl Gentry for a hearing on a petition to release them from jail on bail until they go on trial for the alleged murder of Madge Oberhotzer.

Afraid of Trial.

Simultaneously Judge Hines paved the way for an immediate trial for the trio when he announced his readiness to call a special term of the court "at any time" to permit the defendants to face the murder charge before a jury.

"The court is willing at this time to call a special term to try these defendants," the judge said. "They could have been tried at any time thy were ready. By their own conduct the defendants chose to remain in jail rather than be tried.

To Appeal for Bail.

Judge Hines emphasized that no grounds exist for admitting the accused men to bail because an immediate trial is open to them.

"The court," he continued, "is willing to take up all of his time if necessary between now and October for this trial."

A request for time to prepare a bill of exceptions was made by Ralph Waltz of defense counsel. This action, believed to be the forerunner of an appeal to be filed with the state supreme court.

DECISION TODAY ON INJUNCTION AGAINST A. C. W.

Strikers Continue a Solid Picketline

A decision as to whether or not the International Tailoring company is to secure an injunction to restrain their striking employes, members of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, from picketing will be rendered today by Judge Hugo Pam, Room 941, County building at 2 o'clock.

William A. Cunnea, attorney for the Amalgamated, surprised the court by stating his case against the outlawing of the strike in one hour, whereas three high-priced lawyers for the tailoring company had argued for four days.

The strike meeting yesterday was as enthusiastic as on the first day of the strike, the workers singing songs, and enthusiastically applauding the speeches.

No arrests were made yesterday, the police violence having been at least temporarily curbed, following the slugging of three strikers, two of whom were girls, last week. The Amalgamated protested to Chief of Police Collins and Mayor Dever against the outrage, and the protest has cowed the sluggers for a time.

Cunnea Closes Case.

Cunnea in his defense of the right to strike, declared that the Cuthbertson anti-injunction law was constitutional. Replying to the case cited by the clothing bosses' attorneys in which supreme court Justice Taft rendered a decision declaring an Arizona anti-injunction law unconstitutional, Cunnea said that the law was not similar to the Illinois law. Cunnea said that in the Arizona case, where striking restaurant workers were restrained from picketing the question of the boycott was involved. Taft's decision was upon the fact that the pickets were advising customers not to eat in the restaurant. The boycott is not involved in the Illinois law, Cunnea said.

Insits on Right to Strike.

Cunnea pointed out that the decision rendered by Taft was a four to five decision, Justices Holmes, Brandies, Pitney and Clark bringing in a dissenting opinion. The dissenting opinion, Cunnea said, was more in accordance with the settled laws of the majority of the states of the union, and with the picketing decisions of the United States courts.

In the decision of Barnes vs. the Typographical Union, on which all further applications to Illinois courts against strikers is based, Cunnea said, "The decision of the Illinois supreme court will not stand as a limitation upon the rights of the workers, restraining them from picketing."

Law Is Constitutional.

The Cuthbertson anti-injunction law is not contrary to the constitution of the state of Illinois, Cunnea argued. The legislature has a right to prescribe remedies and procedure. Cunnea cited several cases to show that th law is constitutional.

Workers Are Aroused.

"It is the duty of the court to declare a law constitutional unless it is unconstitutional beyond a reasonable doubt," said Cunnea.

"These five to four decisions of the supreme court against the rights of workers to demand the limitation of the powers of the supreme court."

Must Send An American Trade Union Delegation to Visit the Soviet Union

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

TODAY, a delegation of German workers, spokesmen for the mighty battalions of organized labor in the Dawes-enslaved republic, is visiting in the Union of Soviet Republics. Received at Kronstadt, the scarred Bolshevik fortress, acclaimed at Leningrad, they passed triumphantly on to the red capital of the Workers' Republics—MOSCOW.

• • • •

This is the third delegation of labor from the major capitalist countries of Western Europe to cross the Soviet frontier to investigate for themselves the progress made under Workers' Rule. First the British, then the Franco-Belgians and now the Germans.

These delegations, notably the British, have been made up of labor officials affiliated in no way with the Communist movement, except thru their realization that the Soviet Union is the expression of the indomitable will of the Russian worker and peasant masses to conquer and hold all power, and that the desire of the Russian workers for world trade union unity must be realized if labor is to successfully combat the international forces of aggressive capitalism. That is a sympathetic relation that has as yet not even touched the officialdom of the American labor movement.

• • • •

The report of the British Trade Union Delegation on its visit to the Soviet Union has already been spread to the world. It has been a crushing blow to the Anti-Soviet propaganda circulated so assiduously by capitalist interests the past eight years. American workers should feel glad that they have the DAILY WORKER to give serial publication to this historic document that meets with no dispute except from the "open shop" press and "bitter-end" socialist publications that have lost all influence. It is the reading of this report among the workers in the mines, the mills and the factories of this nation, that must give birth to the sentiment expressed by the Franco-Belgian delegation, speaking to the chairman of the All-Russian Trade Union Council, Tomsky, saying:

> "Every honest worker, after he has seen what is being done in the Soviet Union, must fight still more energetically for the unity of the international trade union movement."

The delegation went even further when it declared that, "in our opinion, many of the fundamental principles which are applied in the Russian trade unions would be very much in place in the trade unions of our own countries."

• • • •

In other words, the workers of all countries must not only close ranks for the protection of the Soviet Union, but to build their own power to achieve their own victory, and they are advised to build, even in their trade unions, according to the Russian example.

In the United States, the officialdom of labor with its "socialist" supporters, is still in open alliance with the government not only in its attacks on the Union of Soviet Republics, but in the war waged against militants in the left wing of the American labor movement. This alliance must be broken up. The reports of the British, Franco-Belgian and German trade union delegations on the conditions within the Soviet Union will help do it.

Under pressure of the left wing, the American trade unions must also send a delegation to study conditions within the Soviet Republics. Let the trade unionists of the United States follow in the footsteps of their British, French, Belgian and German brothers in taking their stand with the Soviet victory of Russian labor.

Lloyd George Says U. S. and Britain Will Fight Against Japan

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LONDON, July 29.—Lloyd George, Britain's prime minister at the time of the negotiation of the Washington agreement for the limitation of naval armaments threw a bomb into the discussion of the government's naval construction program this evening by the declaration that if there were any trouble on the Pacific Ocean England and the United States would be on the same side.

FASCISTI MOB ROMAN SENATOR AFTER SPEECH

Italy Stirred by the Latest Outrage

(Special to The Daily Worker)

ROME, July 29.—The attack on former Premier Orlando on the Corso Ruggerio, Palermo, after his criticism of the Mussolini government had an unfavorable reaction here today even in conservative circles.

Anti-fascisti were vigorous in their denunciation of interference with free speech.

While the speech which the former premier delivered yesterday, has not yet been circulated here in printed form, it is understood that he merely told his Palermo audience that the opposition to the Mussolini regime, would signalize its disatisfaction by putting tickets in the field in the approaching municipal election in an effort to defeat the fascisti candidates.

For this and for expressing general dissatisfaction with the governmental methods of the fascisti, Signor Orlando's automobile was attacked and it was necessary to call out troops to quell the riot which ensued.

RIFFIANS TAKE POST IN THREAT ON KEY SECTOR

French Invaders Fall Back Before Attack

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PARIS, France, July 29—The Riffians have launched a heavy attack against the French front at Wezzan, key position of the western section of the invaders' front. The Jebalia natives, who made the attack, have twenty thousand men in action, having successfully completed their harvest.

The Riffians captured the fortified post of Zendoula, six miles north of Wezzan, and are now before the city. West of Wezzan, the Moroccans have pushed southward, threatening the vital line of communication between Wezzan and Kenitra.

Marshal Petain has conferred with the Spanish dictator, Primo de Rivera in an endeavor to induce Spanish cooperation, but the Spaniards are not aiding the French invaders in Africa to any great extent.

Next Sunday's Picnic to Be Big Event of the Season of 1925

Side and by Chinese sympathisers from the environs of 22nd street.

Over the oratorical battalion will preside William F. Dunne, who is known from Butte to Boston and from Swampscott to Seattle, as one of the best presiding officers in the labor movement.

The most important feature of the picnic is the business side. Frankly the affair would not be arranged at all but for the purpose of making money to keep the Communist press from wobbling financially. Even the writers for Communist papers need money with which to purchase the necessities of life, strange tho it may appear, and printing presses and printers use up an awful lot of dough during the year. Not that we grudge it to them, but it must be stated here for the sake of the record.

Hence the August 2nd picnic. About it being a success there is no doubt. The very fact that a convention of the Workers Party is approaching is an added reason why the party membership should be well represented there. It is no secret that there is considerable discussion in the party at present, and like all discussions there are two sides to it. We hear that both sides will be vieing with each other in contributing to the success of the picnic. Long live that kind of dissension!

P. S.—Tickets of admission cost fifty cents each. Buy them in advance. They will keep.

Drainage Commission Awards $90,025 for Overflow of Canal

The second batch of awards on claims for damages against the sanitary district as a result of the overflowing of the Illinois river because of the great volume of water poured into it by the drainage canal several years ago, was announced today by the commission named to hear the cases by the legislature.

In claims for $90,025 the commission made awards for a total of $24,915. Last week awards of 52,000 were made.

Some 250 claims, totaling $10,000,00 are still to be heard. Awards thus far average about a third of the amounts of the claims. If the same ratio is continued the sanitary district will have a total of between $1,000,000 and $5,000,000 to pay within five years after the awards are made.

Forest Fire In Idaho

LEWISTOW, Idaho, July 29.—Lighting struck suddenly today in White Pine forests between Kiamiah and Kooskia, Idaho, and turned 100 acres into a roaring inferno, according to word received here. Several hundred men are reported to have quit work in nearby harvest fields to fight the flames which are out of control. A light breeze is blowing and is carrying the fire toward the heavier white pine belt.

T. U. E. L. IN RINGING CALL FOR FIGHT AGAINST "B. & O. BILL"

the latter course, and has entered into a ruinous expulsion campaign with J. H. Anderson as the first victim.

Wholesale Expulsions

Johnston is a tricky politician. The suspension of Anderson, according to the statement made by E. C. Davison at a meeting of Lodge No. 491, is to be followed by a wholesale expulsion of militants, centering the attack upon the Communists. The excuse to be given for these expulsions is that the Workers Party is a "dual union."

The Trade Union Educational League warns the militants in the Machinists' Union not to allow Johnston or his aides to sidetrack the issue. The Workers Party is a political organization and it is an insult to the intelligence of the members of the Machinists' Union to think that under this crude and stupid lie Johnston can divert attention away from his betrayals of the interests of the workers and from his flagrant stealing of the election to an attack upon the Communists.

In Desperate Fix

This latest move of Johnston's shows that he realizes the desperate situation that he is in. Accused of stealing the election, he practically admits that it is true by refusing an honest tabulation of the votes cast. If the Johnston machine were really elected, as they claim, Johnston could very easily discredit the Communists, the T. U. E. L., and the Anderson group, and strengthen his own position in the union by submitting to a recount or to a new election.

But, instead of doing that, he suspends J. F. Anderson without a trial and starts an attack upon the militants because they have gathered the facts which prove conclusively that Johnston and Davison stole the election.

"I will never be defeated as long as I count the votes," says E. C. Davison.

"I will expel any member from the union who attempts to expose my election steal," is Johnston's attitude to be carried out under the cloak of "the Workers Party is a dual union."

Rave Against Communists

In the struggle that will follow, Johnston will rave about the Communists and the T. U. E. L., but the left-wing will keep the real issue before the membership. Here are facts in the election that Johnston must answer.

1 Anderson's tellers were refused the right guaranteed by the constitution to supervise the totalling of the votes cast.

2. In spite of the large number of Anderson lodges whose votes were thrown out illegally, the real count shows that Anderson received 18,179 votes and Johnston 18,171.

3. The votes of 12 lodges were thrown out by Davison illegally, which showed that Anderson received 1,174 and Johnston 39 votes. The excuse given for this was that they had cast more votes than they had members.

4. The votes of 10 lodges were thrown out on the flimsy excuse that they had been delinquent in their reports. These lodges cast more votes for Anderson than for Johnston.

5. Davison refused to allow the clerks to count the ballots of 10 lodges on the grounds that he did not receive the tally sheets.

6. In the case of Lodge 441, it shows how the Johnston machine was elected. There were 277 votes for Johnston and only one for Anderson. While the record of the Lodge shows that only 39 votes were cast and they have still the blank ballots sent to them less the 39 votes cast.

A Few Strong Points.

These are a few of the points that militants must press home. The suspension of J. F. Anderson, the removal by the General Executive Board of Andrew T. McNamara as business agent, the removal of Hannon, a member of the Anderson group, from Chicago and sending him out to the sticks, the launching of an attack upon the left-wing generally—shows the well-planned fight that the Johnston machine intends to launch.

A strong fighting alliance must be set up between the left-wing and the Anderson group. The slogan of the united front must be "The recall of the Entire General Executive Board." Follow this up with an honest election, and the Johnson administration will be swept out of office.

The removal of the Johnston bureaucratic machine, however, is not an end in itself. More than ever should the left-wing program of action be placed before the membership. There are over 800,000 workers who are eligible to become members of the Machinists' Union, yet the Johnston administration has reduced the I. A. of M. to a mere skeleton organization.

Endorsed Amalgamation.

The Machinists' Union was one of the first organizations in America to endorse amalgamation. Johnston was elected on this program. Yet, he has not even made a gesture in this direction. On the contrary, he carried on the most bitter fight against every progressive measure. There are almost 4,500,000 workers in the metal industry that if welded together into a powerful industrial union would be able to make an effective struggle in the interests of the rank and file.

The Johnston administration, however, believes in class collaboration. In fact Johnston, thruout the world has become the symbol of class collaboration and betrayal of the working class. He is better known as "B. & O. Bill" than as Wm. H. Johnston. He would rather make the Machinists' Union an auxilliary to the Employers' Association than to develop it into a fighting organ of the class struggle.

Johnston more than any other one man, deliberately blocked the labor party movement. His policies in the C. P. P. A. are chiefly responsible for the swinging of the labor party sentiment into the middle-class reformist LaFollete camp. The left-wing must push vigorously the organizing of a national Labor Party based upon the trade unions.

Burning Questions.

The program and policy of the left-wing must be presented during the recall campaign. International Trade Union Unity, recognition of Soviet Russia, hands off China—all of these burning questions must be discussed. These are the real issues and the left-wing, led by the T. U. E. L., will not allow them to be side-tracked by Johnston's raising the "red" scare.

The Trade Union Educational League calls upon all militants to unite in the struggle against the reactionary Johnston administration on the basis of the following platform:

(a) Abolition of the expulsion policy and reinstatement of expelled.

(b) Recall of Johnston.

(c) A special convention of the I. A. of M.

(d) Recount of the election vote.

(e) A national left-bloc-progressive conference.

(f) Abolition of the B. & O. Plan.

(g) Campaign for amalgamation.

(h) Organize the unorganized.

(i) For a Labor Party.

Judge with Lessees in School Board Fight

Judge Joseph B. David issued a temporary injunction restraining the board of education from cancelling the leases of tenants in its loop property under dispute.

The renters refused to pay the new rent levels established by revaluation of these holdings. They based their refusal on the ground that the revaluation was invalid since the committee of appraisers had not been appointed in accordance with the 1888 lease provision which fixed the manner in which they should be selected.

The lessees were instructed by Judge David to pay the rent based on previous valuations to the court.

RED CANDIDATES IN TOLEDO ALL UNION MEMBERS

Workers Party Runs Class Struggle Vets

By A. W. HEWITT, W. C.

TOLEDO, Ohio, July 29. — Toledo Workers' Party is in the second week of their campaign for municipal election.

A successful street meeting was held on the corner of St. Clair and Orange St., Saturday night, at which Comrade Buehler, Comrade Wm. Patterson and Comrade Bruce T. Smith participated as speakers. A large crowd attended the meeting and stayed attentive till its close.

The speakers had keen competition from a bunch of holy rollers who were very anxious to save our souls and who tried to drown out our speakers by yelling at the top of their lungs.

Comrade Bill Patterson, who was the main speaker of the meeting, has some voice himself so he held the crowd regardless of the interruption.

The Workers Party in Toledo will have seven candidates to vote on in the primary election which will be held in August.

The candidates will be for mayor, vice mayor, and five councilmen.

Wm. Patterson is candidate for mayor.

Comrade Patterson has spent many years in the labor movement, as a member of the Longshoremen's Union, and claims the distinction of being the oldest union member in Toledo.

Comrade Patterson has been a speaker and agitator in the class struggle the biggest part of his life; he has been in many free speech fights, and is a delegate to the C. L. W.

We believe Comrade Patterson is the oldest candidate in the Workers' Party, having passed three score and ten.

Comrade Bruce Smith has been a union man ever since going into the employ of the railroad company, 33 years ago, as a brakeman. He is now a conductor.

Comrade Smith was elected to the council from his ward in 1917 on the socialist ticket. He was kicked out of the council because he refused to support the war and buy liberty bonds.

He was also threatened with being tarred and feathered and lynched. He was elected in 1921 to the council and served two years in the council.

He became popular with the workers, by saying that he thot that blue denim overalls suited him better, and he thot they looked better on any working man than a kaki uniform of Uncle Sam.

Gus Vossberg, the oldest candidate on the Workers Party ticket for council, belongs to the Patternmakers' Union and is one of the oldest members in the union in Toledo. He is a delegate to the C. L. W.

Comrade Vossberg is an old fighter in the class struggle.

Comrade Patterson, Smith, and Vossberg, were three of the oldest members of the old socialist Toledo immediately joined the left wing. local, and when the split came they Comrade Buehler, candidated for the council is the secretary of hte English branch of the Workers' Party, Toledo.

He has been the most active member in the branch since it was organized in Toledo.

Comrade Buehler was a member of the Machinists' Union till he was expelled for belonging to the Workers Party, and the T. U. E. L. He has been hounded and spied on in the places where he was employed because of his work for the party.

Comrade Chapman, candidate for the council belonged to the Machinists' Union till he was kicked out for belonging to the Worker Party, and the T. U. E. L.

Comrade Parker belongs to the Patternmakers' Union and has been a member since his apprenticeship.

Comrade Ishler, candidate for the council, belongs to the Railroad Clerks' Union.

LOCAL 280 OF MINE WORKERS' UNION PROPOSES PROGRAM OF STRUGGLE TO DISTRICT FIVE

By IRWIN, Worker Correspondent.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., July 29.—Taking the lead in proposing real measures to solve the serious problems of the coal miners of Western Pennsylvania Local No. 280 of New Eagle, Pa., which was formerly the mainstay of the reactionaries but has recently elected a left wing slate into office, has submitted to the district board of District No. 5 a program of action. While the district office never seems to bother about the plight of the membership it is thus again demonstrated that leadership in the fight to improve the conditions of the workers can be expected only from Communists and from the militants in the T. U. E. L.

The program of action proposes that the district board calls a special district convention to take up as a first point unemployment amongst the miners within the district and necessary measures of relief.

40,000 Miners Unemployed in Pa.

There are a total of 273 mines in District 5, approximately only 50 of which are working, most of these are only working part time. It is reported that 40,000 miners are unemployed in the state most of them having been unemployed for months and during the period of work were employed only part time. Many miners' families are on the verge of starvation. The policy of John L. Lewis, followed by all his lieutenants, of attempting to drive a great number of miners out of the industry will have dire consequences now when other industries are making retrenchments and daily throwing workers into the streets looking for jobs.

The militant elements contend that effective measures for relief of these many unemployed miners can and must be secured, while they also point to the record of the district and international officials who have not yet lifted a finger to obtain relief. They are proposing and have been proposing for a long time, as one effective remedy, the shorter work day with no reduction in wages.

Unemployment Relief from State.

They have demanded in the past and now reiterate their demand that industry should bear the burden of supporting its unemployed and the federal, state and local governments should take measures to establish funds for relief of the unemployed to be administered by the unions.

The second point proposed to be solved by this special convention is the demand for preparation for an active fight against the attempt of the operators to enforce the 1917 scale in the district and to break down working conditions.

Fight Open Shop.

The Pittsburgh Coal company, which has closed down all of its 52 mines formerly operated under the union agreement, not very long ago elected new officers. These officers were elcted on a pledge to smash the union. They are undoubtedly trying to make good. It is being rumored that a number of these mines are to open early in August with notices posted that the 1917 scale will go into effect. At any rate facts are available aplenty to prove the active preparations made by the operators to reduce wages.

The militant miners rightly contend that if the membership is just kept waiting for slow starvation it will not be able to make the best of the fight. They propose that measures be taken to strengthen the union in every respect and to keep the membership on the alert so that whatever form of resistance the conditions may require the membership will be actively moving with a stronger feeling of class solidarity.

Best Defense an Attack.

They contend that the best way to meet an attack is by an offensive rather than meekly giving up one position after another and that to meet the united coal operators it is necessary to make a campaign to organize the unorganized miners and to establish union control and union conditions everywhere.

The third point proposed for the special convention to take up is definite settlement of all the grievances obtaining in the mines which are now working such as the question of dead work, loading of cars, etc. Today in many instances the system of checkwaymen does not function. Miners are required to load bigger cars for less pay than the agreement calls for, with less pay for dead work. In almost every controversy on existing grievances the district officials have thrown up their hands exclaiming "We cannot do anything, we have no power." This, the militants maintain, is to turn tail, accept defeat in advance, and will strengthen the operators in their fight against the union.

Relief for Moundsville Prisoners.

The fourth point proposed to be taken up is the securing of relief measures for the families of the Moundsville prisoners and an active campaign for their immediate release.

A number of members are yet being kept in the Moundsville prison for their participation in the Cliftonville march in 1922 in behalf of the striking miners and for the organization of unorganized territory. Some little relief was afforded during the first period of their incarceration. Today that has ceased and the officialdom which could use the influence of the union to have the men released, is making no effort whatever.

The next point proposed by the militants is a complete abolition of the policy of expulsion pursued by the district board and a demand for reinstatement of expelled militant miners.

The charge frequently made by the standpat officers that Communists are "destroying the union," is being hurled back into their teeth backed up by the fact that expulsion of the best fighters certainly serves to weaken the union and if continued will lead to ultimate destruction.

The militants demand that this policy cease and those who call themselves leaders of the union and are maintaining themselves in leading positions, take the initiative to unite all the forces for the struggle against the coal barons.

STEEL TRUST MADE A FORTY MILLION DOLLAR PROFIT IN 3 MONTHS

NEW YORK, July 29—The United States Steel corporation earned $3.06 a share on the common stock in the second quarter of 1925, against $2.93 a share in the first quarter of the year.

The directors at their meeting today declared an extra dividend of 50 cents a share, in addition to the regular quarterly dividend of $1.25 a share on the common stock.

The steel corporation reported net earnings of $40,624,221 in the second quarter, against $41,381,030 in the same period last year. After all deductions for expenses, bond interest, etc., the amount available for dividends on the common stock in this period was $21,889,094 against $21,205,291 in the first quarter of 1925 and $23,775,291 in the same period in 1924.

Monthly earnings were as follows: April, $13,376,821; May, $13,803,455; June, $13,443,947.

Mrs. Robert LaFollette Declines to Run for Vacant Senatorship

MADISON, Wis., July 29.—From the seclusion of Maple Bluff farm, Mrs. Robert M. LaFollette announced today that she would not become a candidate for the senate seat made vacant by the death of her husband, Senator LaFollette of Wisconsin.

Her refusal to make the race was taken by close friends of the family here as devnite indication that her eldest son, Robert M. LaFollette, Jr., shortly will announce himself as a candidate for the unexpired term that runs until 1928.

In progressive circles young LaFollette's candidacy has been accepted as a fact for several weeks. A public announcement that he will contest for his father's seat, with the approval and support of progressive leaders of Wisconsin, is expected momentarily.

DEPARTMENT STORE WORKERS ARE MENACED BY KU KLUX KLAN, GET NO VACATION, SMALL PAY, FOR SLAVERY

By PLAV, Worker Correspondent.

Conditions in the large downtown department stores, such as Hillman's and the Boston store are growing worse for the employes. Wages are low enough, and are being cut still more, and the workers are entirely at the mercy of the employers, being fired often without cause.

Klansmen are at work in some of the stores, attempting to gain control. Foremen in some of the food departments are pursuing the policy of firing those who refuse to join the Kluxers, and favoring those who are members. In the food department of one of the big stores, where I was working, the Klan is nearly in complete control.

Some of the help have been fired irrespective of ability. Tickets were left at some of the clerks' stations in this store, urging the employes to come to Klan meetings. Jews and catholics are not favored when this can be done.

"Work" Is Only Cry.

In some of the other stores you have a horde of overseers who drive the men. "Work, work" is their only cry. In some stores you must notify the boss or his assistant when you go to the wash room and the straw boss soon begins hunting for you and yelling at you as tho you were a criminal.

If it is a busy day before lunch the boss comes around and tells you, "Only 30 minutes for lunch today, boys." Of course, you get no extra pay for working overtime.

Salary Cut, Vacation Denied.

A good example of the small wages paid can be seen from the fact that the Boston Store pays the stockroom workers $10.00 per week.

One employe in this store was fired just before vacation for changing his address without notifying the company. He was taken back after losing a week's work, but his salary was reduced $2.00 per week, and he was deprived of a vacation. Thus do the department stores rob the workers.

When the employes are waiting on trade they never know what moment they are going to get into trouble with some sharper sent out as a customer who is paid to spy on them and aggravate them to make them lose their tempers.

All in all the employes of the department stores are selling themselves completely to their masters. If fired they have no way of redress. If they ask for the reason they may be told "we do not have to give you any information in that regard."

Millions In Profits.

The pay in these places is the very lowest they can get you to work for. One store reported a six million income to the tax commissioner. So you see it is not what they can afford to pay but what they can get you to work for that determines your salary.

Ventilation is far from the best in the food departments, particularly when it is considered that in any food department ventilation and sanitary conditions should be exceptionally good.

But as these institutions are run for profit instead of for accomodation and service, before the workingclass can get any real benefit out of them the industries and government must be taken over by the workers without reservation.

TOPEKA WORKERS FIND REACTION IN UNION RANKS

Fight Capitalist Talk at Workers' Forum

By JESSE A. KEEBLE
(Worker Correspondent)

TOPEKA, Kan., July 29.—I attended the Industrial Council last meeting and it made me sick of heart, but I came away feeling thankful for a few things, that some thing had not been settled, so opportunities were still open.

No speakers had been chosen for Labor Day. The reactionary committee had asked Gov. Reed of Mo. and Beerrus Jenkins of the Kansas City Journal Potst to speak. They had declined, thank god, so there is still a chance of getting in a real speaker.

The open forum was discussed and adopted but the forum committee is not very promising. One is a labor faker not much brains of his own but he is advised by the whole exploiting bunch, so he can disrupt many moves for progress.

Another member is a lady, completely under church chloroform. Not much head of her own but easily influenced.

The third member is an old worker in the socialist party, Now a Communist, a shrewd thinker but he is old and feeble and been in the fight so long that he is somewhat discouraged.

Those who opposed forum idea were afraid it would become a socialist organization. It will be more than that if we can make it.

A movement was started to form a study club from A. F. of L. Headquarters. Our study clubs are forcing the old A. F. of L. to get busy and give them a subsitute.

STARVED SEAMEN PROTEST; JAILED AT BALTIMORE

East Indian Crew Got $5 to $7 a Month

BALTIMORE, July 29—(FP)—Food, food, food, was the cry of 20 East Indian members of the crew of the British ship Tenburger, which arrived here from Calcutta. When the half starved seamen threatened to desert the ship and seek assistance from the British consul the captain had six arrested and lodged in the police station to await a hearing before the British consul.

The seamen stated through the only one of their number who could speak English that they had been starved nearly to death on the trip from Far East, and that each man had only received four cunces of meat twice a week. Their wages were between $5 and $7 per month.

FAKERS LEWIS AND FARRINGTON IN MUTUAL GRAFT ACCUSATIONS EXPOSE EACH OTHER'S SELL-OUTS

By ALEX REID
(Secretary of the Progressive Miners' Committee)
(Article VI.)

The following extracts from letters that passed between Lewis and Farrington speak for themselves. They show what the fakers think of each other, and may enlighten the reader on the Lester strip mine deal.

"Springfield, Ill., November 2, 1922.

"Mr. John L. Lewis, President United Mine Workers of America,
"Indianapolis, Indiana.

"Dear Sir and Brother: Board Member Dobbins told me that you made a statement to the Board that things in Illinois were corrupt, and that a contract had been entered into between two substantial officers of this district and W. J. Lester to allow his strip mine to operate during the recent strike.

"Dobbins also told me that you said Harry Fishwick and myself were the two substantial officers you referred to. He further told me you said the Lester strip mine office had been robbed and the attorney general had all papers in connection with the compact.

"He further stated that you told him that Robert M. Medill, director of the department of mines and minerals in Illinois, had made the compact and that the money was to be split three ways, namely, between Medill, Harry Fishwick and myself. He further said that you told him that I was verging on a nervous breakdown because of a mental disturbance over the matter.

"Dobbins said that you stated to him the information came from Mr. Honnold, secretary of the Illinois Coal Operators' association and that he, Dobbins, could secure further information from L. F. Lumaggi, a coal operator in this state.

"I am not at all disturbed over this matter, but I do intend to expose those who are attempting to defame my good name. I am anxious to arrive at the facts so that I shall know how to proceed in clearing up this matter. I shall appreciate an early response to this communication.

"Yours truly, (Signed) F. FARRINGTON, President.

(Copy of Lewis' Reply.)

"Springfield, Illinois, November 9, 1922.

"Mr. Frank Farrington, President,
"District No. 12, U. M. W. of A.,
"Springfield, Illinois.

"Dear Sir and Brother:—This will reply to your communication of November 2. Mr. Dobbin's memory is somewhat inaccurate as to my statement to the International Board and my later conversation with him when he called on me.

"The whole story of Medill's prostitution of his public office and attemped bribery of certain coal operators in Illinois during the strike, is so infamous and corrupt that I do not care to discuss it here. I have no objection to discussing some phases of it with you personally if you desire. About a month ago I discussed the same subject with Vice President Fishwick.

"Yours very truly, JOHN L. LEWIS, President."

To this letter from Lewis, Farrington replied partly as follows:

"I was told the president of the South Western Coal Operators' association stated that the Kansas Coal Operators would pay almost any price to get rid of Alex Howat as president of the Kansas miners, and considering the outrageous manner in which you treated him and the Kansas miners, in order to get rid of Howat as president of the Kansas miners, I have as much reason to believe that you collected a handsome sum of money for your part in the Kansas trouble as you have to believe that I was to collect money for allowing the Lester strip mine to operate.

Lewis' Fake Fight.

"An influential operator with whom I happen to know you had dinner during the month of December, told me you said that you believed the miners would have to take a reduction, but in order that you may escape the responsibility, a strike would be called, the government would then intervene, and break the strike." (The miners will remember the statement that "we cannot fight our government"—made by Lewis—A. R.)

"I heard you collected $100,000 from Kentucky operators for permitting them to operate during the last strike."

What About This, John L. Lewis?

"I heard that instead of borrowing one hundred thousand dollars from the Harriman Bank of New York, that you received $750,000, from this bank and that three members of the directorate of the bank are operating nonunion mines in Pennsylvania, and the extra $650,000 which was given to you and which the public never heard about was given with the understanding that you withdraw the aid of the International union from the nonunion fields of Pennsylvania."

Another instalment on the faker tomorrow.

RAILROAD TRUST'S AMBASSADOR TO TOKIO DIES OF HEMORRHAGE

WASHINGTON, July 29.—Edgar A. Bancroft, United States ambassador to Japan, died in Tokio said an official dispatch to the state department this afternoon.

Death was caused by an intestinal hemorrhage.

Edwin Neville, secretary of the American embassy, automatically becomes charge d'affaires, and will have charge of American interests in Japan until Bancroft's successor is appoinnted.

Bancroft was heavily interested in railroad companies. Before becoming ambasador he had been solicitor for the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe railroad. He was vice president and general solicitor for the Chicago and Western Indiana railroad, and general counsel for the International Harvester company.

Bancroft was a labor hater, being the author of, "The Chicago Strike of 1894-95."

CONVENTION OF DISPATCHERS IN PEACEFUL CONFAB

Intends to Enter the Banking Business

By CARL HAESSLER
(Federated Press)

Re-electing their general officers and reaching decisions with practical unanimity, the American Train Dispatchers' Association closed its 6th general assembly in Chicago the end of July. The union was organized in Spokane in 1917. President J. G. Luhrsen and Secretary-Treasurer C. L. Darling have served since its inception. Their new term is for 4 years.

The convention, attended by 90 voting delegates and 100 others, voted for a widow and orphan death benefit fund. The benefit will begin with $300 when there are 300 members interested and will rise $1 with each additional member. Authority to enter the labor banking field was also voted. On the political field the resolution of the previous biennial convention to affiliate with the conference for progressive political action was sustained against 3 dissenting votes.

Against Speeding Up.

The membership has held its own and the financial condition has improved despite the determined and ingenious attempts of the railway companies to undermine the association by company unions. The A. T. D. A. has a considerable majority of the 5,000 working train dispatchers in the country and its net financial worth is $206,739.10. Dues are $20 a year.

Speeding up of dispatchers, in common with all other rail employes, is reflected in a resolution of protest demanding federal, state and company action to correct it in the interest of train safety. Dispatchers now have to deliver their own orders by telephone in many cases where railroad telegraphers once did the work. They have to protect the rear of trains in place of flagmen. They have to work too much territory, man too many circuits, handle too many train sheets and are held responsible for the accuracy of clearance cards. All these practices are condemned as hazardous, unnecessary and unsafe.

President E. J. Manion of the Order of Railroad Telegraphers has also made many protests against the hazards and hardships of train dispatching by telephone instead of by telegraph.

ELLA REEVE BLOOR NOW HITCH-HIKING THRU STATE OF OHIO

(Special to The Daily Worker)

EAST LIVERPOOL, O., July 29.— Ella Reeve ("Mother") Bloor arrived in this city today, fresh and in fine spirits as if the three thousand miles covered on her hitch-hiking cross-country tour for the DAILY WORKER was only a short walk.

The fighting sixty-two year old veteran was prepared to hold meetings here today and tomorrow, proceeding to Cleveland on July 30 and going to Stuebenville on August 1.

"It's great to be back on the old stamping ground" Mother Bloor said. "The past two weeks success in organization and building up of the DAILY WORKER with new subs make me feel that my Ohio hiking is going to be more successful than any. Communism is surely being welcomed by Ohio workers."

Meetings arranged thru the local Ohio units with the co-operation of the district office of the Workers (Communist) Party at Cleveland, will bring Mother Bloor to the following cities on this schedule:

I. W. W. HARVEST WORKERS JAILED IN SO. DAKOTA

Authorities Try to Suppress Union

REDFIELD, S. D., July 29.—Three I. W. W. delegates were jailed by the local police, their supplies stolen and seventeen members of the Agricultural Workers Industrial Union 110 who accompanied them were illegally deported from Redfield Friday.

The authorities claim that the I. W. W. had put off five non-union men from a freight train between Tulare and Redfield and had been impolite to those in the town who refused to join the union before going on the job.

Harvest workers alleged that the attack by the authorities is not because of any supposed assaults on scabs, but is directed against the Agricultural Workers' Union to cripple its organizing drive and interfere with its demand for decent wages and conditions in the harvest.

NEW FAKE ARMS CONFERENCE DUE AFTER 'SECURITY'

America Seeks Vantage Over Rivals

SWAMPSCOTT, Mass., July 29.—President Coolidge today let it be known that American imperialism is anxious to see the European "Security Pact", as the anti-Soviet bloc is called, to be realized.

It is understood that with the supposed "security" thus afforded the western European rivals, against each other, the "security" of all against the Soviet Republics can get more unified consideration.

By making the western European nations unite against the Soviet Union, a better field for applying the Dawes Plan and the temporary "stabilization" of the bankrupt countries permits America to extend its grip over its debtors.

With "security" supposedly assured, Coolidge aims also to force a reduction of rival imperialists' armed forces by the apparently "peace loving" maneuver of calling another "disarmament" conference. As soon as the "Security Pact" is signed, Coolidge intends to invite the various nations again to Washington to discuss further reduction of their navies and air forces.

To Stage Another Farce.

SWAMPSCOTT, Mass., July 29.—A new world conference looking to further disarmament, will be called by the government of the United States immediately following the perfection by the nations of Europe of the impending security pact, should the latter prove possible, it was indicated today at the summer White House here by an official spokesman for President Coolidge.

SECRET NAVAL MOBILIZATION PLANS VANISH

Japs Tracing Trick Don't Work

TOKIO, July 29.—Seijiro Suzuki, a clerk in the naval stores bureau of the navy department today faced court martial charges that he attempted to sell alleged secret naval papers to F. E. Jordan, an American.

Suzuki wrote Jordan asking 10,000 yen for the papers in question. Jordan immediately turned the letter over to the police and Suzuki's arrest followed. It is understood that papers dealing with naval mobilization plans are missing from the navy departmen.

A spokesman for the navy department declared today that the papers which Suzuki offered for sale are not secret and are quite valueless.

Jordan, an official of the American trading company, has lived in Japan for five years. His home is in Cleveland, Ohio. It is believed that Suzuki's action was only a trap to try to find out who had received the genuine plans now missing.

To Seek Dismissal of Suit.

WASHINGTON, July 29.—Hearings on the motion to dismiss the national capital's evolution case were postponed today until Friday by Justice Siddons in the District of Columbia supreme court.

Delay was granted by the court to permit attorneys for Loren H. Wittner, treasury clerk who brought the suit, time to prepare answers to the dismissal motion.

BRITAIN MAKES NO CHANGE IN RUBBER POLICY

U. S. Protests Will Be Disregarded

LONDON, July 29.—The foreign office in a statement today goes out of its way in explaining that ambassador Houghton, in presenting the request of the American government for a modification of present restrictions on the exportation of crude rubber from the British empire, emphasized only the effect of the present policy on the United States.

The statement voices deep regret that the British government is unable to give any assurance of a change in policy.

HELP!

Let the gunboats load the guns,
  Send marines ashore. . .
More wages? Ha! here comes the buns
  That they've been hungering for!

Marines and sailors, forward step;
  Machine squads ahead;
God damn those chinks! We-ll take the pep
  Out of their hides with lead!

Quick, for God's sake, Uncle Sam,
  Our pocket book's at stake!
Help, for Christ's sake, Uncle Sam,
  The cursed strike to break!

Then from the hands of hungry men,
  And in the name of God,
We foreigners will grind the "yen"
  And we will wield the rod;
And take the goods and sell at home
  to put men on the shelf,
And make the lousy unions groan—
  For God's sake, Sammy, help!!

WOOD CARVERS TO BUILD UP STRONG UNION

Realize Need of More Perfect Union

effect upon the wood carvers and our leaders in the past, and brought about this most unhappy state of affairs.

The Lockout of '91.

The beginning of our downward career started about 1891 when the Furniture Manufacturers declared a lockout against the Wood Carvers' Union. I was only on apprentice, at that time, but I can recall the great union spirit that manifested itself among the wood carvers at that time. I remember when the boss came in the carving room in the shop where I was working and told the wood carvers that they must work ten hours a day or get out! (They worked eight hours a day then).

The carvers thought that the boss had gone crazy thinking that he could compel them to again work ten hours per day. And I am sure that the same spirit existed thruout the ranks of the Union carvers at that time. They didn't realize that something was happening, in the furniture industry that they were being organized upon a large scale. The wood carvers had to face something which they hadn't had to face before, and that was—organized capital.

The wood carvers went into the fight with the best of fighting spirit. They stayed out nine months without a break in their ranks, and fighting every inch of the way. The leaders showed the fighting spirit so necessary in leadership, going thru battles unflinchingly.

Defeated But Not Whipped.

Despite solidarity and their devotion to the union, the strike which lasted eight months went down to defeat. I believe that fight left some scars and deep wounds on our pioneer leaders, some of whom are still with us, for they don't show any semblance of their former fighting spirit (and I hope these lines will revive some of their former fighting spirit), or else it is the different defeats they went thru since the fight mentioned above that created such a hopeless outlook in their minds. I can aprpeciate anyone going from defeat to defeat may experience a serious effect from them.

The trouble is that these leaders never took enough pains to analyse the real cause of their defeat. They only blamed it on various petty things that happened, which are only natural in any fight, and they only followed the reactionary if not corrupt leaders of the larger labor unions.

We must realize the great power that is arrayed against us, when we are contemplating any action against the organized furniture trust, and not only the organized trust but the whole state apparatus from soldiery down to police. It only depends upon to what extent the power of the state is necessary to crush the workers in their strike for the just cause of their own protection.

A Crime Not to Study and Act.

Now, we cannot allow such a state of affairs to exist in our ranks for I consider it a crime for anyone to sit idly by and make no effort to remedy the same, if he has any ability. We must from now on bestir ourselves in a campaign of building up our own forces. We must get every unit in our union in action in this work. We must see to it that every wood carver and carving machine operator be within our fold. We must awaken the spirit and solidarity of unionism in our ranks. We cannot longer tolerate the damnable indifference of their duties to their union.

We must see to it that we bring about such condition in our union whereby we can enforce our constitution and by laws, which have become only a dead letter, and that every member get the full protection he is entitled to according to our by-laws and constitution. And how can this be brought about?

Most of the carvers who are not in our union at present have been members at different times heretofore. No doubt that they think they have just reason to stay out. They may have some grievance due to shortsightedness all around. And of course there are some who think selfishly, who always let someone else do the fighting, and he is only blacklegging.

All Lose Or Gain Together.

But even those we must convince that, due to their behavior, we are bound to go down in defeat, and they must naturally go down with us and accept worse conditions. Therefore, it is their duty to come in with us and help to maintain a better standard of living.

We must always point out to them how the bosses are well organized with their manufacturers' association, chamber of commerce, etc., which only recently held its international congress. And not only that, they have the whole state apparatus at their disposal, the soldiers, courts, police, and all the capitalist press to mould the mind against the interests of the union men on strike, and various other institutions.

Therefore, it is the duty of every worker to take the lesson from the capitalists and proceed to do likewise—perfect his union. Built powerful industrial unions. Since we see how the state is used, we must set up our own political party based upon trade unions for their protection.

SYNOPSIS—The preceding instalments of the official report of the British Trade Union Delegation to Soviet Russia told how well the Soviet government treats its counter-revolutionary political prisoners, and described the Soviet form of government. The preface and introduction told of the extent of the travels of the seven members of the delegation, who, visited not only the industrial centers, but took extended trips thru the agricultural regions. The last two instalments took up the question of Soviet finances, which is being continued today. The instalments will appear in the DAILY WORKER every day.

Taxation, Soviet and Tsarist

An independent calculation, based on estimates of the total national income pre-war and at present, after all necessary allowances and adjustments shows the present Budget to be 65 per cent. of the pre-war Budget.

This impression is because the burden, though reduced by one-Russia itself, that present taxation is heavier than pre-war. This impression is because the burden, though reduced by one-third, is thrice as hard to bear. First, because of the reduced productive power, reserve resources, and taxable margins. Secondly, because these new taxes have not yet been accommodated to, and absorbed by, conditions of life. They are only just emerging from the primitive stage of confiscation and the secondary stage of payment in kind. Thirdly, because this new taxation is largely a substitution of direct for indirect taxes. This, though it really relieves the burden on the worker and peasant, makes him realize what the burden is. Abolition of the sale of alcoholic drinks over 20 per cent. strength is a measure which has immensely helped national recovery, and will in time produce a national renascence, but its fiscal effect has been to require 700 millions per annum new direct taxation to replace the national revenues from vodka—and this does not include 250 millions of local revenues. The peasant paid this pre-war 900-1,000 millions far more readily than his present 200-300 millions direct taxation.

Economies

In order to lighten the burden and to balance the Budget, Russia has severely reduced expenditure. Military expenditures, as elsewhere explained, have been greatly reduced. The Red Army expenditure can be estimated as about one-fifth Tsarist expenditure. Further, the enormous expenditure on the economic and educational experiments of War Communism have been removed in the first case by the New Economic Policy and reduced in the second case by a policy of severe economy. Public services, lighting, transport, all are now charged for as elsewhere; excepting educational and medical care, which remains free.

The Government departments and those enterprises not abolished or put on a business basis as trusts, etc., had their staffs reduced by half. Finally, the Central Budget was relieved of all expenditure that could advantageously be left to the local Budgets—such as education, public health, roads, etc.

We may, in fact, estimate that State expenditure has been reduced by the Revolution to one-quarter of what it was. And there does not seem to be any region in which it can be still further reduced. It is indeed the avowed intention to increase it considerably at the earliest possible moment in respect of education, public health, etc., and also in respect of a new national debt to be incurred for re-equipment of industry and agriculture.

To these recent economies must be added the economies of reconstruction originally effected by the Revolution, such as the abolition of the national debt, the interest on which had risen to 400 million per annum, even before the outbreak of the war. The war more than doubled this in interest on its new foreign debt of nine milliards, and in addition accumulated 16 millions of internal debt—so that the total annual interest would have been at least 1,200 millions. A smaller saving was that on the Tsarist subsidies of 55 million to the Church, and of some 16 millions to the Crown and Court.

Corruption

Another saving as important as any, has been the successful campaign carried on by Communism against corruption. It is impossible to make a comparison in figures—one can only say that the Tsarist officialdom was on the whole as corrupt as Soviet officialdom is on the whole conscientious. Under War Communism fraudulent officials were shot if Communists, or if non-Communists were severely sentenced. Though there is today a relaxation from this extreme rigour, the efficiency and probity of Soviet officials are maintained at a very high standard. Add to this that the total expenditure on administration, police, judicature, and central government generally, which was 480 millions under Tsarism, is to-day reckoned in pre-war roubles 190 million.

Direct Taxes

The taxes at present in force are:—

(1) The Income Tax falling on the townspeople and well-to-do, producing in 1923-4 about 63 millions.

(2) The Industrial Tax, which produced about 68 millions, is a tax paid on the profits of all financial, industrial, and commercial enterprises and is graduated to the character of their produce, i.e., production of or trading in luxuries is rated highest, and so on down. This tax is, of course, generally transferred to the consumer, but efforts are made to check this transfer in the case of private enterprises serving no useful public purposes. On the whole, it is estimated that two-fifths of the tax is paid by the urban middle class, and an equal amount by the town workers and clerks, the remaining one-fifth falling on the peasants.

(3) The Rural Tax paid by the peasants and producing about 158 millions per annum.

Indirect Taxes

(4) Excises on sugar, tobacco, tea, wine, beer, and such like, mostly imported products. The proceeds amount to 242 millions.

(5) Customs duties, producing 59 millions.

(6) Duties amounting in all to 66 millions, of which the most important are a rate on urban buildings and lodgings and taxes on Bourse operations—on hawkers, and on entertainments.

All these indiriect taxes may be roughly estimated as falling one-fourth on the peasantry, one-fourth on the middle class, and one-half on the workers and clerks.

This gives the general result that of the total amount of the revenue raised by taxation about one-half is paid by the peasantry, one-third by the workers and clerks, and one-sixth by the middle class. And when it is remembered that the latter class also contribute in the form of loans free or forced, it becomes evident that, in the first place, they are now able to work at a profit, and in the second place, that a large, perhaps the largest, part of that private profit is absorbed by taxation.

Central and Local Finance

Another important feature of Russian finance is also still under elaboration, and that is the respective responsibilities of the Union, of the Federations forming the Union, and of the Republics forming the Federations.

The actual financial powers at present held by the various components of the Union are so varied in precept, vary so much in practice from the precept, and are so clearly still in rapid development, that it is impossible to review them here. The principle underlying these precepts and practices is, however, clear enough. It is to consider as a financial entity any unit in the Union that seems capable of conducting its own finance—whether that unit be a Federation like the R.S.F.S.R. or a self-governing Republic like Georgia. This is subject, however, to the financial supremacy of the Union in all matters specifically assigned to the Union. And, in matters of finance, Union authority includes the conclusion of external and internal loans, the establishment of a general economic plan for all industries of general importance, the production of a general Budget which must comprise the Budgets of the constituent Republics and assign to the latter the necessary resources from Union revenues, the exploitation of mineral wealth, woods, and water, and the granting of all concessions. This obviously assigns to the Union an authority that would, if fully exercised, centralise the power of the purse entirely in Moscow. Local financial authorities cannot impose fresh taxation without central authority.

Analysis of Budget as to Central and Local Finance

The Budget of 1923-4 can be allocated between Central and Local Departments as follows: U.S.S.R. (Union), expenditure, 85.9 per cent.; revenue, 95 per cent. R.S.F.S.R. (Russia), expenditure, 9.8 per cent.; revenue, 3.2 per cent. UK.S.S.R. (Ukraine), expenditure, 2.3 per cent.; revenue, 1.1 per cent. Z.S.F.S.R. (Trans-Caucasia), expenditure, 1.8 per cent.; revenue, 0.6 per cent. B.S.S.R (White Russia), expenditure, 0.2 per cent.; revenue, 0.1 per cent. These figures show that at present the Union is financing the Federations, whose local revenues are insufficient to cover their cultural and administrative expenditures. The local budgets of these Federations show the following results:—

	Revenue	Expenditures	Deficit	Deficit Per cent of Revenue.
R. S. F. S. R.	1,252	1,458	206	16.5
U. K. S. S. R.	325	333	8	2.4
Z. S. F. S. R.	68	76	8	11.8
B. S. S. R.	22	24	2	9.1

Budget Procedure

The procedure by which the Budget is framed by the Commissariat of Finance in co-operation with the Gosplan—the expert State Planning Commission—is most interesting, but too intricate for report here. It appears to ensure a consideration of the Budget in the general interests of national economy, and a proper control of the central and local administrations and industrial interests. The function of the Gosplan in this respect appears to be one of the features of the Union administration that has an instructive value for all Governments of a federal structure, or that are undertaking social reconstruction. An Act of October 29th, 1924, not yet published, but which was put at the Delegation's disposal, requires (Article 9) that the Gosplan shall report to the Council of Commissariats and the Commissariat of Finance as to the consonance of the Union and autonomous Budgets with the general program of Governmental and social economy, and also as to the effectiveness of its execution.

General Conclusions

Financial reforms and reconstruction, in so far as concerns this latest and last stage of it—a definitive Budget without a deficit—is not yet fully achieved. But on the present lines it should be attained in the next few years. And the general conclusion that will be come to in respect of Union finance by any impartial inquiry is that, not only is it now on the right lines, but is a long way ahead of Continental countries which are at present profiting by the confidence of the foreign investor.

CHAPTER III

INDUSTRY

The outward appearance of Moscow and other principal towns is almost the same as it was before the war, except for an improvement in cleanliness. Shops are open and the middle-class is again in evidence, pursuing its usual life of private profit and pleasure. But the object of the Soviet system in the economic region is to organise production and consumption so as to exclude exploitation of the worker and peasant. And this has resulted in a very complete change of conditions under the surface.

War Communism

Under War Communism the whole administration of industry was officially organised under 59 Head Centres, which again were under the Supreme Economic Council. This so-called regime of the Head Centres (Glavi) was mainly occupied with supporting the war fronts against foreign invasions and "white" incursions and with supplying the immediate needs of the population from old stocks. Most of the skilled workers were in the ranks, and until peace no effort could be made to revive industry. Production fell, until in 1920 coal was only 27 per cent. of pre-war, salt 30 per cent., ore 2¼ per cent., engines and ploughs about 14 per cent., while the total production fell from six and three-quarter milliards to one milliard. But this War Communist system of "Glavi," that had brought the Revolution through a series of wars, any one of which would have overthrown a less strong and stable war administration, soon showed that it was unsuitable to peace conditions. Indeed, it became clear that Russian economics were in a vicious circle. Industry could not produce because the agricultural population could not buy; which, again, was because they could not get industrial products, ploughs, engines, etc. Moreover, the attempt to supply the industrial population by forcibly requisitioning food supplies from the peasantry had led to what was practically a new civil war between the workers and peasants, and the peasants had consequently curtailed production until it was sufficient only to meet their own needs.

The failure of War Communism when at its height in 1920 was due to its artificiality. While it professed to be revolutionising the political system into a more real relationship with economics, it was really trying to revolutionise the principles of economics so as to reconcile them with its own political ethics. Russian Communism was at war with capitalism, and in war the laws of economics, like other laws, can be ignored for a time. It is the last and greatest achievement of the Russian Revolution to have recognised, as it did in 1921, that this war was being prolonged at a progressive risk to the real results of the Revolution.

Various alarming symptoms, such as the growing armed resistance of the peasants to requisitions, the Cronstadt revolt, and the growing demoralisation of the workers, made it necessary to abandon the Communist experiment and re-establish a business relation on which the existence of the Soviet system depends, required, in the first place, a substitution of taxation of the peasantry for requisitions, and, in the second place, a restoration of freedom of trade in foodstuffs and the products of small industry.

Russia made peace with the enemy within the gate in time. The subsequent three years under this Socialist compromise, known as the New Economic Policy, show very different results in material prosperity and in moral progress than did the three preceding years of uncompromising War Communism.

New Economic Policy and Nationalisation

The first measure of the New Economic Policy did practically, though not in principle, denationalise the conduct though not the control of industry.

The nationalisation of industry had been, in fact, much less systematic and sweeping than is generally supposed. "Workers' control," established November 14th, 1917, was followed by confiscation of certain enterprises, but it was not until the decree of June 28th, 1918, that the large industries were generally nationalised. Smaller industries were still only dealt with specifically and sporadically until the height of War Communism, when by a decree of November 29th, 1920, all enterprises employing more than five workers with machinery or ten without, were nationalised, and private property in small industry was legally abolished. But this last development was never generally realized, and was almost immediately reversed by the New Economic Policy. The smallest enterprises up to 20 workers were first denationalised by a decree of December 10th, 1921, which also left under private control any larger enterprises not already nationalised. Further, under the decree of March 22nd, 1923, the exploitation of enterprises of any size might be denationalised for a period by concession.

The small industries and home handicrafts (Kustarni) were as a whole never really nationalised at all, though the decree of September 7th, 1920, attempted to do so. Their freedom of trade was restored them by a decision of May 17th, 1921, and was formally regulated by a decree of July 7th, 1921. Therein small industries are defined as those which employ less than 20, and no one may engage in more than one enterprise.

COPS BEHAVE AT SECOND MEETING TO AID CHINESE

Workers Party Ready to Make Fight

NEW YORK, July 29—(FP)—The Workers Party and the Young Workers League held a successful Hands Off China meeting on Union Square, scene of a police invasion the previous week that broke up a similar meeting. Officials of the party had served notice that they would continue to meet and would test the law on this issue and the American Civil Liberties Union had announced that its legal staff was available for the party in such a test.

Speakers included Charles Krumbein, district organizer for the party; Professor Jegerson H. Lamb of the southern Chinese University at Shanghai; Rebecca Grecht and I. Amter.

A resolution unanimously adopted declared that "This meeting of workers declares its solidarity with the struggling Chinese people and calls upon the workers of the United States and especially the organized workers, to line up with the Chinese people against the bankers of Wall Street."

The resolution ends with a Hands Off China addressed to the United States government.

SOLDIER PRISONERS THRUST INTO BLACK HOLES, DEPRIVED OF ALL COMFORTS, WORKED LIKE SLAVES

By M. J. SUSTER

(Special to The Daily Worker)

HONOLULU, Hawaii (By Mail).—On the 27th day of October, 1924, I was confined in the guard house at Fort de Russey, Honolulu, T. H. under the 93rd Article of War. When I arrived there I was stripped of my clothing and placed in a cell which held eight men. About ten minutes later, I was given two suits of fatigue clothing, two suits of underwear and one blanket.

My toilet articles were kept in the guard office until it was time for me to wash. After being confined for two days I was given my necessary toilet articles to keep in the cell with me.

Confined in Black Holes.

No reading of any sort is allowed at any time in that guard house and smoking is also prohibited. If a man wants to smoke or read he has to steal and sneak it into the cell with him, thereby learning to be a sneak thief. After being there for nineteen days I was transferred to the guard house at Fort Armstrong, Honolulu, T. H. which was a shell store room in a gun emplacement parapet. It was eight feet wide and twenty feet in length.

Eleven men slept in this small cell. It could only be compared with the black hole of Calcutta. Two of the eleven men had to crawl over other beds to enable them to get out of the cell. The ventilation was very poor, and the air was foul.

When I arrived there, I was again stripped and the same regulations as at Fort de Russey were enforced at Fort Armstrong, only our clothes and toilet articles were put in a room outside in the guardroom and kept locked except for fifteen minutes in the morning, noon and night.

Ask Recreation—Given Prayer Book.

At these times the prisoners were allowed to wash. When I was first confined there, no reading material of any sort was allowed. Only one bath a week was permitted to be taken by the prisoners.

One cigaret after each meal was permitted the prisoners, under supervision of the officer of the day, or non-commissioned officer of the guard. After being confined for two weeks, the prisoners made a protest to the chaplain requesting some sort of recreation, which he took up with the commanding officer (Lieutenant Colonel Harry T. Matthews) and was allowed to give each of the prisoners and army prayer book.

Worked Like Slaves.

The prisoners again protested against the treatment, upon which an order was issued, that if the prisoners worked hard and had good behavior reports for the week, they would be allowed smoking and reading on Sundays and holidays. Also that two baths a week would be allowed.

On one occasion while using a mattock to clear a baseball diamond of sod, a prisoner put his hand on his back and straightened up as if in pain. Lieutenant Colonel Harry T. Matthews seeing the action, told the prisoner he was the cause of all of them losing their privileges on the next Sunday.

UNITED STATES bankers have grabbed off a big chunk of the Stinnes coal properties. They divided the spoils with British bankers. The international bankers are floating around like buzzards ready to gobble up everything that can be turned into profits. The money they used to buy the Stinnes property belongs to the American and British workers, but the profits that will be sweated out of the German coal miners will be lavished on the parasite daughters of the rich while the producers are lucky to get a bare existence.

THE Riffians are now on the offensive, so the capitalist papers consign the news to the more secluded quarters of the newspapers. When the French were advancing the story got the headlines, and the press dwelt with glee on the slaughter of women and children by bombs dropped from the air. Even should the French imperialists succeed in winning a temporary victory, they cannot quell the aroused spirit of the natives who want to free their land from foreign rule.

BASTIANI NINI, fascist leader for foreign organizations is due for a visit to the United States. This is interesting. Nini is coming on an invitation from fascist societies in America, and will take with him greetings from Benito Mussolini himself. What an uproar would be created in the United States if Gregory Zinoviev signified his intention of paying a visit to this country on the request of the Workers (Communist) Party? Indeed, Coolidge would call out the army and the navy would be relieved from booze duty long enough to guard the coasts against the entrance of the secretary of the Communist International.

THE bourgeoisie have no objection to the coming of the fascist envoy, tho the Italian workers in America have. The former know that fascism stands for capitalism in all its horrible nakedness. The workers, on the contrary have reason to hate it. In Italy the Fascisti smashed the trade unions and the political organizations of the workers. That is the very reason why the capitalists favor it, when the necessity for it arises.

THE Soviet government has established health resorts for peasants straight from the soil. This year, the government has assigned two million roubles for assisting the peasants to get cured at health resorts. The change in the living conditions of the peasant who emerges from his crowded hut and enters the comfortably installed sanatorium is said to be impressive.

NORWAY FISHER FOLK BEING WON TO REVOLUTION

Face Difficult Problem of Organization

By DR. KARL F. SANDBERG.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

OSLO, Norway (By Mail).—Of the different industries of Norway the fisheries occupy a very prominent position. Fishing to supply the daily demand for food amounts to something almost beyond compute, but when we speak of the fisheries we generally do not even consider this but think of the large influx of fish occurring regular times of the year at fairly regular places.

They are the herring fisheries of the west coast and the cod fisheries of Lofoten and Finmarken. All three take place in winter or early spring, the weather is cold, storms frequent.

Fishermen from points all along the coast, even hundreds of miles away, flock to them, choking the harbors with their vessels and emptying the stores of the town. From these harbors they set out many miles into the open sea and set their nets and lines, bringing their catch back to the harbor.

Some of them apply themselves to fishing all the year round, some work between the fishing seasons in different industries, but most of them have small farms on their home shore and cultivate these in the summer. As a class the fishermen are probably the most exploited of all labor. Of this they are well aware, and being, thru the nature of their work, men of quick decision and fearless action, they form an element of the very highest importance to the social revolution.

Organization is Difficult Problem.

On account of the seasonable and localized character of their work organization of the fishermen forms a difficult problem. The Norwegian Federation of Labor in 1915 succeeded in organizing the Northern Norway Fishermen's Union, the declared special object of which was "to unite the fishermen in a trade organization for the purpose of improving the condition of the class thru co-operative buying and united action in selling, with the aim in view of being able to jointly take over the production and distribution." The union secured a large number of members and formed locals all over northern Norway, but it was unable to get further than handling regular groceries and some fishing tools. In as much, however, as this could be done better thru the co-operative society and the union was unable to take hold of the preparation and distribution of the products, the locals gradually died and the union has shown no sign of life during the last three or four years.

As far as known one local only, the one in Vardo, got started with preparation of the fish; this still exists and now does a considerable volume of business. In the last couple of years two new attempts have however been made which seem to promise well, Vesteraalen Fishermen's Sales League organized and now managed by Haakon Ramber, and West Finmark Small Farmers' and Fishermen's Union.

The fundamental idea of these is the preparation and distribution (mainly the drying and exportation) of their fish, and they are preparing to fit out vessels to follow them to the fisheries and take over their catch.

Fishermen Mostly Unorganized.

But outside of these the great fisher population of northern Norway is unorganized and therefore a defenseless prey both on the economical and political field. Politics does not appeal to them, any efforts at organization must therefore be based on their economical interests and necessarily take the form of co-operative association.

There is hardly any danger of this assuming the petit bourgeoisie and conservative character of the consumers co-operatives. The moment the fishermen thru their organization take hold of the preparation, distribution and export of fish they get in direct opposition not only to the local capitalists, but also the capitalist state. The apparently most non-political demands on their part automatically become measures of the great political bearing, and organizational attempts to better their conditions necessarily lead to the most uncompromising class war.

BUILDERS AT WORK

THE SIMPLEST WAY TO GET SUBS

It Worked in Boston

Sometimes the easiest way to get a sub to the DAILY WORKER is overlooked. And without question it is often overlooked in your branch.

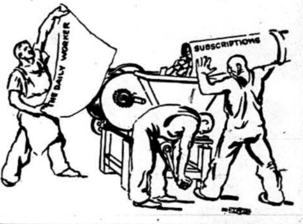
For instance—do you at every branch meeting ask for subscriptions to the DAILY WORKER.

Comrade Jim Lacey of Boston brings this little fact to our attention. He wonders why nothing is said about subs received right at the meetings. He writes:

> "That's the way these three subs were secured which I enclose. Charge them off against Louis Gilbert of the Young Workers League of Roxbury—and they were obtained at the last meeting of the Boston English branch of the W. P."

So the simple matter is not the least effective by a long shot. Get up on your feet at your meeting, clear your throat and throw your chest out and speak up for the DAILY WORKER. Make every member of the Workers (Communist) Party a subscriber to the DAILY WORKER to build a better Workers (Communist) Party—and surely every visitor to your branch meetings will be glad to subscribe.

Simple? Surely! But also another good way to "Build the DAILY WORKER."



GRAIN 'CO-OP' DIES; TRIED TO GOUGE FARMERS

Big Wheat Combine Had Operated Illegally

The four big grain companies, the Armour Grain company, Rosenbaum Brothers, The Rosenbaum Grain corporation, and The Davis-Neland-Merill Co., of Kansas City, will shoulder the possible loss of the $4,000,000 advance to finance the first year's operation of the grain marketing Co. This $26,000,000 fake co-operative enterprise officially died with the expiration of the options to buy the physical properties of the four companies for $16,000,000.

Dismissal of the action brot before the Illinois commerce commission because the big co-operating concern was operating elevators in Illinois without the necessary certificate of convenience from the commission was one of the final acts of dissolution.

TWO BILLIONS IN PROFITS IN SIX MONTHS OF 1925

Big Gain Over Years of 1923 and 1924

By LELAND OLDS.

(Federated Press Industrial Editor)

Dividend and interest payments to the owning class in the first half of 1925 amounted to $2,044,455,000. This exceeds by $112,594,000 the amount distributed in the first six months of 1924 and by $202,679,000 the first half of 1923.

The 1925 payments for six months to the owners of stocks and bonds exceed those of any full year prior to 1916 when war profits carried the annual total over the two billion mark for the first time in history. Now the half year's payments exceed the two billion dollar mark for the first time in history.

In 1913 the investing class received $1,777,336,000, in 1914 $1,787,376,000 and in 1915 $1,865,112,000 in dividends and interest for the entire year.

Employment Slumps; Profit Gains.

Dividends alone totaled $548,505,000 for the first half of 1925 compared with $523,341,000 in the same period of 1924 and $500,205,000 of 1923. In spite of the slump in employment following 1923, the rich man's cash returns from industry show a steady upward tendency. By months the dividends and interest payments of 1923 were:

1925	Dividends	Dividends & Interest
Jan.	$158,580,000	$455,080,000
Feb.	79,300,000	201,000,000
March	87,950,000	333,350,000
April	94,450,000	404,700,000
May	59,725,000	328,225,000
June	68,600,000	322,100,000

The relative importance of interest payments to the total income of the investing class shows an extraordinary increase over prewar years. In 1913, 1914 and 1915 over 40 per cent of investment income came from stocks, the percentages being 47 per cent, 46 per cent and 42½ per cent. But in 1923, 1924 and 1925 dividends have constituted only a little over one-quarter of such income with approximately 73 per cent coming as gond interest.

Mortgage on Industry.

As the income of investors has increased by more than 120 per cent, the bulk of that increase represents a huge mortgage on the country's economic life, perhaps the most important result of the war from a domestic standpoint.

Here is complete absentee ownership—owners with no connection with management. It produces the exorbitant fixed charges in industry which inflate costs to the point where there must be either low wages or unemployment. The burden will continue to grow for it can be reduced only thru insolvency and insolvency means a breakdown of the system.

Dirigible in Fleet Maneuvers.

LAKEHURST, N. J., July 29.—After eight hours' flight from Norfolk, Va., thru squalls, thunderstorms and a heavy fog, the naval dirigible Shenandoah returned to her hangar here early today. The Shenandoah, operating under sealed orders, participated in fleet maneuvers off Norfolk.

Political Turnover in the Argentine.

BUENOS AIRES, July 29.—President De Alvear's cabinet remained in office today after refusal of their resignation offered in sympathy with the minister of interior. The minister was removed for "political reasons."

An International Strike

When the miners of Great Britain leave the pits on the evening of July 31st to open, what promises to be the greatest industrial conflict in the history of that country, the miners of Germany, Belgium and France may also down tools. This is the prospect that fills the ruling classes of Britain and the continent with a fear, as great as that which overwhelmed them when the gray hosts of the ex-kaiser of Germany goose-stepped over the Belgian border in 1914.

The strike of the British miners bids fair to have more bearing on the Dawes plan than the much discussed security pact, which was framed by the British and American governments to isolate Soviet Russia. The terrific unemployment among the British miners is partly due to the workings of that plan. Of course unemployment in general in England is due to Britain's loss of her dominant position in the world market to her rivals. But the Dawes plan contributed materially to the slackness in the coal industry. The Ruhr miners have been producing coal out of which Germany must pay part of her reparation's fine, and the Dawes plan forced down the living standard of the German workers so low that they can produce coal cheaper than can the workers in victorious France and Britain. And the capitalists in victorious France and Britain purchase the cheapest coal no matter where it is mined.

Not only is there a greater prospect of a united front than ever before between the miners of Europe but transport workers on sea and land promise not to move coal either from the pits or from the sidings. The world does move.

Four years ago the British miners had their Black Friday. That Black Friday was due to the treachery of Frank Hodges, J. H. Thomas and others of their ilk. But those traitors are now sitting in the bleachers. A. J. Cook, the fighting secretary of the miners, says there will be no Black Friday this time. The new leadership of the British labor movement has been perfecting its weapons for this struggle since Black Friday-four years ago. This gigantic conflict find them now in a better position than ever before, with their foes fighting a losing battle. The threatened international coal strike is a significant development.

Green as Patron Saint of Scabbery

That William Green has condoned the strikebreaking policy of the United Garment Workers in the strike of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers against the International Tailoring Company, is very obvious. In his letter to the Chicago Federation of Labor, Green branded the Amalgamated as a dual union and warned the local central body to keep its hands off the whole situation. No interference with scabbery, so long as it sails under the banner of the American Federation of Labor is the traditional policy of the A. F. of L. bureaucracy formulated by Gompers and faithfully followed by Green.

That the open-shop International Tailoring Company is making the most of Green's hostility to the Amalgamated Clothing Workers is shown by the following extract from a letter written by the clothing company to one of its customers, which fell into the hands of the DAILY WORKER:

"The Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America are not and never have been recognized by the American Federation of Labor. As a matter of fact, perhaps you read it in the papers, William Green refused to sit on the same stand with Sidney Hillman. Mr. Green is president of the American Federation of Labor and Mr. Hillman is president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers."

Thus William Green's action in refusing to speak with Hillman is used by this scab clothing concern to put a trade union figleaf over its operations. The DAILY WORKER has no reason to stick up for Hillman as against Green. Both are following the same policy in regard to the left wing in the unions. But there is something more than the personality of leaders involved here. There is the question of trade union solidarity, of trade union decency, of everything that goes to make up militant trade unionism; what the workers have sacrificed to build up for generations.

Green has given his sanction to the scabbery of the United Garment Workers. The protest of the Chicago Federation of Labor is not enuf. It means nothing unless it is followed up by action. Only the radicals in the unions have a program to fight trade union scabbery. William Green is not appearing in a new role. He is simply following out the policy made sacred by the deceased reactionary Gompers. In this respect he is a worthy disciple.

The members of the unions affiliated with the Chicago Federation of Labor cannot in justice to themselves—not to speak of the workers who have been thrown out of their jobs—let the matter rest with a protest from Fitzpatrick and Nockels. Definite and organized action should be taken to make it clear to the scabby officials of the United Garment Workers' Union, that the sooner they take their scab recruiting office out of town the better.

French airplanes bombed a Moorish village while men, women and children were marketing. Mangled bodies of women and children were scattered over the scene after the bloody work was finished. But there was no frenzied demand for war on France in our chirstian press. No, because our bankers are financing the French bombers.

One evolution case is enough for the capitalists. They are putting the damper on the test case made by the Washington treasury clerk who took the bull by the horns. They have learned that there are more angles than one to evolution. And the addition of one letter turns evolution in revolution.

Resolution on Bolshevization of the Party

The following resolution was unanimously adopted by the Parity Commission for submission to the National Convention of the Workers (Communist) Party:

1. The process of Bolshevizing the Party implies a reconstruction of the Party organization in such a way as to render it adaptable to the requirements of Communist activity. Without a truly centralized organization, based on the workshops, the Party cannot be mobilized for action, and the Party decisions cannot be carried out with unanimity and effectiveness. Without a Bolshevik form of organization there can be no Bolshevik Party.

2. The present structure of the Party is incompatible with Communist organizational principles and, consequently, with the proper execution of Communist policies. The English-speaking territorial branch is a relic carried over from the Socialist Party which concerned itself chiefly with election campaigns. The foreign language branch tends greatly to isolate the activity of the Party members belonging to them into the channel of propaganda only among the workers of their own nationality and to deflect them away from active participation in the general class struggle which embraces the workers of all nationalities. Neither the English-speaking territorial branch, nor the foreign language branch offers the medium for mobilizing the workers for the struggle in the places of employment. Despite the wishes of the Federation members to the contrary, the Language Federation form of organization, by its very nature, militates against the necessary centralization of the Party. Moreover, the Federation form of organization is a most fertile soil for factionalism and for the sharp division of the Party members according to nationality. The historic reasons for the present form of Party organization have been, in a large measure, outlived and the conditions now exist for a progressive step forward. The Party must take this step resolutely and energetically in spite of the enormous difficulties.

3. The need of adapting the structure of the Party to its task demands a complete and speedy reorganization. The Party must supply the cohesive force which will unite the many individuals and groups of proletarians into a class. The Party must at the same time unify the activities of this class into a purposeful and decisive struggle against capitalism and finally must lead the working class in this struggle.

4. For this purpose the structure of the Party must penetrate the whole structure of the working class. The Party must have units wherever units of the working class exist.

5. The basic unit of the working class is the productive unit, organized by capitalism itself: the shop or industrial establishment. The great majority of the industrial workers are organized in such basic units of the economic structure of society. Into these basic units of the working class the shop or industrial establishment, the Party must build its basic unit, the shop nucleus.

6. The organizational problem before the Party is not the modification of the existing forms, but the complete reorganization of the Party from top to bottom on the basis of shop nuclei, international branches (street nuclei) and a centralized apparatus.

7 The Central Executive Committee accepts in its entirety the special letter to the Party from the Organization Department of the Communist International and declares its opinion that this letter, which was drawn up with the cooperation of the American delegation, lays down the correct line in regard to the reorganization of the Party structure.

8. The experience of our Party, as well as the experience of other parties of the Communist International, has amply demonstrated that the sporadic, experimental method of organizing shop nuclei is not the most successful. The percentage of Party members organized into shop nuclei, after many months of effort in this manner, is not sufficient for us to be able to say that more than the barest beginning has been made. It is obvious that the idea of shop nuclei has not penetrated deeply enough into the consciousness of the Party members and they have not been won over to a conscious and positive acceptance of the shop nuclei and the deep impulse to form them. Passive allegiance to the idea of shop nuclei does not produce the necessary results. The Party members must be inspired with a deep conviction on this question which will lead to decisive action.

9. The state of hesitation and experimentation on the question of shop nuclei, international branches, and a centralized apparatus should be regarded as passed. The Party must now aim at complete reorganization within a given time, not to exceed six months after the Party convention.

10. The Central Executive Committee proposes the following steps toward this end:

(a) The reorganization of the Party shall be made one of the leading subjects in the Party discussion, and in the Party Convention.

(b) Conventions of the larger federations shall be held soon after the Party convention, at which the question of reorganization shall be placed as the first item on the agenda.

(c) A systematic ideological campaign shall be conducted in the Party and the Federations prior to the Federation conventions and for two months after them, in order to thoroly prepare the members for the reorganization and imbue them with the conviction that it is a necessary measure for the Bolshevization of the Party. Within two months after the Federation conventions, the organizational measures shall commence thruout the Party and must be completed within three or four months.

11 Reorganization shall be commenced from below, approximately as follows:

(a) The larger cities shall be divided into sections and sub-sections and these section and sub-section organizations constructed. Membership meetings shall be called in the sections and sub-sections at which executive committees for the sections are elected. Complete registration of all the Party members according to residence and place of employment, shall be taken.

(b) Wherever three or more members, regardless of their nationality or present federation membership, are found to be working in the same shop, they shall be organized into a shop nucleus. The nucleus collects the Party dues and takes over all the functions of a Party unit.

(c) Members living on a given street or in a given neighborhood, who are not employed in any shop or who work in shops where there are no other Party members, shall be attached to other nuclei within the section or shall be organized into International branches. All Party members in the given neighborhood, regardless of nationality or present affiliation of language branches, who are not members of shop nuclei, are to be organized into these branches, pay dues there and carry out all Party functions.

(d) After this reorganization takes place, the present existing English and foreign language branches cease to function as units of the Party. The latter, however, should not be disrupted or dissolved. They shall be reconstructed as Workers Clubs admitting to membership not only party members but also non-party workers of same nationality who accept the platform of the class struggle.

(e) Membership in these clubs will not constitute membership in the Party. Only those belonging to shop nuclei or International Branches will have Party rights.

(f) Party members in these Workers Clubs shall form themselves into fractions in the same manner as in all other non-Party organizations for the purpose of exerting the maximum influence over the non-Party workers and drawing them closer to the Party.

(g) These fractions in the Foreign Language Workers Clubs are to be united locally, by districts, and on a national scale, for the purpose of coordinating and centralizing the Party work in them.

(h) Local and District conferences of the representatives of the fractions in these clubs shall elect the local and and district fraction bureaus to lead the work under the direction of the respective Party Committees.

(i) National Conferences of the representatives of the fractions elect the National Fraction Bureau to lead the work on a national scale under the direction of the Central Executive Committee.

(j) When the reorganization is completed these local, district and national Fraction Bureaus take the place of the present corresponding Federation committees and bureaus, but do not collect Party dues or have the functions of Party committees, since they will be under the direction and control of the respective Party committees in the same manner as fractions.

(k) In order to centralize and consolidate the Party leadership of the work among the foreign-speaking workers who are organized in these clubs, and to insure close contact of the Party with the comrades carrying out this work, the local, district and National Fraction Bureaus are incorporated into the agitprop departments of the respective party committees, either as a whole or by representatives.

(l) The funds necessary for the work of the fraction bureaus are to be paid by the party out of funds apportioned from the party dues for that purpose.

12. In order to weld the members of the Federations more closely to the general life of the Party and to insure close contact of the Central Executive Committee with the special work of the Party among the foreign-speaking workers, the Central Executive Committee recommends that the convention decide to enlarge the Central Executive Committee so as to include a number of capable leading comrades of the larger Federations.

13. "Every Communist Party," says Com. Zinoviev, "is confronted by two fundamental dangers; on the one hand there is the danger of becoming a small sect of 'pure' Communists with 'good' principles but unable to establish contact with the real labor movements of the period. On the other hand there is the danger of becoming an emorphous semi social democratic party, which is unable to combine the fight for winning over the broad masses of the workers with remaining loyal to the principles of Communism to be able to avoid the Scylla of narrow sectarianism and the Charybdis of emorphousness and vagueness means to facilitate the Bolshevization of the Party."

14. The problem of Bolshevization of our Workers Party which latter "is only just passing thru its predominantely propagandist period and is taking only the first steps along the path of rallying the broad masses around the banner of Communism" is the problem of building a Communist Party in America.

15. The Communist Workers Party has no revolutionary traditions. Its inheritance from its predecessors, the socialist party and socialist labor party is almost completely a non-Bolshevist and un-Communist one. There has never existed a real connection between any of these parties with the life and activities of the American working class. No American proletarian party outside of the Communist Party, has attempted to theorize the American class struggle. They all have confined themselves to theorize about it. The question of the relation of the proletariat to the farmers did not even find theoritical treatment with those parties. Up to the time of the foundation of the Communist Party in America, the socialist movement was always reformist and tried to replace the struggle for power by a movement for immediate demands instead of directing the movements for immediate demands toward the development of a struggle for power. Thus the political and organizational inheritance of our party from its predecessors is in the main a liability that must be met by increased efforts of Bolshevization.

16. Under these conditions the task of Bolshevization presents itself concretely to our party as the task of completely overcoming the organizational and ideolgoical remnants of our social-democratic inheritance, of eradicating Loreism of making out of the Party a functioning organism of revolutionary proletarian leadership.

17 The Bolshevization of our party must accomplish four general purposes:

(a) It must establish among its members a fundamental theoretical understanding of the forces of social development and a knowledge of the conditions and the mechanics of realizing the dictatorship of the proletariat.

(b) It must develop with the party and its membership an ability for maneouvering and campaigning in accord with the momentary needs and the possibilities of the class struggle.

A Communist Party must be able to maneuver and to adapt its tactics at all times to changing conditions. Changing conditions in the proletarian struggle for emancipation must not bring confusion into the ranks of the party but must be met by a Leninist appraisal of the new facts and if necessary by a speady change of the methods of struggle.

In order to increase the ability of our Party to maneuver it is necessary to establish a closer ideological relation between the Party and its leading committees. The Party must not only be required to campaign and maneuver but it must also be made acquainted with the character and the purposes of all maneuvers.

(c) It must adapt the structure of the Party to its task of penetrating and dominating all manifestations of life of the working class and of leading the workers in their struggle for emancipation.

(d) It must establish a harmonizing unity of theory, action and structure of the party which will secure a full use of all available energies of the Party and also insure the Party against fundamental mistakes.

National and local Party leaders must regularly lecture in the Party school and before the membership in general about current events and the Party's judgment of them. The political committee of the Party must furnish the Party press and all educational institutions at elast twice a month with an official analysis of political events and the official Party reaction to them.

18. "Without a correct theory there can be no correct practice—theory is concentrated practice," declared our greatest leader, Lenin. The slighting of the value of theory too often noticed in our Party leads necessarily to a complete lack of unified concept for Party activities. Without a unified concept the Party activities becomes sporadic, disconnected, planless and purposeless. Waste of energy and fruitless efforts are the result. The Party must therefore apply itself to the task of systematic theoretical education of its members.

The theoretical weakness of our Party and the traditional indifference to theory which has characterized the American movement render the problem of Party education especially serious and difficult. This problem is two-sided. It involves the necessity of multiplying the educational work many times over and of simultaneously convincing the party of its absolute importance and necessity. We must resolutely strive to accomplish these tasks in the coming year. The whole Party must be stimulated to interest in educational work, the entire membership must be equipped with the indispensible minimum of knowledge of Marxian-Leninist fundamentals and cares of theoretically trained comrades, capable of leading the educational work must be developed.

In all educational work conducted by the Party it is necessary to firmly establish the correct Communist conception of this activity. Static and onesided conceptions of education, the separation of theory from practice and theories of non-partisan "Workers Education" must be rejected. The teaching personnel, the curriculae and the method of instruction in all Party schools and classes must conform to the Leninist conception of education as an instrument for the Bolshevization of the Party.

Our educational work will not be successful if it is conducted in a sporadic manner. Educational work must be established as a permanent part of party routine, developed according to a worked-out plan and the necessary apparatus constructed in the Party.

While the Party is able to record considerable progress in this field during the past year, the work so far accomplished should be regarded as a mere beginning. Educational work must be established in all sections of the Party as an indispensable department of Party activity to be carried on in a systematic manner thruout all periods of the year. In order to insure the permanence and continuity and Communist character of the Party educational work thruout the Party, all phases of the work must fall under the central direction of the Central Executive Committee and must be developed from year to year according to a national coordinated scheme.

The Agitprop Department of the Central Executive Committee shall establish an educational section which shall have full direction and supervision of the Party educational work in all its aspects. The direct administrative responsibility of the national Party educational work shall be in the hands of the national educational director, who shall be a member of the Agitprop Department of the Central Executive Committee and shall be responsible for the carrying out of its decisions. The Agitprop Department and the national educational director shall be directly responsible to the Central Executive Committee for the whole educational program of the Party.

19. Every district and city central committee must establish an Agitprop department with an educational sectional director. Each district and local educational director shall develop the work according to the general plan laid down by the Agitprop department of the central executive committee.

(a) Continue the circuit system of educational lectures and classes in the Party districts.

(b) Arrange for systematic routing of Party lecturers on subjects dealing with the fundamentals of Communist principles.

(c) Publish periodically books and pamphlets of a theoretical nature and continue such publication according to a worked-out plan.
